NOW whan the seuenth moneth drue nye, ⁊ and ⁊ children of Israel were in their cities, all the people gathered them selues together as one man vpon the strete before the Watergate, and sayde vnto Esdras the scribe, that he shulde fetch the boke of the lawe of Moses, which the LORDE commaunded Israel. *And Esdras the prest brought ⁊ lawe before the congregaciō both of men and women, and of all that coulde vnderstonde it, vpon the first daye of the seuenth moneth, and red therin in the strete that is before the Watergate, from ⁊ light mornynge vntyll the noone daye before nien

and wemen and such as coude vnderstonde it: and the eares of all the people were inclined vnto the boke of the lawe. And Eszdras the scribe stode vpon an hyc pulpit of wode, which they had made for the preachinge, & beside him stode Mathithia, Seina, Anania Vria, Ezechias, and Maeseia on his righte hand: And on his lefte honde stode Pedaia, Misael, Malchia, Hasum, Haszbadana, Zachary and Mesullam.

And Eszdras opened þe boke before all þe people, for he stode aboute all þe people. And whan he opened it, all the people stode vp. And Eszdras prayed the LORDE the greate God. And all the people answered Amen, Amen, with their handes vp, and bowed the selues, and worshipped þe LORDE with their faces to the grounde. And Iesua, Bani, Serebia, Iamiu, Acub, Sabthai, Hodaia, Maeseia, Celita, Asaria, Iosabad, Hanam, Plaia, and the Leuites, caused þe people to geue hede vnto the lawe, & the people stode in their place. And they red in the boke of the lawe of God distinctly and planely, so that men vnderstode the thinge that was red. And Nehemias (which is Hathirsatha) and Eszdras the prest and scribe, and the Leuites þe caused the people to take hede, sayde vnto all the people: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE youre God: be not ye sory therfore, & wepe not. For all þe people wepte, whā they herde the wordes of the lawe.

Therefore sayde he vnto them: Go youre waye, and eate the fat, and drynke the swete, and sende parte vnto them also that haue not prepared themselves: for this daye is holy vnto oure LORDE, be not ye sory therfore: for the ioye of the LORDE is youre strength. And the Leuites styllled all the people, and sayde: Holde youre peace, for the daye is holy, vexe not ye youre selues. And all the people wente their waye to eate and drinke, and to sende parte vnto other, and to make greate myrth, for they had vnderstode the wordes that were declared vnto them.

And on the nexte daye were gathered together the chefe fathers amonge all the people, and the prestes and Leuites, vnto Eszdras the scribe, that he shulde teach them þe wordes of the lawe. And they founde written in the lawe, *how that the LORDE had commaunded by Moses, that the childrē of Israel shulde dwell in bothes in the feast of the seuenth moneth. And so they caused it be declared and proclaimed in all their cities, & at Ierusalem, sayenge: Go vp vnto þe mouēt and fetch Olyue braunches, Pynebraunches, Myrtbraunches, Palmebraunches, & braunches of thicketrees, to make bothes as it is wrytten.

And þe people wente vp, and fetched the, and made them bothes, euery one vpon the rofe of his house, and in their courtes, and in the courtes of the house of God, and in the strete by the Watergate, and in the strete by Ephraims porte. And all the congregacion of them that were come agayne out of the captyuite, made bothes, and dwelt therein: for sence the tyme of Iosua the sonne of Nū vnto this daye, had not the children of Israel done so, and there was very greate gladnesse. And euery daye from the first daie vnto the last, red he in the boke of the lawe of God. And seuen dayes helde they the feast, & on the eight daye the gatherynge together, acordynge vnto the maner.

The ij. Chapter.

IN the foure and twentieth daye of this moneth came the children of Israel together with fasting and sackclothes, and earth vpon them, and separated the sede of Israel from all the straunge children, and stode and knowleged their synnes, and the wyckednesses of their fathers, and stode vp in their place, and red in the boke of the lawe of the LORDE their God foure tymes on the daye, and they knowleged, and worshipped the LORDE their God foure tymes on the daye. And the Leuites stode on hye, namely Iesua, Bani, Cadmiel, Sebania, Buni, Serebia, Bani, and Chenani, and cryed loude vnto the LORDE their God. And the Leuites, Iesua, Cadmiel, Bani, Hasabenia, Serebia, Hodia, Sebania, Pethahia, sayde: Stonde vp, prayse the LORDE oure God for euer: and let thankes be geuē vnto the name of thy glorye, which excellethe all thankesgeuyng and prayse. LORDE, thou art alone, thou hast made heauen, and the heauen of all heauens, with all their hoost, the earth and all that therein is, the See and all that is therein: thou geuest life vnto all, and þe hoost of heauen bowe themselves vnto the. Thou art the LORDE God, that hast chosen Abrā, and broughte him out of Vr in Chaldea, & called him

Abraham,* and founde his hert faithfull before the, † and madest a couenaunt with him, to geue vnto his sede the londe of the Cananites, Hethites, Amorites, Pheresites, Iebusites, and Girgosites, and hast made good thy wordes: for thou art righteous. ‡ And hast considered the mysery of oure fathers in Egipte, and herde their complainte by the reed See, and shewed tokēs and wonders vpō Pharaο, and on all his seruauētes, and on all his people of his londe: for thou knewest § they were presumptuous & cruell against them, ¶ so to madest thou † the a name as it is this daie. And the reed See partedst thou in sunder before them, so that they wēte thorow the myddes of the See drye shod: ¶ their persecuters threwest thou in to the depe as a stone, in the mightie waters, and leddest them on the daye tyme in a cloudy pyler, and on the nighte season in a pilier of fyre, to shewe them lighte in the waye § they wente.

C Thou camest downe also vpō mount Sinai, and spakest vnto them from heauen, and gauest them righte iudgmentes, true lawes, good commaundementes and statutes, and declared vnto them thy holy Sabbath, and commaunded them preceptes, ordinaunces, and lawes, by Moses thy seruauēte: and ¶ gauest them bred from heauen whan they were hongry, and ¶ broughte forth water for them out of the rock whan they were thyrstye: and promysed them, † that they shulde go in, and take possession of the loude, where ouer thou haddest lyfte vp thine hande for to geue them.

Neuertheles oure fathers were proude and hardnecked, so that they folowed not thy cōmaundementes, and refused to heare, and were not myndefull of the wonders § thou dydest for them: but became obstynate and heady, in so moch that they turned back to their bondage in their dishobediēce. But thou my God forgauēst, and wast gracious, mercifull, patient, and of greate goodnesse, and forsokest them not. ** And though they made a molten calfe (and sayde: This is thy God, that broughte the out of the londe of Egipte) and dyd greate blasphemies, yet forsokest thou them not in the wyldernes, accordinge to thy greate mercy. †† And § cloudy pilier departed not from them on § daye tyme to lede them the waye, nether the pilier of fyre in the night season, to shewe them lighte in the waye that they wente.

D And thou gauest them thy good sprete to enfourme them, †† and withheldest not thy Manna from their mouth, § and gauest thē water whā they were thirstie. Fortye yeaeres longe madest thou prouysion for them in the wyldernes, so that they wanted nothinge: ¶ their clothes waxed not olde, and their fete swelled not. And thou gauest thē kygdomes ¶ nacions, ¶ partedst thē accordinge to their porcions, so that they possessed ¶ the londe of Sibon kynge of Heszbou, ¶ the londe of Og § kynge of Basan. *** And their childrē multipliedst thou as the starres of heauen, and broughtest thē in to the londe wherof thou haddest spoken vnto their fathers, that they shulde go in to it, and haue it in possession.

And § children wente in, and possessed the londe, ††† and thou subdudest before thē the inhabitants of the londe, euen the Cananites, ¶ gauest them in to their hande, and their kynges and § people of the londe, § they might do with them what they wolde. And they wanne their stronge cities, ¶ a fat londe, and toke possession of houses § were full of all maner goodes, welles dygged out, vynyardes, oylgardens, ¶ many frutefull trees: and they ate ¶ were fylled, ¶ became fat, ¶ lyued in welth thorow thy greate goodnes. Neuertheles they were disobedient, and rebelled agaynst the, and cast thy lawe behynde their backes, ††† and slewe thy prophetes (which exhorted them so earnestly, that they shulde cōuerte vnto the) and dyd greate blasphemies. Therefore gauest thou them ouer in to the hāde of their enemies that vexed them.

3E And in § tyme of their trouble they cried vnto the, and thou hardest them from heauen: and thorow thy greate mercy thou gauest them sauours, which helped thē out of the hande of their enemies. But whan they came to rest, they turned back agayne to do euell before the: therfore leftest thou them in the hande of their enemies, so § they had § dominion ouer them. So they cōuerted, and cryed vnto the, and thou herdest them from heauen, and many a tyme hast thou delyuered them accordinge to thy greate mercy, and testified

Notwithstōdinge they were proude, and herkened not vnto thy cōmaundementes, but synned in thy lawes (which a man shulde do, ⁊ lyue in them) ⁊ turned their shulder awaye, ⁊ were styffnecked, ⁊ wolde not heare. And many yeares dyddest thou forbear them, ⁊ testified vnto them throw thy sprete, euen by the office of thy prophetes, ⁊ yet wolde they not heare. Therefore gauest thou thē in to ſ̄ hāde of ſ̄ nacions in the londes. But for thy greate mercies sake thou hast not vtterly cōsumed them, nether forsaken them: for thou art a gracious and mercifull God.

¶ Now oure God, thou greate God, mightie and terrible, thou that kepest couenaunt and mercy, regarde not a litle all the trauayle ſ̄ hath happened vnto vs, ⁊ oure kynges, prynces, prestes, prophetes, fathers ⁊ all thy people, sence the tyme of the kynges of Assur vnto this daie. Thou art righteous in all ſ̄ thou hast broughte vpō vs: for thou hast done righte. As for vs, we haue bene vngodly, and oure kynges, prynces, prestes ⁊ fathers haue not done after thy lawe, ner regarded thy cōmaundementes, ⁊ thy earnest exhortaciōs wherwith thou hast exhorted them, ⁊ haue not serued ſ̄ in their kyngdome, and in thy greate goodes ſ̄ thou gauest them, and in the large and plenteous lōde which thou gauest them to good, and haue not conuerted from their wicked workes. Beholde, therefore are we in bondage this daye: Yee euen in the lōde that thou gauest vnto oure fathers, to enioye the frutes and goodes therof, beholde, there are we bondmen. And greate is the increase of it vnto the kynges, whom thou hast set ouer vs because of our synnes, and they haue dominion ouer oure bodies and catell, and we are in greate trouble.

And in all this made we a sure couenaunt, ⁊ wrote it, ⁊ let oure prynces, Leuites ⁊ prestes seale it.

The r. Chapter.

¶ THE sealers were: Nehemias (that is) Hathirsatha the sonne of Hachalia and Sedechias, Seraia, Asaria, Jeremy, Pashur, Amaria, Malchia, Hattus, Sebania, Malluch, Harim, Meremoth, Obadia, Daniel, Sinthun, Baruch, Mesullam, Abia, Meiamin, Maasga, Bilgai and Semaia: these were prestes.

The xi. Chapter.

AND the rulers of the people dwelt at Ierusalem. But the other people cast lottes therfore, so that amōge ten one parte wente to Ierusalem in to the holy cite to dwell, and nyne partes in the cities. And ⁊ people thanked all the men that were willinge to dwell at Ierusalem.

These are the heades of the londe that dwelt at Ierusalem. In the cities dwelt Iuda euery one in his possession ⁊ was in their cities, namely Israel, the prestes, Leuites, ⁊ Nethinims, and the children of Salomons seruauentes. And at Ierusalē dwelt certayne of the children of Iuda ⁊ of Ben Iamin.

⁊ Of the children of Iuda: Athaia the sonne of Vsia ⁊ sonne of Zachary, the sonne of Amaria, the sonne of Sephatia, the sonne of Mahelaleel, of the children of Phares. And Maeseia the sonne of Baruch, the sonne of Chal Hose, the sonne of Hasaia, the sonne of Adaia, the sonne of Ioarib, the sonne of Zachary, the sonne of Siloni. All the childrē of Phares that dwelt at Ierusalem, were foure C. and eight ⁊ thre score valeaunt men.

⁊ These are the childrē of Ben Iamin: Sallu the sonne of Mesullam, ⁊ sonne of Ioed, the sonne of Pedaia, the sonne of Colaia, ⁊ sonne of Maeseia, the sonne of Ithiel, ⁊ sonne of Iesaia. And after him Sabai, Sallai: nyne hundreth and eight and twentye. And Ioel the sonne of Sichri had the ouersight of them: and Iuda ⁊ sonne of Hasnua ouer the seconde parte of the cite.

⁊ Of the prestes there dwelt: Iedaia ⁊ sonne of Ioarib, Iachin. Seraia the sonne of Helchias ⁊ sonne of Mesullam, the sonne of Sadoc, the sonne of Meraioth, the sonne of Achitob, was pryncie in the house of God : ⁊ his brethrē that performed the worke in ⁊ house : of whom there were viij. C. and xxij. And Adaia the sonne of Ieroham, the sonne of Plalia, the sonne of Anzi, the sonne of Zachary, the sonne of Pashur ⁊ his brethrē, chefe amōge the fathers : of whom there were two hundreth and two and fortye. And Amassai the sonne of Asariel the sonne of Ahusai, the sonne of Mesillemoth, the sonne of Immer: and his brethren were valeaunt men, of whom there were an hundreth and eight and twentye. And their ouerseer was Sabdaiel the sonne of Gedolim.

⁊ Of the Leuites: Semaia the sonne of Hasub, the sonne of Asrikam, the sonne of Hasabia, the sonne of Bunni: And Sabthai and Iosabad of the chefe of the Leuites, in the outwarde busynes of ⁊ house of God. And Mathania the sonne of Micha, the sonne of Sabdi, the sonne of Assaph, which was the pryncipall to begynne the thankesgeuynges vnto prayer. And bacbuchia ⁊ seconde amōge his brethren, and Abda the sonne of Samnuia, the sonne of Galal, the sonne of Iedithun. All the Leuites in the holy cite were two hundreth and foure ⁊ foure score. ⁊ And ⁊ porters Acub and Talman, and their brethren ⁊ kepte the portes, were an hundreth and two and seuentye. As for the residue of Israel, the prestes and Leuites, they were in all the cities of Iuda, euery one in his inheritance.

And the Nethinims dwelt in Ophel: and Zipha and Gispa belonged vnto the Nethinims. The ouerseer of the Leuites at Ierusalem, was Vsi the sonne of Bani, the sonne of Hasabia, the sonne of Mathania, the sonne of Micha.

D Of the children of Assaph there were syngers aboute  $\hat{y}$  busynes in the house of God: for it was the kynges commaundement coernynge them, that  $\hat{y}$  syngers shulde deale faithfully, euery daye as acordinge was.

And Pethaia the sonne of Mesesabeel of the childre of Serah the sonne of Iuda nexte the kynge in all matters concernynge the people. And the children of Iuda that were without in the townes of their londe, dwelt some at Kiriath Arba, and in the vyllages therof,  $\tau$  at Dibon, and in the vyllages therof: and at Cabzeel, and in  $\hat{y}$  vyllages therof: and at Iesua, Molada, Bethphalet, Hazarsual, Berseba and in their vyllages:  $\tau$  at Siclag and Mochona, and in their vyllages: And at Enrimmon, Zarega, Ieremuth, Sanoah, Adulam and in their vyllages: At Lachis, and in the feldes therof: At Ascka, and in the vyllages therof: and dwelt from Berseba vnto the valley of Hinnom.

The children of Ben Iamin of Gaba, dwelt at Michmas, Aia, Bethel and in their vyllages. And at Anathoth, Nob, Anania, Hazor, Rama, Githaim, Hadid, Ziboim, Neballat, Lod, Ono  $\tau$  in the Carpeters valley. And certayne of the Leuites  $\hat{y}$  had porcions in Iuda, dwelt in Ben Iamin.

The xij. Chapter.

A THESE are  $\hat{y}$  prestes and Leuites that wente vp with Zorobabel  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Salthiel and with Iesua: Seraia, Ieremy, Esdras, Amaria, Malluch, Hattus, Sechania, Rehum, Meremoth, Iddo, Ginthoi, Abia, Meiamin, Maadia, Bilga, Semaia, Ioarib, Iedaia, Sallu, Amok, Helchias  $\tau$  Iedaia. These were the heades amōge the prestes and their brethren in the tyme of Iesua. The Leuites were these: Iesua, Bēnui, Cadmiel, Serebia, Iuda and Mathania, ouer the office of thankesgeuyng, they  $\tau$  their brethrē: Bachuchia  $\tau$  Vnni and their brethrē, were aboute them in the watches.

Iesua begat Ioachim. Ioachim begat Eliasib. Eliasib begat Ioiaa. Ioiaa begat Ionathan. Ionathan begat Iaddua. And in the tyme of Ioachim were these the chefe fathers amonge the prestes: namely of Seraia was Meraia, of Ieremy was Hanania, of Esdras was Mesullam, of Amaria was Iohanen, of Malluch was Ionathan, of Sebania was

Joseph, of Harim was Adna, of Meraioth was Helcai, of Iddo was Zachary, of Ginthon was Mesullā, of Abia was Siebri, of Miniamin Moadia was Piltai, of Bilga was Sammua, of Semaia was Ionathaa, of Ioarib was Mathnai, of Iedaia was Vsi, of Sallai was Callai, of Amok was Eber, of Helchias was Hasabia, of Gedalia, was Nethaneel.

And in the tyme of Eliasib. Ioiaa, Iohanen and Iaddua, were the chefe fathers amonge the Leuites, and the prestes wryttē vnder the reigne of Darius  $\hat{y}$  Persian. The children of Leui the princypall fathers were wrytten in the Cronicles, vntyll the tyme of Iohanen the sonne of Eliasib. And these were the chefe amōge the Leuites, Hasabia, Serebia and Iesua the sonne of Cadmiel,  $\tau$  their brethren ouer agaynst them, to geue prayse and thanks, acordinge as Dauid  $\hat{y}$  mā of God had ordeyned it, one watch ouer agaynst another. Mathania, Bachuchia, Obadia, Mesullam, Talmon and Acub were porters in the watch at the thresholdes of the gates. These were in the tyme of Ioachim the sonne of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, and in the tyme of Nehemias the Debyte, and of the prest Eszdras the scribe.

And in the dedication of the wall at Ierusalem, were the Leuites soughte out of all their places, that they mighte be broughte to Ierusalem, to kepe  $\hat{y}$  dedicacion in gladnesse, with thankesgeuynges, with synginge, with Cymbales, Psalteries and harpes. And the children of the syngers gathered thē selues together from the playne countre aboute Ierusalem, and from the vyllages of Nethophathi, and from the house of Gilgal,  $\tau$  out of the feldes of Gibeā  $\tau$  Asmaueth: for  $\hat{y}$  syngers had buylded them vyllages aboute Ierusalem. And  $\hat{y}$  prestes and Leuites purified them selues, and censed the people, the gates and the wall.

And I caused the prynces to go vp vpon the wall, and appoynted two greate queeres of thankesgeuyng, which wēte on the righte hande of the wall towarde the Donggate, and after them wēte Hosaia, and halfe of the prynces of Iuda,  $\tau$  Asaria, Eszdras, Mesullam, Iuda, Ben Iamin, Semaia and Ieremy: and certayne of the prestes childrē with trompettes, namely Zachary  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ionathan, the sonne of Semaia, the sonne of Mathania, the sonne of Michaia, the sonne of Sachur, the sonne of Assaph, and his brethren, Semaia, Asareel, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nathaneel and Iuda and Hanani, with the musically instrumentes of Dauid & man of God.

D And Esdras & scribe before the towarde the Wellgate, and they wente vp ouer agaynst them vpon the steppes of the cite of Dauid at the goynge vp of the wall to the house of Dauid, vnto the Watergate Eastwarde.

The other quere of thankesgeuyng wente ouer against them, and I after them, and the halfe parte of the people vpon & wall, towarde & Fornacegate vpwarde, vntyll & brode wall, and to & porte of Ephraim, and to the Oldgate, and to & Fyshgate, and to the tower of Hananeel, and to the tower of Meah, vntyll the Shepegate. And in & presougate stode they styll, and so stode the two queres of thankesgeuyng of the house of God, and I and the halfe of the rulers with me, and the prestes, namely Eliachim, Maeseia, Miniamin, Michaia, Elioenai, Zachary, Hanania, with trôpettes, and Maeseia, Semaia, Eleasar, Vsi, Iohanen, Malchia, Elam and Aser. And the syngers songe loude, and Iesrahia was the ouerseer.

E And the same daye were there greate sacrifices offred, & they reioysed: for God had geuē them greate gladnesse, so that both the wyues and children were ioyfull, & the myrth of Ierusalem was herde farre of.

At the same tyme were there men appointed ouer the treasure chestes (wherin were & Heue offerynges, the firstlinges and the tithes) that they shulde gather them out of & felde aboute the cities, to distribute the vnto the prestes and Leuites accordinge to the lawe: for Iuda was glad of the prestes, and Leuites, that they stode and wayted vpon the office of their God, and the office of the purification. And the syngers & porters stode after the commaundemēt of Dauid & of Salomon his sonne: * for in the tyme of Dauid and Assaph, were the chefe syngers founded, and the songes of prayse and thankesgeuyng vnto God. In the tyme of Zorobabel and Nehemias, dyd all Israel geue porciōs vnto the syngers and porters, euery daye his portion, and they gaue thinges halowed vnto the Leuites, and the Leuites gaue thinges that were sanctified, vnto the childre of Aaron.

The iij. Chapter.

AND what tyme as the boke of Moses A was red in & eares of the people, there was founde wrytten therin, † & the Ammonites and Moabites shulde neuer come in to the congregacion of God, because they mett not the children of Israel with bred and water, and hyred Balaam against the, that he shulde curse them: neuertheles oure God turned & curse in to a blessinge. Now when they herde the lawe, they separated from Israel euery one that had myxte him selfe therin. And before this had the prest Eliasib deliuered the chest of & house of oure God vnto his kynsman Tobia: for he had made him a greate chest, and there had they aforetyme layed the meatofferynges, frankencense, vessell, and the tithes of corne, wyne and oyle (accordinge to the commaundement geuen to the Leuites, syngers and porters) and the Heueofferynges of the prestes.

But in all this was not I at Ierusalem: for in & two and thirtieth yeare of Artaxerses kynge of Babilon, came I vnto the kynge, and after certayne dayes optayned I licence of the kynge to come to Ierusalē. And I gat knowledge of & euell that Eliasib dyd vnto Tobia, in that he had made him a chest in the courte of the house of God, and it greued me sore, and I cast forth all the vessels of Tobias house out of the chest, and commaūded them to clense the chest. And thither broughte I agayne the vessels of the house of God, the meatofferyng and the incense.

And I perceaued, that the porcions of & Leuites were not geuen them, for the which cause the Leuites and syngers were fled, euery one to his londe for to worke. Then reprovēd I the rulers, and sayde: Why forsake we the house of God? But I gathered them together, and set them in their place. Then brought all Iuda the tithes of corne, wyne and oyle vnto the treasure. And I made treasurers ouer & treasure, euen Selemia & prest, and Sadoc the scribe, & of the Leuites Pedaia, and vnder their hande Hanan the sonne of Sachur the sonne of Mathania: for they were counted faithfull, and their office was, to distribute vnto their brethren. ‡Thynke vpon me O my God here in, & wpe not out my mercy, that I haue shewed on y<sup>e</sup> house of my God, & on the offices thereof.

At the same tyme sawe I some tredinge wyne presses on the Sabbath, and brynginge in clusters, and asses laden wyth wyne, grapes, fygges, and brynginge all maner of burthens vnto Ierusalem, vpon the Sabbath daye. And I rebuked them earnestly y<sup>e</sup> same daye that they solde y<sup>e</sup> vytayles. There dwelt mē of Tyre also therein, which broughte fysh and all maner of ware, and solde on the Sabbath vnto the childrē of Iuda and Ierusalem. Then reproued I the rulers in Iuda, and saide vnto them: What euell thinge is this that ye do, and breake the Sabbath daye? Dyd not oure fathers euen thus, and oure God broughte all this plague vpon vs & vpon this cite? And ye make the wrath more yet vpon Israel, in that ye breake the Sabbath.

¶ And whan the portes of Ierusalem were drawn vp before the Sabbath, I commaūded to shutt the gates, and charged that they shulde not be opened tyll after the Sabbath: and some of my seruantes set I at the gates, y<sup>e</sup> there shulde no burthē be broughte in on the Sabbath daye. Then remayned the chapmen and marchauntes once or twyce ouer nighte without Ierusalem with all maner of wares. Then reproued I them sore, & sayde vnto them: Why tary ye all night aboute the wall? Yf ye do it once agayne, I wil laye handes vpon you. From that tyme forth came they nomore on the Sabbath. And I sayde vnto the Leuites which were cleane, that they shulde come and kepe the gates, to halowe the Sabbath daye. Thynke vpō me (O my God) cōcernynge this also, & spare me acordynge to thy greate mercy.

And at the same tyme sawe I Iewes, that married wyues of Asdod, Ammon and of Moab, and their children spake halfe in the speache of Asdod, and coulde not speake in y<sup>e</sup> Iewish language, but by y<sup>e</sup> tonge mighte a mā perceaue euery people. And I reproued them, and cursed them, & smote certayne men of thē, and plucte them vp, and toke an ooth of them by God: "Ye shal not geue youre daughters vnto their sonnes, nether shal ye take their daughters vnto youre sonnes, or for youre selues. <sup>a</sup> Dyd not Salomon y<sup>e</sup> kynge of Israel synne ther in? & yet amonge many Heythen was there no kynge like him, & he was deare vnto his God, and God made him kynge ouer all Israel, and the outlandish wemen.

And one of the children of Ioiaha the sonne of Eliasib y<sup>e</sup> hye prest, had made a cōtracte wyth Saneballath the Horonite: but I chaced him fro me. O my God, thynke thou vpon them that are quyte of the presthode, and haue defyled the couenant of the presthode and of the Lenites. Thus clensed I them from all soch as were outlandish, and appoynted the courses of the prestes and Leuites, euery one to his office, and to offere the wod at tymes appoynted, and the first frutes. Thynke thou vpon me (O my God) for the best.

Of the auctorite of Mardocheus vnder the kyng.

The first Chapter.

IN the tyme of Ahasuerus, which reigned from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundred and seuen and twentye lordes, what tyme as he sat on his seate roiall in the castell of Susan in the thirde yere of his reigne, he made a feast vnto all his prynces and seruantes, namely vnto the mightie men of Persia and Media, to the Debities and rulers of his countrees, that he mighte shewe the noble riches of his kingdome, and the glorious worshippe of his greatnesse, many dayes longe, euen an hundred and foure score dayes.

And whan these dayes were expyred, the kyng made a feast vnto all the people that were in the castell of Susan, both vnto greate and small, seuen dayes longe in the courte of the garden by the kynges palace: where there hanged whyte, reed & yalow clothes, fastened with coardes of lymen and scarlet in siluer rynges, vpon pylers of Marble stone.

The benches were of golde and siluer made vpon a pauement of grene, white, yalowe and black Marble. And y<sup>e</sup> drinke was caried in vessels of golde, and there was euer change of vessell. And the kynges wine was moch acordynge to the power of the kyng. And noman was appoynted what he shulde drinke: for the kyng had commaunded all the officers of his house, that euery one shulde do as it lyked him. And the quene Vasthi made a feast also for the wemen in the palace of Ahasuerus. And on the seuenth daye when the kynge was mery of the wine, he cōmaunded Mehumā, Bistha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Sethar and Charcas, the seuen chamberlaynes (that dyd seruyce in the presence of kynge Ahasuerus) to fetch the quene Vasthi with the crowne regall, that he might shewe ſ people and prynces hir fairnesse: for she was bewtiful. But the quene Vasthi wolde not come at the kynges worde by his chamberlaynes. Then was the kynge very wroth, and his indignaciō kyndled in him.

And the kynge spake to ſ wyse men that had vnderstondinge in the ordinaunces of the londe (for the kynges matters must be hādled before all such as haue knowlege of the lawe and iudgment: And the nexte vnto him were, Charsena, Sethar, Admatha, Tharsis, Meres, Marsena and Memuchan, the seuen prynces of the Persiās, and Meedes, which sawe the kynges face, and satt aboue in the kyngdome) What lawe shulde be execute vpon the quene Vasthi, because she dyd not acordynge to the worde of the kynge by his chamberlaines. Thē saide Memuchā before the kynge & the prynces: The quene Vasthi hath not onely done euell agaynst the kinge but also agaynst all the prynces and all the people in all the londes of kynge Ahasuerus, for this dede of the quene shall come abrode vnto all wemen, so that they shall despyse their huszbandes before their eyes, and shall saye: The kynge Ahasuers cōmaunded Vasthi ſ quene to come before him, but she wolde not. And so shall the pryncesses in Persia and Media saye lykewyse vnto all the kynges prynces, when they heare of this dede of the quene, thus shall there aryse despytefulnes and wrath ynough. Yf it please the kynge, let there go a kyngly commaudemēt from him, and let it be wryten acordynge to the lawe of the Persians and Medians (and not to be transgressed) that Vasthi come nomore before kynge Ahasuerus, and let the kynge geue the kyngdome vnto another that is better then she.

And ſ this wrytinge of the kynge which shalbe made, be published thorow out all his empyre (which is greate) that all wyues maye holde their huszbandes in honoure, both amonge greate and smal.

This pleased the kynge and the prynces, and the kynge dyd acordynge to the worde of Memuchan. Then were there letters sent forth in to all the kynges londes, in to euery londe accordinge to the wrytinge therof, and to euery people after their lāguage, ſ euery man shulde be lorde in his awne house. And this caused he be spoken after the language of his people.

The ij. Chapter.

AFTER these actes whan the displeasure of kynge Ahasuerus was layed, he thoughte vpon Vasthi, what she had done, and what was concluded concernynge her. Then sayde the kynges seruantes: Let there be fayre yonge virgins soughte for the kynge, and let the kynge appoynte ouerseers in all ſ londes of his empyre, that they maye brynge together all fayre yonge virgins vnto the castel of Susan to the Wemens buyldinge, vnder the hande of Hegai the kynges chamberlayne, that kepeth the wemen, and let him geue them their apparell. And loke which damsell pleaseth the kynge, let her be quene in Vasthis steade. This pleased the kynge, and he dyd so.

In the castell of Susan there was a Iewe, whose name was Mardocheus, the sonne of Iair, the sonne of Simai, the sonne of Cis, the sonne of Iemini, which was caried awaye from Ierusalem, *whan Iechonias the kynge of Iuda was led awaye, (whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon caried awaye) and he norished Hadassa (that is Hester) his vncles daughter: for she had nether father ner mother, and she was a fayre and beautyfull damsell. And whan hir father and mother dyed, Mardocheus receaued hir as his awne daughter.

Now whan ſ kynges cōmaudemēt and cōmyssion was published, & many dāsels were broughte together vnto the castel of Susan vnder ſ hande of Hegai, Hester, was takē also vnto ſ kynges house vnder ſ hande of Hegai ſ keeper of ſ wemē, & the damsell pleased him, & she founde grace in his sighte. And he put her with hir maydes in ſ best place of ſ Womēs buyldige. And Hester shewed it not vnto hir people & hir kynred: for Mardocheus had charged her, ſ she shulde not tell it. And Mardocheus walked euery daye before ſ courte of ſ Womēs buyldinge, ſ he might knowe how Hester dyd, and what shulde become of her.

C And whan the appoynted tyme of euery damsell came that she shulde come to þy kyng Ahasuerus, after that she had bene twolue monethes in the deckyng of the wemen (for their deckyng must haue so moch tyme, namely sixe monethes with Balme & Myrre, & sixe monethes with good spyes, so were the wemē beutified) then wente there one damsell vnto þy kyng, and what so euer she requyred, þy must be geuē her to go with her out of the Womens buyldinge vnto þy kynges palace. And whan one came in the euenyng, þy same wēte frō him on þy morow in to þy seconde house of wemen, vnder the hande of Saasgas the kynges chamberlayne, which kepte þy concubines. And she must come vnto the kyng nomore, excepte it pleased the kyng, and that he caused her to be called by name.

Now whan the tyme came of Hester the daughter of Abihail Mardocheus vncle (whom he had receaued as his awne daughter) þy she shulde come to the kyng, she desyred nothing but what Hegai the kynges chamberlayne the keper of the wemen sayde.

And Hester founde fauoure in the sighte of all them that loked vpon her. And Hester was taken vnto kyng Ahasuerus in to the house royall, in the tenth moneth which is called Tebeth, in the seuenthe yere of his reigne.

D And the kyng loued Hester aboute all the wemen, and she founde grace and mercy in his sighte before all the virgins: and he set the quenes croune vpon hir heade, and made her quene in steade of Vasthi. And the kyng made a greate feast vnto all his prynces and seruantes (which feast was because of Hester) and let the londes be in quyetnes, & gaue royall giftes.

And whan the virgins were gathered together the seconde tyme, Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate. And as yet had not Hester shewed hir kynred and hir people, acordinge as Mardocheus had bydden her: for Hester dyd after the worde of Mardocheus, like as whan he was hir tutoure. At the same tyme whyle Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate, two of the kynges chamberlaynes, Bigthan and Theres which kepte the dore, were wroth, and sought to laye their handes on the kyng Ahasuerus: Wherof Mardocheus gat knowledge, and tolde it vnto quene Hester, and Hester certified the kyng therof in Mardocheus name. And whan inquisition was made, it was founde so. And they were both hanged on tre: and it was wrytte in the Cronicles before the kyng.

The iij. Chapter.

AFTER these actes dyd the kyng promote Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite, and set him hye, & set his seate aboute all þy prynces that were with him. And all the kynges seruantes that were in the gate, bowed their knees, and dyd reuerence vnto Aman: for the kinge had so cōmaunded. But Mardocheus bowed not the knee, and worshipped him not. Then the kynges seruantes which were in the kynges gate, sayde vnto Mardocheus: Why transgresses thou the kynges commaundement? And whan they spake this daylie vnto him, and he folowed them not, they tolde Aman, that they mighte se whether Mardocheus matters wolde endure: for he had tolde them, þy he was a Iewe. And whā Aman sawe, that Mardocheus bowed not the knee vnto him, ner worshipped him, he was full of indignacion & despyte, that he shulde laye hondes onely on Mardocheus: for they had shewed him þy people of Mardocheus, but he sought to destroye the people of Mardocheus, and all the people that were in the whole empyre of Ahasuerus.

In the first moneth that is the moneth Nissan, in þy twolueth yere of kinge Ahasuerus, was there occasion and oportuntey sought by Aman, from one daye to another, and from the same moneth vnto the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar. And Amā sayde vnto kinge Ahasuerus: There is a people scatered abrode and dispersed amonge all people in all the londes of thine empire, and their lawe is cōtrary vnto all people, and they do not after the kynges lawes, nether is it the kynges profit to suffre thē after this maner. Yf it please the kyng, let him wryte, that they maye be destroyed, & so wil I weye downe ten thousande talentes of siluer, vnder the handes of the workmen, to be brought in to the kynges chamber. Then toke the kyng his ryng from his hande, and gaue it vnto Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite the Iewes enemye. And the kinge sayde vnto Aman: Let the siluer be geuen thē, and that people also, to do withall what pleaseth the.

C Then were the kynges scribes called on  $\text{f}$  thirteenth daye of the first moneth,  $\tau$  there was wrytten (acordynge as Aman commaunded) vnto the kynges prynces, and to the Debites euery where in the londes, and to the captaynes of euery people in the countrees on euery syde, acordynge to the wrytinge of euery nacion, and after their language in the name of kynge Aliasuerus, and sealed with the kynges ryng. And the wrytynges were sent by postes in to all the kynges lodes, to rote out, to kyll, and to destroye all Iewes, both yonge and olde, childre and wemen in one daye (namely vpon the thirteenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar) and to spoyle their goodes.

This was the summe of the wrytinge,  $\text{f}$  there shulde be a commaundement geuen in all londes, to be published vnto all people,  $\text{f}$  they shulde be ready agaynst the same daye. And the postes wente in all the haist acordynge to the kynges commaundement. And in the castell of Susan was the cōmaundement deused. And the kynge  $\tau$  Aman sat  $\tau$  dranke. But  $\text{f}$  cite of Susan was disquieted.

The iiij. Chapter.

A WHAN Mardocheus perceaued all that was done, he rēte his clothes, and put on a sack cloth,  $\tau$  aszshes,  $\tau$  wente out in to the myddes of the cite, and cried loude and lamentably, and came before the kynges gate: for there might no man entre within the kynges gate, that had a sack cloth on. And in all lodes  $\tau$  places, as farre as the kynges worde and commaundement extended, there was greete lamentacion amonge the Iewes, and many fasted, wepte, mourned,  $\tau$  laye in sack clothes  $\tau$  in aszshes. So Hesters dāsels, and hir chamberlaines, came and tolde it her. Then was the quene exceedingly astonnyed. And she sent rayment, that Mardocheus shulde put them on, and laye the sackclothe from him. But Mardocheus wolde not take them. Thē called Hester Hathac one of the kynges chamberlaines (which stode before her) and gaue him a cōmaundement vnto Mardocheus, that he might knowe what it were, and wherfore he dyd so. So Hathac wente forth to Mardocheus vnto the strete of the cite, which was before the kynges gate.

B And Mardocheus tolde him of all  $\text{f}$  had happened vnto him, and of the summe of siluer that Amā had promysed to weie downe in the kynges chamber because of  $\text{f}$  Iewes for to destroye them, and he gaue him the cōpye of the cōmaundement, that was deused at Susan to destroye them, that he mighte shewe it vnto Hester, and to speake to her and charge her,  $\text{f}$  she shulde go in to the kynge, and make her prayer and supplicacion vnto him for hir people.

And whā Hathac came in, and tolde Hester the wordes of Mardocheus, Hester spake vnto Hathac, and cōmaunded him to saye vnto Mardocheus: All the kynges seruantes, and the people in the londes of the kynge knowe, that who so euer commeth within the courte vnto  $\text{f}$  kynge, whether it be man or woman, which is not called, the cōmaundement is that the same shal dye immediatly, excepte the kynge holde out the goldē cepter vnto him, that he maye lyue. As for me, I haue not bene called to come in to the kynge now this thirtie dayes.

And whā Mardocheus was certified of C Hesters wordes, Mardocheus bad saie againe vnto Hester: Thyneke not to saue thine awne life, whyle thou art in  $\text{f}$  kynges house before all Iewes: for yf thou holdest thy peace at this tyme, then shal the Iewes haue helpe and delyueraunce out of another place,  $\tau$  thou  $\tau$  thy fathers house shalbe destroyed. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kyngdome, for this tymes sake? Hester bad gene Mardocheus this answer: Go thou thy waye then,  $\tau$  gather together all  $\text{f}$  Iewes  $\text{f}$  are founde at Susan,  $\tau$  fast ye for me,  $\text{f}$  ye eate not  $\tau$  drynke not in thre dayes, nether daye ner nighte. I  $\tau$  my damself wil fast likewise,  $\tau$  so wyl I go in to the kynge cōtrary to the cōmaundement: yf I perishe, I perishe. So Mardocheus wente his waye,  $\tau$  dyd all  $\text{f}$  Hester had cōmaunded him.

The v. Chapter.

A ND on the thirde daye put Hester on A hir royall apparell, and stode in the courte of  $\text{f}$  kynges palace within ouer agaynst the kynges house. And  $\text{f}$  kynge sat vpo his royall seate in  $\text{f}$  kynges palace ouer agaynst  $\text{f}$  dore of the house. And whan the kynge sawe Hester the quene stōdinge in the courte, she founde grace in his sighte. And  $\text{f}$  kynge helde out the goldē cepter in his hāde towarde Hester. So Hester stepte forth, and touched the toppe of ſ cepter. Then ſayde ſ kyng vnto her: What wilt thou quene Hester? ⁊ what requyreſt thou? axe euē the halfe of ſ empyre, ⁊ it ſhal be geuē the. Hester ſayde: Yf it pleaſe ſ kyng, let ſ kyng ⁊ Aman come this daye vnto ſ banket ſ I haue prepared. The kyng ſayde: Cauſe Aman to make haist, ſ he maye do as Hester hath ſaide.

33 Now whā the kyng ⁊ Aman came to ſ banket ſ Hester had prepared, the kyng ſayde vnto Hester whan he had dronken wyne: Hester, what is thy petition? it ſhal be geuē the. And what requyreſt thou? euen the halfe of the empyre, it ſhal be done.

Then answered Hester and ſayde: My petition and deſire is, yf I haue founde grace in ſ ſight of the kyng, ⁊ yf it pleaſe the kyng to geue me my petition, and to fulfill my request, then let the kyng ⁊ Aman come to the banket ſ I ſhal prepare for thē, and ſo wil I do tomorrow as the kyng hath ſaide.

C Then wente Aman forth the ſame daye ioyfull and mery in his mynde. And whan he ſawe Mardocheus in the kynges gate, ſ he ſtode not vp and kneled before him, he was full of indignacion at Mardocheus. Neuertheles he refrained himſelfe: and whā he came home, he ſent, and called for his frēdes, and Seres his wyfe, and tolde them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, all together how the kyng had promoted him ſo greatly, and how that he was taken aboute the prynces and ſeruauntes of the kyng. Aman ſayde morouer: Yee and Hester the quene let no man come with the kyng vnto the banket that ſhe had prepared, excepte me, and tomorrow am I bidden vnto her alſo with the kyng. But in all this am I not ſatisfied as longe as I ſe Mardocheus the Iewe ſyttinge in ſ kynges gate. Then ſayde Seres his wyfe and all his frendes vnto him: Let thē make a galowe of fiftye cubites hie, ⁊ tomorrow ſpeake thou vnto the kyng, that Mardocheus maye be hanged thereon, yf thou comest merely with the kyng vnto the banket. Aman was well content withall, and cauſed a galowe to be prepared.

THE vi. Chapter.

34 THE ſame night coulde not the kyng ſlepe, and he commaunded to brynge ſ Cronicles and ſtoryes: which whā they were red before ſ kyng, they happened on the place where it was wrytē, how Mardocheus had tolde, that the kynges two chāberlaynes (which kepte ſ thresholds) ſought to laie hondes on kyng Ahasuerus. And the kyng ſaide: What worſhippe and good haue we done to Mardocheus therfore? Then ſayde the kynges ſeruauntes that mynſtered vnto him. There is nothinge done for him. And the kyng ſayde: Who is in ſ courte? (for Aman was gone in to ſ courte without before ſ kynges houſe, ſ he might ſpeake vnto ſ kyng to hange Mardocheus on ſ tre, ſ he had prepared for him.) And the kynges ſeruauntes ſaide vnto him: Beholde, Amā ſtōdeth in the courte. The kyng ſaide: Let him come in. And whā Amā came in, ſ kyng ſaide vnto him: What ſhal be done vnto ſ mā, whom the kyng wolde fayne brynge vnto worſhippe? But Hamā thought in his hert: Whom ſhulde the kyng els be glad to brynge vnto worſhippe, but me? And Aman ſayde vnto the kyng: Let the man vnto whom the kyng wolde be glad to do worſhippe, be broughte hither, that he maye be araid with the royall garments which the kyng vseth to weere: and the horſe that the kyng rydeth vpon, and that the crowne royall maye be ſet vpon his heade. And let this rayment and horſe be deliuered vnder the hande of one of the kynges prynces, that he maye araye the man withall (whom the kyng wolde fayne honoure) and cary him vpon the horſe thorow the ſtete of the cite, and cauſe it to be proclaimed before him: Thus ſhal it be done to euery man, whom the kyng wolde fayne honoure.

C The kyng ſayde: Make haist, and take (as thou haſt ſayde) the raymēt and the horſe, and do euen ſo with Mardocheus ſ Iewe that ſitteth before the kynges gate, and let nothinge fayle of all that thou haſt ſpoken. Then toke Aman the rayment and the horſe, and arayed him, and broughte him on horſebacke thorow the ſtete of the cite, and proclaimed before him: Euen thus ſhall it be done vnto euery man whom the kyng is diſpoſed to honoure. And Mardocheus came agayne to the kynges gate, but Aman gat him home in all the haist, mournyng with bare heade, and tolde Seres his wyfe and all his frendes, euery thyng that had happened him. Then ſayde his wiſe men and Seres his wyfe vnto him: Yf it be Mardocheus of the ſede of the Iewes, before who thou hast begonne to fall, thou canst do nothyng vnto him, but shalt fall before him. Whyle they were yet talkynge with him, came the kynges chamberlaynes, and caused Aman to make haist to come vnto the bancket that Hester had prepared.

The iij. Chapter.

AND whan the kynge and Aman came to the bancket that quene Hester had prepared, the kynge sayde vnto Hester on the seconde daye whan he had dröken wyne: What is thy peticion quene Hester, that it maye be geuen the? And what requyrest thou? Yee axe euen halfe of the empyre, and it shal be done. Hester & quene answered and sayde: Yf I haue foudre grace in thy sighte (O kynge) and yf it please the kynge, then graunte me my lyfe at my desyre and my people for my petitions sake: for we are solde to be destroyed, to be slayne, and to perishe. And wolde God we were solde to be bondmen and bondwomen, then wolde I holde my tonge, so shulde not the enemye be so hye to the kynges harme. The kynge Ahasuerus spake & saide vnto quene Hester: What is he that? Or where is he & darre presume in his mynde to do soch a thinge after that maner? Hester sayde: The enemye and aduersary is this wicked Aman.

As for Amā, he was exceedingly afraied before & kynge & & quene. And the kynge arose frō the bancket & frō & wyne in his displeasure, and wente in to the palace garden. And Aman stode vp, and besoughte quene Hester for his life: for he sawe & there was a mischaunce prepared for him of the kynge allready.

And whan the kynge came agayne out of the palace garden in to & parler where they had eaten, Aman had layed him vpon the bed that Hester sat vpon. Then saide the kinge: wyl he force the quene also besyde me in the house? As soone as that word wente out of the kynges mouth, they couered Amans face. And Harbona one of the chamberlaynes that stode before the kynge, sayde: Beholde, there stondest a galowe in Amās house fiftie cubytes hye, which he had made for Mardocheus, that spake good for & kinge. The kynge sayde: Hange him theron. So they hanged Aman on the galowe that he had made for Mardocheus. Then was the kynges wrath styll.

The viij. Chapter.

THE same daye dyd kynge Ahasuerus geue the house of Aman the Jewes enemye, vnto quene Hester. And Mardocheus came before & kinge: for Hester tolde how that he belöged vnto her. And the kynge put of his fygner ryng, which he had taken from Aman, & gaue it vnto Mardocheus. And Hester set Mardocheus ouer the house of Aman. And Hester spake yet more before the kynge, and fell downe at his fete, & besought him, that he wolde put awaye the wyckednes of Aman the Agagite, and his deuice that he had ymagined against & Jewes. And the kynge helde out the golden cepter vnto Hester. Then rose Hester, and stode before the kynge, and sayde: Yf it please the kynge, and yf I haue foudre grace in his sight, & yf it be cōuenyent for the kinge, and yf it be accepted in his sighte, then let it be wryttē, & the letters of the deuycce of Amā the sonne of Amadathai the Agagite, maie be called agayne: which letters he wrote, to destroye & Jewes in all & kynges lödes. For how can I se the euell that shal happē vnto my people? and how can I loke vpon the destruction of my kynred?

Then sayde & kynge Ahasuerus vnto quene Hester, and to Mardocheus the Iewe: Beholde, I haue geuen Hester the house of Aman, & him haue they hanged vpon a tre, because he layed häde vpon & Jewes. Wryte ye now therfore for the Jewes, as it liketh you in the kynges name, and seale it with & kynges ryng (for the wrytinges that were wrytten in & kynges name, and sealed with the kynges ryng, durst no man dysanulle.) Then were the kynges scribes called at the same tyme in the thirde moneth, that is the moneth Siuan, on the thre & twentieth daie.

And it was wrytten (as Mardocheus cōmaunded) vnto the Jewes and to the prynces, to the Debities and captaynes in the londes from India vntyll Ethiopia, namely, an hundred and seuen and twentye londes, vnto euery one accordinge to the wrytinge therof, vnto euery people after their speche, and to the Jewes accordinge to their wrytinge and language.

And it was written in the kynge Ahasuerus name, and sealed with the kynges ryng. And by postes that rode vpon swyfte yonge Mules, sent he the wrytinges, wher in the

kyng gaunted the Iewes (in what cities so euer they were) to gather them selues together, and to stonde for their lyfe, and for to rote out, to slaye, and to destroye all the power of the people and londe that wolde trouble them, with children and wemen, and to spoyle their good vpon one daye in all the londes of kyng Ahasuerus, namely vpon the thirteenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar.

D The summe of the wrytinge was, how there was a comaundement geuen in all londes to be published vnto all the people, that y Iewes shulde be ready agaynst that daye to auenge them selues on their enemies. And the postes that rode vpon the Mules, made haist with all speede, accordinge to the kynges worde: and the comaundement was deuysed in the castel of Susan.

As for Mardocheus, he wente out from the kyng in royall apparell of yalow and whyte, and wyth a greate crowne of golde, beyng arayed with a garment of linnen and purple, and y cite of Susan reioysed t was glad: but vnto the Iewes there was come light and gladnesse, t ioye t worshippe. And in all londes and cities, in to what places so euer the kynges worde and comaundemēt reached, there was ioye t myrth, prosperite and good dayes amonge the Iewes: in so moch that many of the people in the londe became of the Iewes beleue, for the feare of the Iewes came vpon them.

The ix. Chapter.

A IN the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar, vpon the thyrteenth daye, which the kynges worde and comaundement had appoynted, that it shulde be done, euē vpon y same daie y the enemies shulde haue destroyed the Iewes to haue oppressed them, it turned contrary wise, euen y the Iewes shulde subdue their enemies. Then gathered the Iewes together in their cities within all y londes of kyng Ahasuerus, to laye honde on soch as wolde do thē euell, t no man coulde withstonde them: for y feare of thē was come ouer all people. And all the rulers in the londes, and prynces and Debities, and officers of the kyng promoted the Iewes: for the feare of Mardocheus came vpō thē. For Mardocheus was greate in the kynges house, t the reporte of him was noised in all lōdes, how he increased t grewe.

Thus the Iewes smote all their enemies with a sore slaughter, and slewe and destroyed, t dyd after their wyll vnto soch as were their aduersaries. And at y castell of Susan slewe the Iewes and destroyed fyue hūdreth men: t slewe Parsandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmastha, Arissai, Aridai, Vaiesatha, the ten sonnes of Aman y sonne of Amadathi y enemye of the Iewes: but on his goodes they layed no handes. At the same tyme was the kyng certified of the nombre of those that were slaine at the castell of Susan. And the kyng sayde vnto quene Hester: The Iewes haue slayne and destroyed fyue hūdreth men at y castell of Susan, and the ten sonnes of Amā: What shal they do in the other londes of y kyng? What is thy peticion, that it maye be geuen the? t what requiest thou more to be done? Hester sayde: Yf it please the kyng, let him suffice the Iewes tomorow also to do accordinge vnto this dayes comaundement, that they maye hange Amans ten sonnes vpō y tre. And the kyng charged to do so, and the comaundement was deuysed at Susan, t Amans ten sonnes were hanged. And the Iewes gathered thē selues together at Susan, vpon the fourteenth daye of the moneth Adar, and slewe thre hundreth men at Susan, but on their goodes they laied no hādes.

C As for the other Iewes in the kynges lōdes, they came together, t stode for their lyues, t gatt rest frō their enemies: and slewe of their enemies fyue and secentye thousande, howbeit they layed no hondes on their goodes. This was done on the thirtēth daie of the moneth Adar, and on the fourteenth daye of the same moneth rested they, which (daye) they ordeyned to be a daye of feastinge and gladnesse. But the Iewes at Susan were come together both on the thyrteenth daye and on the fourteenth, and on the fyfteenth daye they rested, and the same daye ordeyned they to be a daye of feastinge t gladnes. Therefore the Iewes that dwelt in the vyllages and vnwalld townes, ordeyned y fourteenth daye of the moneth Adar, to be a daye of feastinge and gladnes, and one sent giftes vnto another.

And Mardocheus wrote these actes, and sent the wrytinges vnto all the Iewes y were in all y londes of kyng Ahasuerus, both nye and farre, that they shulde yearly receaue and holde the fourteenth and fyfteenth daie of the

D moneth Adar, as the daies wherein  $\text{f}$  Iewes came to rest from their enemies,  $\tau$  as a moneth wherein their payne was turned to ioye, and their sorowe in to prosperite: that they shulde obserue the same as dayes of wealth and gladnes, and one to sende giftes vnto another,  $\tau$  to distribute vnto the poore.

And the Iewes receaued it that they had begonne to do, and that Mardocheus wrote vnto them: how that Aman the sonne of Amadathai all  $\text{f}$  Iewes enemye, had deuysed to destroye all the Iewes, and caused the lot to be cast for to put them in feare, and to brynge them to naughte: and how Hester wente and spake to the kynge, that thorow letters his wicked deuyce (which he ymagyned agaynst the Iewes) might be turned vpon his awne heade, and how he and his sonnes were hanged on the tre. For the which cause they called this daye Purim after the name of the lot, acordynge to all  $\text{f}$  wordes of this wrytinge: and what they the selues had sene, and what had happened vnto them.

E And the Iewes set it vp, and toke it vpon them and their sede, and vpon all such as ioyned themselves vnto them, that they wolde not mysse to obserue these two dayes yearly, acordynge as they were wryttē and appoynted, how  $\text{f}$  these dayes are not to be forgotten, but to be kepte of childers children amōge all kynreds in all londes and cities. They are the dayes of Purim, which are not to be ouerslipte amonge the Iewes, and the memoriall of them oughte not to perishe from their sede.

And quene Hester the daughter of Abihail and Mardocheus the Iewe, wrote with all auctorite, to confirme this seconde wrytinge of Purim, and sent the letters vnto all the Iewes in the hundreth and seuen and twente londes of  $\text{f}$  empyre of Ahasuerus, with frendly and faithfull wordes, to confirme these dayes of Purim, in their tyme appoynted, acordynge as Mardocheus the Iewe and Hester the quene had ordeined cōcernynge them: lyke as they vpon their soule and vpon their sede had cōfirmed the actes of the \* fastinges and of hir cōplainte. And Hester cōmaunded to stablish these actes of this Purim, and to wryte them in a booke.

The x. Chapter.

A ND the kynge Ahasuerus layed tribute A vpon the londe, and vpon the Iles of the See. As for all  $\text{f}$  worke of his power and auctoryte, and  $\text{f}$  greate worshippe of Mardocheus, which the kynge gaue him, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Media  $\tau$  Persia, For Mardocheus the Iewe was the seconde nexte vnto kynge Ahasuerus, and greate amonge  $\text{f}$  Iewes, and accepted amonge the multitude of his brethren, as one  $\text{f}$  seketh the welth of his people, and speaketh the best for all his sede.

The first Chapter.

IN the lōde of Hus<sup>a</sup> there was a man called Iob: an innocent and vertuous man, soch one as feared God, and eschued euell. This man had<sup>b</sup> vij. sonnes, and iij. daughters. His substaunce was vij. M. shepe, iij. M. camels, v. C. yock of oxen, v. C. she asses, and a very greate housholde: so <sup>y</sup> he was one of the most principall men amōge all them of the east countre. His sonnes now wente on euery man, and made banquettes: one daye in one house, another daye in another, and sent for their iij. sisters, to eate & drinke with them. So when they had passed ouer the tyme of their banquettinge rounde aboute, Iob sent for them, and clensed them agayne, stode vp early, and offred for euery one a brēt offeringe. For Iob thought thus: peraduenture my sonnes haue done some offence, and haue bene vnthankfull to God in their hertes. And thus dyd Iob euery daye.

Now vpon a tyme, when the seruauantes of God came and stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comest thou? Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: I haue gone aboute the lōde,<sup>a</sup> and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: hast thou not considered my seruauant Iob, how that he is an innocēt and vertuous mā: soch one as feareth God, and eschueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? Sathan answered, and sayde vnto the LORDE: Doth Iob feare God for naught? hast thou not preserued him, his house, and all his substaunce on euery syde? hast thou not blessed the workes of his bondes? Is not his possession encreaced in the londe? But laye thyne honde vpō him a litle, touch once all that he hath, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: lo all that he hath, be in thy power: only vpon him self se that thou laye not thine honde. Then wente Sathan forth from the LORDE.

and daughters were eatinge, and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, there came a messaunger vnto Iob, and sayde: Whyle the oxen were a plowinge, and the Asses goinge in the pasture besyde them: the Sabees came in violently, and toke them all awaye: yee they haue slayne the seruantes with the sward, and I only ranne my waye, to tell the.

And whyle he was yet speakynge, there came another, and sayde: The fyre of God is fallen from heauen, it hath consumed a brēt vp all the shepe and seruantes: and I only ranne my waye, to tell the. In the meane season whyle he was yet speakinge, there came another, and sayde: The Caldees made thre armies, and fell in vpon the camels, which they haue caried awaye, yee and slayne the seruantes with the sward: and I only am gottē awaye, to tell the. Whyle he was speakinge, there came yet another, and sayde: Thy sonnes and daughters were eatinge and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, and sodenly there came a mightie greate wynde out off the South, and smote the iij. corners of the house: which fell vpon thy children, so that they are deed: and I am gotten awaye alone, to tell the.

Then Iob stode vp, and rente his clothes shaued his heade, fell downe vpon the grounde, worshipped, and sayde: "Naked came I out of my mothers wombe, and naked shall I turne thither agayne. <sup>b</sup>The LORDE gaue, and the LORDE hath taken awaye (the LORDE hath done his pleasure) now <sup>c</sup>blessed be <sup>g</sup>name off the LORDE. In all these thinges dyd Iob not offende, ner murmured foolishly agaynst God.

The ij. Chapter.

IT happened also apon a tyme, "that when the seruantes of God came and stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them, and stode before him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comest thou? Sathan answered and sayde: "I haue gone aboute the lōde, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathan: Hast thou not considered my seruant Iob, how that he is an innocent and vertuous man such one as feareth God, and eschueueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? But thou mouedest me agaynst him, to punysh him: yet is it in wayne, for he contynueth still in his godlynesse.

Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: Skynne for skynne? yee a man will geue all <sup>g</sup>euere he hath, for his life. But laye thine honde vpon him, touch him once vpon the bone and flesh, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: lo, there hast thou him in thy power, but spare his life.

So wente Sathan forth from the LORDE, and smote Iob with maruelous sore byles, from the sole off the fote vnto his crowne: so that he sat vpon the grounde in the ashes, and scraped of the etter off his sores with a potsherde.

Then sayde his wife vnto him: "Dost thou yet cōtynue in thy perfectnesse? curse God, and dye. But Iob sayde vnto her: Thou speakest like a foolish womā. Seinge we haue receaued prosperite at the honde of God, wherefore shulde we not be content with aduersite also? "In all these thinges, dyd not Iob synne with his lippes.

Now when Iobs frendes herde of all <sup>g</sup>trouble, that happened vnto him, there came thre off them, euery one from his owne place: namely, Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad the Suhite, and Sophar the Naamathite.

For they were agreed together to come, to shewe their compassion vpon him, and to comforte him. So when they lifte vp their eyes a farre off, they knewe him not.

Then they cried, and wepte: then euery one off them rente his clothes, and sprynckled dust vpon their heades in the ayre. They sat them downe by him also vpon the grounde, vij. dayes and vij. nightes. Nether was there eny of them that spake one worde vnto him, for they sawe that his payne was very greate.

The iij. Chapter.

AFTER this opened Iob his mouth, and cursed his daye, and sayde: "lost be that daye, wherin I was borne: and the night, in the which it was sayde: there is a manchild conceived. The same daye be turned to darknesse, and not regarded of God from aboue, nether be shyned vpon with light: but be couered with darcknesse, and the shadowe of death. Let the dymme cloude fall vpon it, and let it be lapped in with sorowe. Let the darckstorne ouercome y<sup>e</sup> night, let it not be reckened amonge the dayes off the yeaere, ner counted in the monethes. Despyed be that night, and discommended: let them that curse the daye, gene it their curse also, euen those that be ready to rayse vp Leuiathan. Let the starres be dymme thorow darcknesse of it. Let it loke for light, but let it se none, nether the rysynge vp of the fayre mornynge: because it shut not vp the wombe that bare me, ner hyd these sorowes fro myne eyes.

B Alas, why dyed I not in y<sup>e</sup> byrth? "Why dyd not I perysh, as soone as I came out of my mothers wōbe? Why set they me vpō y<sup>r</sup> knees? Why gaue they me suck with their brestes? Then shulde I now haue lyen still, I shulde haue slepte, and bene at rest: like as the kynges ād lordes of y<sup>e</sup> earth, which buylde them selues speciall places: As the prynces that haue greate substaunce of golde, ⁊ their houses full of syluer. O that I vtterly had no beyng, or were as a thīge borne out of tyme (that is put asyde) ether as yonge children, which neuer sawe the light. There must the wicked cease from their tyranny, there such as are ouerlaboured, be at rest: there are those letten out fre, which haue bene in preson, so that they heare nomore the voyce of the oppressoure: There are small and greate: the bonde man, and he that is fre frō his master.

Wherefore is the light geuen, to him that is in mysery? and life vnto them, that haue heuy hertes? (Which longe for death, and it commeth not: for yf they might fynde their graue, they wolde be maruelous glad, as those that dygge vp treasure) To the man whose waye is hyd, which God kepeth backe from him.

This is the cause, that I syghe before I eate, and my roarynges fall out like a water floude. For the thyng that I feared, is come vpon me: and the thyng that I was afraied of, is happened vnto me. Was I not happy? Had I not quyetnesse? Was I not in rest? And now commeth soch mysery vpon me.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THEN answered Eliphas of Theman and sayde vnto him: Yf we begynne to comon with the, peraduenture thou wilt be mys-content, but who can witholde himself from speakyng? Beholde, thou hast bene a teacher of many, and hast comforted the weery hondes.

Thy wordes haue set vp those that were fallen, thou hast refreshed the weake knees. But now that the plague is come vpon the, thou shrēkest awaye: now that it hath touched thyself, thou art faint harted. "Where is now thy feare of God, thy stedfastnesse, thy pacience, and the perfectnesse of thy life? Considre (I praye the) who euer peryshed, beyng an innocent? Or, when were the godly destroyed? "As for those that plowe wickednesse (as I haue sene myself) and sowe myschefe, they reape y<sup>e</sup> same. For whē God bloweth vpon them, they perysh, and are destroyed thorow the blast of his wrath. The roaryng of the lyon, the cryenge off the lyonesse, ⁊ y<sup>e</sup> teth off y<sup>e</sup> lyōs whelpes are brokē. The greate lyon perysheth, because he cā get no pray and the lyons whelpes are scatred abroad.

There is spoken vnto me a thyng in coun-
B cell, which hath geuen a terrible sounde in myne eare, with a vision in the night, "when men are fallen a slepe. Soch feare and drede came vpō me, that all my bones shoke. And when the wynde passed ouer by me, the hayres of my flesh stode vp.

Then stode there one before me, whose face I knewe not: an ymage there was, and the wether was still, so that I herde this voyce: Maye a man be iustified before God? "Maye there eny man be iudged to be cleue, by reason of his owne workes? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnesse amonge his owne seruantes, and proude disobedience amonge his angels.

How moch more thē shal they (that dwell in houses of claye, whose foundation is but earth) be moth eaten? They shalbe destroyed from the mornynge vnto the euenynge: yee they shall perish, or euer they be awarre: and be taken awaye so cleue, that none of thē shall remayne, but be deed, or euer they be awarre off it.

ignorant. "I haue sene my self, when the foolish was depe roted, that his bewty was sodely destroyed: that his children were without prosperite or health: that they were slayne in the dore, and no mā to delyuer them: <sup>b</sup>that his haruest was eaten vp off the hungrie: that the weapened man had spoyled it, and that the thirstie had droncke vp his riches. It is not the earth that bryngeth forth trauayle, nether commeth sorow out of <sup>c</sup>ȝ grounde: but it is man, that is borne vnto mysery, like as the byrde for to fle.

B But now will I speake off the LORDE, and talke of God: which doth thinges, that are vnsearcheable, <sup>d</sup>and marueles without nōbre: Which geueth rayne vpō the earth, and poureth water vpon all thinges: which setteth vp them of lowe degre, and sendeth prosperite, to those that are in heuynesse: Which destroyeth the deuyces of the sotyll, <sup>e</sup>so that they are not able to perfourme the thynges that they take in hōde: which compaseth <sup>f</sup>ȝ wyse in their owne craftynesse, and ouertroweth the counsell of the wicked: <sup>g</sup>In so moch that they runne in to darcknesse by fayre daye, and grope aboute them at the noone daye, like as in the night.

C Beholde, <sup>j</sup>happie is the man, whom God punysheth: therefore, despyse not thou <sup>k</sup>ȝ chastenyng of the Allmyghty. For though he make a wounde, he geueth a medicyne agayne: though he smyte, his honde maketh whole agayne.

He delyuereth the out of sixe troubles, so that in the seuenth there can no harme touch the. In the myddest of longer he saueth <sup>l</sup>ȝ from death: and when it is warre, from the power of the swearde.

He shall kepe the from the perlous tonge so that when trouble commeth, thou shalt not nede to feare. <sup>m</sup>In destrucion and dertth thou shalt be mery, and shalt not be afrayed for the bestes of the earth: But the castels in the londe shal be confederate with the, <sup>n</sup>that the bestes of the felde shal geue the peace:

Yee thou shalt se, that thy dwellynge place shalbe in rest: thou shalt beholde thy substaunce, and be nomore punyshed for synne. Thou shalt se also, that thy sede shall encrease, and that thy posterite shalbe as the grasse vpon the earth. Thou shalt come to thy graue in a fayre age, like as <sup>o</sup>ȝ corne sheeues are brought in to the barne in due season. Lo, this is the matter, as we oure selues haue proued by experience. Therefore now that thou hearest it, take better hede to thyself.

The vi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O that my misery A weere weyed, and my punyishment layed in the balauces: for then shulde it be heuyer, then the sonde of the see. This is the cause, that my wordes are so sorowfull.

For the allmyghty hath shott at me with his arowes, whose indignacion hath droncke vp my sprete, and <sup>p</sup>ȝ terrible feares of God fight agaynst me. Doth the wilde asse roare when he hath grasse? <sup>q</sup>Or crieth the ox, whē he hath fodder ynough? Maye a thyng be eaten vnseasoned, or without salt? What taist hath <sup>r</sup>ȝ whyte within the yoke an egg? The thinges that some tyme I might not awaye withall, are now my meate for very sorow. O that I might haue my desyre: O <sup>s</sup>ȝ God wolde graunte me the thyng, that I longe for: That he wolde begynne and smyte me: that he wolde let his honde go, <sup>t</sup>and hew me downe. Thē shulde I haue some cōforte: yee I wolde desyre him in my payne, that he shulde not spare, for I will not be agaynst <sup>u</sup>ȝ wordes of the holy one.

What power haue I to endure? Or what B is myne ende, that my soule might be paciēt? Is my strength the strength of stones? Or, is my flesh made of brasse? Am I able to helpe my self? Is not my strength gone from me, like as yf one withdrew a good dede from his frende, and forsoke the feare of God? Myne owne brethren passe ouer by me as the water-broke, that hastily runneth thorow <sup>v</sup>ȝ valleys. <sup>w</sup>But they that feare the horefrost, the snowe shal fall vpon them.

When their tyme cōmeth, they shalbe destroyed and perishe: and when they be set on fyre, they shalbe remoued out of their place, for the pathes  $\bar{y}$  they go in, are coked: they haist after vayne thynges, and shal perish. Considre the pathes off Themana,  $\tau$  the wayes off Saba, wherin they haue put their trust. Confounded are they, that put eny cōfidence in them: For whē they came to opteyne the thynges that they loked for, they were brought to confucion.

C Eue so are ye also come vnto me: but now that ye se my mysery, ye are afraied. Dyd I desyre you, to come hyther? Or, to geue me eny off youre substaunce? To delyuer me from the enemies honde, or to saue me from the power off the mightie? Teach me and I will holde my tonge: and yf I do erre, shewe me wherin.

Wherefore blame ye then the wordes, that are well and truly spoken? which of you can reprove them? Sauynge only that ye are sotylly to check mens sayenges, and can speake many wordes in the wynde. Ye fall vpon the fatherlesse,  $\bar{a}$ d go aboute to ouerthrowe youre owne frende. Wherefore loke not only vpon me, but vpon youre selues: whether I lye, or no. Turne in to youre owne selues (I praye you) be indifferent iudges, and considre myne vngyltynesse: whether there be eny vnrightuousnesse in my tonge, or vayne wordes in my mouth.

The viij. Chapter.

A IS not the life off mā vpon earth a very batayll? Are not his dayes, like the dayes off an hyred seruaunte? For like as a bonde seruaunt desyreth the shadowe, and as an hyrelinge wolde fayne haue an ende of his worke: Euen so haue I laboured whole monethes longe (but in vayne) and many a carefull night haue I tolde. When I layed me downe to slepe, I sayde: "O when shal I ryse? Agayne, I longed sore for the night. Thus am I full off sorowe, till it be dareke. My flesh is clothed with wormes, fylthynesse and dust: my skyne is withered, and crompted together:  $\bar{a}$  my dayes passe ouer more spedely, thē a weeuier can weeu out his webbe, and are gone, or I am aware. O remembre, that my life is but a wynde,  $\bar{a}$ d that myne eye shal nomore se the pleasures therof, yee and that none other mans eye shall se me eny more. For yf thou fasten thine eyes vpon me, I come to naught. like as a cloude is cōsumed and vanyshed awaye, euen so he that goeth downe to hell, commeth nomore vp, ner turneth agayne in to his house, nether shall his place knowe him eny more.

Therefore I will not spare my mouth, but will speake in the trouble of my sprete, in  $\bar{y}$  bytternesse of my mynde will I talke. Am I a see or a whallysh, that thou kepest me so in preson? When I thynke: my bedd shall comforte me, I shall haue some reffreshinge by talkynge with myself vpon my couche:  $\bar{a}$  Thē troublest thou me with dreames,  $\bar{a}$ d makest me so afraied throw visions, that my soule wyssheth rather to be hanged, and my bones to be deed.

I can se no remedy, I shall lyue nomore: O spare me then, for my dayes are but vayne.  $\bar{a}$  What is man, that thou hast him in soch reputacion, and testest so moch by him? Thou takest diligent care for him, and sodely doest thou trye him.

Why goest thou not fro me, ner lettest me alone, so longe till I swallow downe my spetle? I haue offended, what shal I do vnto  $\bar{y}$ , O thou preseruer off men? Why hast thou made me to stonde in thy waye, and am so heuy a burden vnto my self? Why doest thou not forgeue me my synne? Wherefore takest thou not awaye my wickednesse? Beholde, now must I slepe in the dust: and yff thou sekest me tomorow in the mornynge, I shalbe gone.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: How longe wilt thou talke of soch thynges? how longe shal thy mouth speake so proude wordes? Doth God peruerthe the thyngs that is lauffull? Or, doth the Allnightie destroye the thyngs that is right?  $\bar{a}$  Whē thy sonnes symed agaynst him, dyd not he punysh thē for their wickednesse? Yff thou woldest now resorte vnto God by tymes,  $\bar{a}$  and make thine humble prayer to  $\bar{y}$  Allmightie: yf thou woldest lyue a pure and a godly life: shulde he not wake vp vnto the immediatly,  $\tau$  geue the the bewtie of rightuousnesse agayne? In so moch, that where i so euer thou haddest litle afore, thou shuldest now haue greate abudaunce. Enquire of them that haue bene before the, search diligently amonge thy forefathers: Namely,  $\bar{y}$  we are but of yesterdaye, and conside not, that oure dayes vpon earth are buth a very shadow. "They shall shewe the, they shall tell the, yee they will gladly confesse the same.

B Maye a resshe be grene without moystnesse? maye the grasse growe without water? No: but (or euer it be shot forth, and or euer it be gathered) it wythereth, before eny other herbe. Euen so goeth it with all them, that forget God: and euen thus also shal the ypocrytes hope come to naught. His confidence shalbe destroyed, for he trusteth in a spyders webbe.

He leeneth him vpon his house, but he shal not stonde: he holdeth hym fast by it, yet shal he not endure. Oft tymes a thinge doth florish, and men thynke that it maye abyde the Sonneshyne: it shuteth forth the braunches in his garden, it taketh many rotes, in so moch that it is like an house off stones. But yf it be taken out off his place, every man denyeth it, sayenge: I knowe the not. Lo, thus is it with him, that reioyseth in his owne doinges: and as for other, they growe out of the earth.

Beholde, God will not cast away a vertuous man, nether wil he helpe the vngodly. Thy mouth shall he fyll with laughyng, and thy lypes with gladnesse. They that hate the, shalbe confounded, and y dwellices of y vngodly shal come to naught.

The iiij. Chapter.

A IOB answered, and sayde: "As for y I knowe it is so of a treuth, y a man compared vnto God, can not be iustified. Yf he wil argue with him, he shall not be able to answere him vnto one amonge a thousande. He is wyse of hert, and mightie in strength. Who euer prospered, that toke parte agaynst him? He translateth the moūtaines, or euer they be awarre, and ouerthroweth them in his wrath. He remoueth the earth out of hir place, that hir pilers shake withall. He commaundeth the Sōne, and it ryseth not: he closeth vp the starres, as it were vnder a signet. He himselfe alone spredeth out y heauens, and goeth vpon the waves of the see. He maketh the waynes of heauen, the Orions, the * vij. starres and the secrete places of the south. He doth greate thinges, such as are vnsearchable, yee and wonders without nombre.

Yf he came by me, I might not loke vpon him: yf he wente his waye, I shulde not perceaue it. Yf he be haisty to take eny thinge awaye, who wil make him restore it agayne? Who wil saye vnto him: what doest thou? "He is God, whose wrath no man maye withstode: but the proudest of all must stonpe vnder him. How shulde I then answere him? or, what wordes shulde I fynde out agaynst him? Yee though I be righteous, yet will I not geue him one worde agayne, but mekely subynnte my self to my iudge. All be it that I call vpon him, and he heare me, yet am I not sure, y he hath herde my voyce: he troubleth me so with the tempest, and woundeth me out of measure without a cause. He will not let my sprete be in rest, but fylleth me with bytternesse.

Yf men will speake of strength, he is the strōgest of all: yf mē will speake of righteousness, who darre be my recorde? yf I will iustifie my self, myne owne mouth shall cōdemne me: yf I will put forth my self for a perfecte man, he shal proue me a wicked doer: For that I shulde be an innocent, my cōscience knoweth it not, yee I my self am weery off my life.

This one thīge wil I saye: "He destroyeth both the righteous and vngodly. And though he slaye sodenly with the scourge, yet laugheth he at the punyshment of the innocent. As for the worlde, he geueth it ouer in to the power of the wicked, such as the rulers be, wherof all londes are full. Is it not so? where is there eny, but he is soch one?

My dayes haue bene more swifte, then a runner: they are gone sodenly, and haue sene no good thinge. They are passed awaye, as the shippes that be good vnder sale, and as the Aegle that haisteth to the pray. When I am purposed to forget my complainynges to chaunge my countenance, and to cōforte my self: then am I afayred of all my workes, for I knowe, thou faouorest not an euell doer. Yf I be then a wicked one, why haue I laboured in vayne? Though I washed my self with snowe water, and made myne hondes neuer so clene, yet shuldest thou dyppe me in y myre, and myne owne clothes shulde defyle me. For he y I must geue answere vnto, and with whom I go to lawe, is not a man as

I am. Nether is there eny dayes man to reprove both the partes, or to laye his hōde betwixte vs. Let him take his rod awaye from me, yee let him make me nomore afrayed of him, and then shal I answere him without eny feare. For as longe as I am in soch fearfulnessse, I can make no answere: And why? it greueth my soule to lyue.

The x. Chapter.

NEUERTHELESSE, now will I put forth my wordes: I wil speake out of the very heuynesse off my soule, and will saye vnto God: O do not condemne me, but shewe me the cause, wherfore thou iudget me on this maner. Thinkest thou it well done, to oppresse me, to cast me of (beinge a worke of thy hondes) and to manteyne the counsell of thy vngodly? Hast thou fleszshy eyes then, or doest thou loke as man loketh? Are thy dayes as the dayes of man, and thy yeares as mans yeares? that thou makest soch inquisition for my wickednesse, and searchest out my synne? where as (notwithstondinge) thou knowest that I am no wicked person, & that there is no man able to deluyer me out of thine honde. "Thy hondes haue made me, & fashioned me altogether rounde aboute, wilt thou then destroye me sodely? O remembre (I beseke the) how that thou madest me of the mould of the earth, and shalt brynge me to earth agayne.

Hast thou not milked me, as it were mylck: and turned me to cruddes like chese? Thou hast couered me with skynne and flesh, and ioyned me together with bones & synowes. Thou hast graunted me life, and done me good: and the diligent hede that thou tokest vpon me, hath preserued my sprete.

Though thou hydest these thinges in thine hert, yet am I sure, that thou remembrest the all. Wherfore didest thou kepe me, when I synned, and hast not elensed me fro myne offence? Yf I do wickedly, wo is me therefore: Yf I be righteous, yet darre I not lift vp my heade: so full am I of confucion, and se myne owne misery.

Thou huntest me out (beynge in heuynesse) as it were a Lyon, and troublest me out of measure. Thou bringest fresh witnesses agaynst me, thy wrath increasest thou vpon me, very many are the places that I am in. Wherfore hast thou brought me<sup>a</sup> out of my mothers wombe? O that I had perished, & that no eye had sene me. Yf they had caried me to my graue, as soone as I was borne, then shulde I be now, as though I had neuer bene.

Shall not my short life come soone to an ende? O holde the frome, let me alone, that I maye ease myself a litle: afore I go thither, from whence I shal not turne agayne: Namely, to that londe of darknesse & shadowe of death: yee in to that darek cloudy londe & deadly shadowe, where as is no ordre, but terrible feare as in the darknesse.

The xi. Chapter.

THEN answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: Shulde not he that maketh many wordes, be answered? Shulde he that babbleth much, be commended therein? Shulde men geue eare vnto the only? Thou wilt laugh other men to scorne, & shal no body mocke the agayne? Wilt thou saye vnto God: The thinge that I take in honde, is perfecte, & I am elene in thy sight? O that God wolde speake, and open his lippes agaynst the, that he might shewe the (out of his secrete wysdome) how manyfolde his lawe is: then shuldest thou knowe, that God had forgotten the, because of thy synnes.

Wilt thou fynde out God with thy sekyng? wilt thou attayne to the perfectnesse of the Allnightie? He is hyer the heauē, what wilt thou do? Deper the hell, how wilt thou then knowe him? His length exceedeth the length of the earth, and his bredth & bredth of the see. Though he turne all thinges vp syde downe, close them in, or thrust the together, who darre check him therfore?

For it is he, that knoweth the vanite of men: he seyth their wickednesse also, shulde he not then consider it? A vayne body exalteth him self, and the sonne of man is like a wyld asses foale. Yf thou haddest now a right herte, & liftest vp thine hondes towarde him: yf thou woldest put awaye the wickednesse, which thou hast in honde, so that no vngodlynesse dwelt in thy house: Then mightest thou lift vp thy face without shame, the shuldest thou be sure, and haue no nede to feare.

Then shuldest thou forget thy misery, and thyneke nomore vpon it, then vpon the waters that runne by. Then shulde thy life be as cleare as the noone daye, and sprynge forth as the mornynge. Then mightest thou haue comfort, in the hope that thou hast: ⁊ slepe quietly, when thou art buried. Then shuldest thou take thy rest, and no mā to make the afraied, yee many one shulde set moch by the. As for the eyes of the vngodly, they shal be consumed, and not escape: their hope shalbe misery and sorow of mynde.

The xij. Chapter.

A SO Iob answered, and sayde: Then (no doute) ye are the men alone, and wysdome shal perish with you. But I haue vnderstōdinge as well as ye, and am no lesse then ye. Yee who knoweth not these thinges? Thus he that calleth vpō God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his neyghboure: the godly ⁊ innocent man is laughed to scorne. Godlynesse is a light despysed in f hertes of the rich, ⁊ is set for them to stamble vpon.

The houses of robbers are in wealth and prosperite, ⁊ they that maliciously medle agaynst God, dwel without care: yee God geueth all thinges richely with his honde.

B Axe the catell, ⁊ they shal enfourme the: the foules of the ayre, and they shall tell f: Speake to the earth, and it shall shewe the: Or to the fysles of the see, and they shal certifie the. What is he, but he knoweth, that f hōde of the LORDE made all these? In whose honde is the soule of euery luyng thinge, and the breth of all men. Haue not the eares pleasure in hearinge, and the mouth in tastinge the thinge that it eateth? Amonge olde persones there is wysdome, and amonge the aged is vnderstōdinge. Yee with God is wysdome and strength, it is he that hath counsell ⁊ foreknowlege. Yf he breake downe a thinge, who can set it vp agayne? Yf he shutt a thinge, who wil open it? Beholde, yf he witholde the waters, they drye vp: Yf he let thē go, they destroye the earth. With him is strength and wysdome: he knoweth both the disceauer, and him that is disceaued.

C He carieth awaye the wyse men, as it were a spoyle, and bryngeth the iudges out of their wyttes. He lowseth the gyrdle of kynges, and gyrdeth their loynes with a boude, he ledeth awaye the prestes in to captiuyte, and turneth the mightie vp syde downe. He taketh the verite from out of the mouth, ⁊ disapoynteth f aged of their wysdome. He poureth out confucion vpon prynces, and cōforteth them that haue bene oppressed. Loke what lyeth hyd in darcknesse, he declareth it opely: and the very shadowe of death bringeth he to light. He both increaseth the people, and destroyeth them: He maketh them to multiplie, and dryueth them awaye. He chaungeth the herte of the prynces and kynges of the earth, and disapoynteth them: so that they go wādringe out of the waye, and grope in the darcke without light, stackeringe to and fro like droncken men.

The xij. Chapter.

LO, all this haue I sene with myne eye, ⁊ herde with myne eare, ⁊ vnderstonde it. Loke what ye knowe, that same do I knowe also, nether am I inferior vnto you. Neuerthelesse I am purposed to talke with the Allmightie, and my desyre is to comon with God. As for you, ye are workmasters of lyes: and vnprofitable Phisicians alltogether. Wolde God ye kepte youre tonge, that ye might be taken for wyse men! Therfore heare my wordes, and pondre the sentence of mylippes. Will ye make answer for God with lyes, and māteyne him with disceate? Wil ye accepte f personne of God, and intreate for him? Shal that helpe you, when he calleth you to rekenyng? Thynke ye to begyle him, as a man is begyled? Punysh you shall he and reproue you, yf ye do secretly accepte eny personne. Shall he not make you afraied, when he sheweth himself? Shal not his terrible feare fall vpō you? youre remembraunce shalbe like the dust, ⁊ youre pryde shalbe turned to claye.

B Holde youre tonges now, and let me speake, for there is some thinge come in to my mynde. Wherefore do I beare my flesh in my teth, and my soule in myne hondes? Lo, there is nether cōforte ner hope for me, yf he wil slaye me. But yf I shewe and reproue myne owne wayes in his sight, he is euen the same, that maketh me whole: and why? there maye no Ypocrite come before him, Heare my wordes, and pondre my sayenges with youre eares. Beholde, though sentence were geuen vpon me, I am sure to be knowne for vngilty. What is

C Withdrawe thine honde fro me, & let not the fearfull drede of the make me afraied. And then sende for me to the lawe, & I maye answer for my self: or els, let me speake, and geue thou the answer. How greate are my myszdedes & synnes? Let me knowe my trasgressions & offences. Wherefore hydest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemye? Wilt thou be so cruell & extreme vnto a flyenge leaf, and folowe vpon drye stubble? that thou layest so sharply to my charge, and wilt vtterly vndoo me, for & synnes of my yowth? Thou hast put my fote in the stockes: thou lokest narrowly vnto all my pathes, & marcest the steppes of my fete: where as I (notwithstandinge) must consume like as a foule carion, and as a cloth that is moth eaten.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A MAN that is borne of a woman, hath but a shorte tyme to lyue, and is full of dyuerse miseries. He cometh vp, and falleth awaye like a floure. He flyeth as it were a shadowe, and neuer continueth in one state. Thinkest thou it now well done, to open thine eyes vpon soch one, and to brynge me before the in iudgment? Who can make it cleane, that commeth of an vnclene thinge? No body. The dayes of man are shorte, & nombre of his monethes are knowne only vnto the. Thou hast apoynted him his boundes, he can not go beyonde them. Go from him, that he maye rest a litle: vntill his daye come, which he loketh for, like as an hyrelinge doth.

B Yf a tre be cutt downe, there is some hope yet, that it will sproute and shute forth the branches againe: For though a rote be waxen olde and deed in the grounde, yet whē the stocke getteth the sent of water, it will budde, and brynge forth bowes, like as when it was first planted. But as for man, when he is deed, perished and consumed awaye, what becommeth of him? The floudes when they be dried vp, & the ryuers when they be emptye, are fylled agayne thorow the flowinge waters of the see: but when man slepeth, he ryseth not agayne, vntill the heauen perish: he shal not wake vp ner ryse out of his slepe. O that thou woldest kepe me, and hyde me in the hell, vntill thy wrath were stilled: & to appoynte me a tyme, wherein thou mightest remembre me. Maye a deed man lyue agayne? All the dayes of this my pilgrymage am I lokinge, when my chaunginge shal come. Yf thou woldest but call me, I shulde obeie the: only despyse not the worke of thine owne handes.

For thou hast nombred all my goynges, yet be not thou to extreme vpon my synnes. Thou hast sealed vp myne offences, as it were in a bagg: but be mercifull vnto my wickednesse. The mountaynes fall awaye at the last, the rockes are remoued out of their place, the waters pearse thorow the very stones by litle and litle, the floudes washshe awaye the grauell & earth: Euen so destroyest thou the hope of man in like maner. Thou prenaylest agaynst him, so that he passeth awaye: thou chaungest his estate, and puttest him from the. Whether his children come to worshipe or no, he can not tell: And yf they be men of lowe degre, he knoweth not. Whye he lyueth, his flesh must haue trauaile: and whye the soule is in him, he must be in sorowe.

The xv. Chapter.

THEN answered Eliphas the Themanite. and sayde: Shulde a wyse man geue soch an answer (as it were one that spake in the wynde) and fylly his stomacke with anger? Thou reprocuest with wordes, that are nothinge wroth: and speakest the thinges, which can do no good. As for shame, thou hast set it asyde, els woldest thou not make so many wordes before God: but thy wickednesse teacheth thy mouth, and so thou hast chosen the a craftie tonge. Thine owne mouth condemneth the, and not I: yee thine owne lippes shappe the an answer. Art thou the first man, that euer was borne? Or, wast thou made before the hylles? hast thou herde the secrete counsell of God, that all wysdome is to litle for &? What knowest thou, & we knowe not? What vnderstondest thou, but we can the same? With vs are olde and aged men, yee soch as haue lyued longer then thy forefathers.

Dost thou nomore regarde the comforte of God? but thy wicked wordes will not suffre the. Why doth thine herte make the so proude? Why stondest thou so greatly in thine owne conceate? Where vnto loke thine eyes, y thy mynde is so puft vp agaynst God ⁊ letest soch wordes go out of thy mouth? What is man, that he shulde be vnclane? what hath he (which is borne of a woman) wherby he might be knowne to be righteous? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnesse amōge his owne sanctes: ⁊ yee the very hea- uens are vnclane in his sight. How moch more then an abhominable and vyle mā, which dryncketh wickednesse like water? I will tell the, heare me: I wil shewe the a thinge, that I knowe: which wyse men haue tolde, ⁊ hath not bene hyd from their fathers: vnto whom only the loude was geuen, that no straunger shulde come amoung them.

C The vngodly despayreth all the dayes of his life, ⁊ the nombre of a tyrauntes yeares is vnknowne. A fearfull sounde is euer in his eares, ⁊ when it is peace, yet feareth he destruccio: He beleueth neuer to be deluyered out of darcknesse, the swerde is allwaye before his eyes. When he goeth forth to get his luyng, he thinketh planely, that the daye of darcknesse is at honde. Sorow and carefulnesse make him afrayed, ⁊ cōpasse him rounde aboute, like as it were a kinge with his hoost redy to the battayll. For he hath stretched out his honde agaynst God, ⁊ armed himself agaynst y Allmightie. He runneth proudly vpon him, ⁊ with a stiff necke fighteth he agaynst him: where as he couereth his face with fatnesse, and maketh his body well lykyng. Therefore shall his dwellyng be in desolate cities, ⁊ in houses which no mā inhabiteth, but are become heapes of stones.

D He shall not be rich, nether shall his substance continue, ner encrease vpon earth. He shal neuer come out of darcknesse, the flame shal drye vp his braunches, with y blast of the mouth of God shal he be takē awaie. He wil nether applye himself to faithfulness ner treuth, so sore is he disceaue with vanite.

He shall perish, afore his tyme be worne out, and his honde shal not be grene. He shal be pluckte of as an vntymely grape from y vyne, and shal let his floure fall, as the olyue doth. For the congregation of Ypoerites is vnfrutefull, ⁊ the fyre shal consume the houses of soch, as are gredy to receaue giftes. He conceaueth trauayle, he beareth myschefe, ⁊ his body bryngeth forth disceate.

The xvi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: I haue oft tymes herde soch thinges. Miserable geuers of comforte are ye, all the sorte of you. Shall not thy vayne wordes come yet to an ende? Or, hast thou yet eny more to saye? I coude speake, as ye do also. But wolde God, that youre soule were in my soules steade: then shulde I heape vp wordes agaynst you, and shake my heade at you. I shulde comforte you with my mouth, and release youre payne with y talkinge of my lyppes. But what shall I do? For all my wordes, my sorow wil not ceasse: and though I holde my tōge, yet wil it not departe fro me. And now that I am full of payne, and all that I haue destroyed (wherof my wryncles beare wytnesse) there stōdeth vp a dyssembler to make me answer with lyes to my face. He is angrie at me, he hateth me, and gnasseth vpon me with his teth. Myne enemy skouleth vpon me with his eyes.

B They haue opened their mouthes wyde vpon me, ⁊ smytten me vpon the cheke despitefully. they haue eased the selues thorow myne aduersite. God hath geuen me ouer to the vngodly, and deluyered me in to the hondes of y wicked. I was somtyme in wealth, but sodenly hath he brought me to naught. He hath taken me by the necke, he hath rente me, and set me, as it were a marck for him to shute at. He hath compased me rounde aboute with his dartes, he hath wounded my loynes, ⁊ not spared. My bowels hath he poured vpon the grounde. He hath geuē me one wounde vpon another, and is fallē vpon me like a giaunte. I haue sowed a sack cloth vpon my skynne, and lye with my strength in the dust.

C My face is swollē with wepinge, ⁊ myne eyes are waxen dynme. Howbeit there is no wickednesse in my hondes, and my prayer is clene. O earth, couer not my bloude, and let my crienge fynde no rowme. For lo, my witnesse is in heauen, and he that knoweth me, is aboute in the heyth. My frendes laugh me to scorne, but myne eye poureth out teares vnto God. Though a body might plete with God, as one man doth with another, yet the nombre of my yeares are come, ⁊ I must go the waye, from whence I shal not turue agayne.

The xviij. Chapter.

A MY breth sayleth, my dayes are shortened, I am harde at deathes dore. I haue diseaued no man, yet must myne eye cōtinue in heuynesse. O delyuer me, and set me by the, who shall then be able to thrust my hondes together? Thou hast with holdē their hertes from vnderstōdinge, therefore shall they not be set vp an hve. He promisetht his frēdes parte of his good, but his owne childrē spende it. He hath made me as it were a byworde of the comon people, I am his gestinge stocke amōge thē. My countenance is heuy for very anger, ⁊ the membres of my body are become like a shadowe. Vertuous mē therefore shall wel cōsidre this, and the innocent shal take parte agaynst the Ypocrite.

B The righteous wil kepe his waye, and he ŷ hath cleane handes, wil euer be stronger ⁊ stronger. As for you, turne you, ⁊ get you hence, for I can not se one wyse mā amonge you. My dayes are past, my thoughtes are vanished awaye, which haue vexed myne herte, chaunginge the night in to daye, ⁊ ŷ light in to darcknes. Though I tary neuer so moch, yet the graue is my house, and I must make my bed in the darcke. I call corrupcion my father, and the wormes call I my mother and my sister. What helpeth then my longe tarienge? Or, who wil fulfill the thinge, that I loke for? All that I haue, shall go downe in to the pytt, ⁊ lye with me in the dust.

The xviij. Chapter.

A THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: when wil ye make an ende of youre wordes? Marcke well, and considre, we wil speake also. Wherefore are we counted as beestes, ⁊ reputed so vyle in youre sight? Why destroyest thou thy self with anger? Shal ŷ earth be forsaken, or the stones remoued out of their place because of ŷ? Shal not the light of the vngodly be put out? yee the flame of his fyre shal not burne. The light shalbe darcke in his dwellinge, ⁊ his candle shalbe put out with him. His presumptuous goinges shal be kepte in, and his owne counsell shal cast him downe. For his fete shalbe taken in the nett, and he shal walke in the snare. His fote shalbe holden in the gilder, and the thurstie shal catch him. The snare is layed for him in the grounde, and a pyttall in the waye.

Fearfulnesse shal make him afraied on euery syde, that he shall not knowe, where to get out. Honger shalbe his substaunce, and mysfortune shall hange vpon him. He shall eate his owne skynne, yee his owne armes shall he deuoure, beyng a firstborne of death. All his comforte and hope shal be roted out of his dwellinge, very fearfulnesse shall brynge him to the kyng. Other men shall dwel in his house (which now is none of his) and brymstone shalbe scatered vpon his habitacion. His rotes shalbe dried vp beneth, ⁊ aboue shall his haruest be cut downe. His remembrance shall perish from the earth, ⁊ his name shall not be praysed in the stretes: he shalbe dryuen from the light in to darcknesse, and be cast cleue out of the worlde. He shall nether haue children ner kynszfolkes amonge his people, no ner eny posterite in his cōtre: yonge ⁊ olde shalbe astonysht at his death. Soch are now the dwellinges of the wicked, and this is ŷ place of him that knoweth not God.

The xix. Chapter.

IOB answered, ⁊ sayde: How lōge wil ye vex me mynde, ⁊ trouble me with wordes? Lo, ten tymes haue ye reprovied me: are ye not ashamed, for to laugh me so to scorne? yf I go wronge, I go wronge to my self. But yf ye wil enhaunce youre selues agaynst me, ⁊ accuse me to be a wicked personne because of the shame that is come vpon me: knowe this then, ŷ it is God, which hath handled me so violently, ⁊ hath compased me aboute with his scourges. Beholde, though I crie, yet violēce is done vnto me,<sup>a</sup> I can not be herde: Though I complaine, there is none to geue sentēce with me. He hath hedged vp my path, I cā not get awaye, he hath set darcknesse in my gate.

He hath spoyled me of myne honoure, ⁊ taken the crowne awaye fro my heade. He hath destroyed me on euery syde, and I am vndone: My hope hath he taken awaye fro me, as it were a tre plucte vp by the rote. His wrath is kyndled agaynst me, he taketh me, as though I were his enemy.

His men of warre came together, which made their waye ouer me, and beseged my dwellinge rounde aboute. "He hath put my brethren farre awaye fro me, and such as were of myne acquaintaunce, are become straungers vnto me. Myne owne kynsz folkes haue forsaken me, and my frendes haue put me out of remembrance. The seruauents and maydens of myne owne house take me for a straunger, and I am become as an aleaunt in their sight.

C When I call vpon my seruaut, he geueth me no answer: no though I praie him with my mouth. Myne owne wyfe maye not abyde my breth, I am fayne to speake fayre vnto the children of myne owne body. Yee the very deserte fooles despyse me, and when I am gone from them, they speake euell vpon me. All such as were my most familiers, abhorre me: and they whom I loued best, are turned agaynst me. My bone hangeth to my skynne, and the flesh is awaye, only there is left me the skynne aboute my teth. Haue pite vpon me, haue pite vpon me (o ye my frendes) for the hande of the LORDE hath touched me. Seynge God persecuteth me, wil ye vex me also? Haue ye not yet ynough of the trouble of my flesh?

D O that my wordes were written, O that they were put in a booke: wolde God they were graue with an yron pene in leade or in stone. For I am sure, that my redemer lyueth, and that I shall ryse out of the earth in the latter daye: that I shal be clothed againe with this skynne, and se God in my flesh. Yee I my self shal beholde him, not with other but with these same eyes. My reynes are consumed within me, when yee saye: Why do not we persecute him? we haue founde an occasion agaynst him. But bewarre of the swearde, for the swearde wyll be avenged of wickednesse, and be sure, that there is a iudgment.

The xx. Chapter.

A THEN answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: For the same cause do my thoughtes compell me to answer. And why? my mynde is tossed here and there. I haue sufficiently herde the checkyng & reprove, therefore am I purposed to make answer after my vnderstodginge. Knowest thou not this, namely: that from the begynninge (euer sence the creacion of man vpon earth) the prayse of the vngodly hath bene shorte, and that the ioye of Ypocrytes continued but y twyncklinge of an eye? Though he be magnified vp to the heaue, so that his heade reacheth vnto the cloudes: yet he perisheth at the last like donge: In so moch y they which haue sene him, saye: Where is he? He vanysheth as a dreame, so that he can no more be founde, & passeth awaye as a vision in y night. So that the eye which sawe him before, getteth now no sight of him, & his place knoweth him nomore. His childre go a begginge, their handes bringe the to sorow and heynessee.

From his youth his bones are ful of vyce, B which shal lie downe with him in y earth. Whc wickednesse is swete in his mouth, he hydeth it vnder his tonge. That he fauoureth, that wyl he not forsake, but kepeth it close in his throte. The meate that he eateth, shalbe turned to the poyson of serpentes within his body. The riches y he deuoureth, shal he perbreake agayne, for God shal drawe them out of his bely. The serpentes heade shal sucke him, and the adders tonge shal slaye him: so that he shal nomore se the ryuers and brokes of hony and butter: But labourer shal he, & yet haue nothinge to eate. Greate traualle shal he make for riches, but he shal not enioye them. And why? he hath oppressed the poore, and not helped them: houses hath he spoyled, and not buyded them. His bely coude neuer be fylled, therfore shal he perish in his couetousnesse. He deuoured so greedely, C y he left nothinge behynde, therfore his goodes shal not prospere. Though he had plenteousnesse of euery thinge, yet was he poore, & therfore he is but a wretch on euery syde.

For though y wicked haue neuer so moch to fyll his bely, yet God shal sende his wrath vpon him, and cause his battayll to rayne ouer him: so that yf he fle the yron weapens, he shal be shott with the stele bowe. The arrowe shal be taken forth, & go out at his backe, and a glisteringe swearde thorow y gall of him, feare shal come vpo him. There shal no darcknes be able to hyde him. An vnykndled fyre shal consume him, and loke what remayneth in his house, it shal be destroyed. The heauen shal declare his wickednesse, & the earth shal take parte agaynst him. The substance that he hath in his house, shalbe taken awaye and perish, in the daye of the LORDES wrath. "This is the porcion that y<sup>e</sup> wicked shal haue of God, and the heretage that he maye loke for of the LORDE.

The xxi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O heare my wordes, and amende youre selues. Suffre me a litle, that I maye speake also, and thē laugh my wordes to scorne, yf ye will. Is it with a man, that I make this disputaciō? Which yf it were so, shulde not my sprete be thē in sore trouble? Marck me well, be abaszshed, and laye youre hāde vpon youre mouth. For whē I pōndre & conside this, I am afayed, and my flesh is smytten with feare. <sup>a</sup>Wherefore do wicked mē lyue in health and prosperite, come to their olde age, & increase in riches? Their childers children lyue in their sight, & their generacion before their eyes.<sup>b</sup> Their houses are safe from all feare, for the rodd of God doth not smyte thē. Their bullocke gendreth, and that not out of tyme: their cow calueth, and is not vnfrutefull.

B They sende forth their children by flockes, and their sonnes lede the danche. <sup>c</sup>They beare with them tabrettes and harpes, and haue instrumentes of musick at their pleasure. They spende their dayes in welthyngesse: but sodenly they go downe to hell. They saye vnto God: go from vs, we desyre not the knowlege of thy wayes. <sup>d</sup>What maner of felowe is the Allmightie, that we shulde serue him? What profit shulde we haue, to submitte oure selues vnto him? Lo, there is vterly no goodnesse in them, therefore will not I haue to do with the counsell of the vngodly. <sup>e</sup>How oft shal the candle of y<sup>e</sup> wicked be put out? how oft commeth their destruccion vpon them? O what sorowe shall God geue them for their parte in his wrath? <sup>f</sup>Yee they shal be euen as chaffe before the wynde, and as dust that the storme carieth awaye.

C And though God saue their childrē from soch sorowe, yet wil he so rewarde the selues, that they shal knowe it. Their owne destruccion and misery shal they se with their eyes, and drynke of the fearfull wrath of the Allmightie. For whath careth he, what become of his housholde after his death? whose monethes passe awaye swifter then an arowe.

In as moch thē as God hath y<sup>e</sup> hyst power of all, who can teach him eny knowlege? One dyeth now when he is mightie & at his best, rich and in prosperite: euen when his bowels are at the fattest, and his bones full of mary. Another dyeth in sorowe and heuynesse, and neuer had good daies. Now slepe they both a like in the earth, & the wormes couer them. But I knowe what ye thinke, yee and what ye ymagin agaynst me vnrightuously. <sup>g</sup>For ye saye: where is the prynces palace? where is the dwellynge of the vngodly: Axe eny man that goeth by the waye, and (yf ye will not regarde their tokens & dedes) he shal tell you, <sup>h</sup>that the wicked is kepte vnto the daye of destruccion, and that the vngodly shalbe brought forth in the daye of wrath. Who darre reprove him for his wayes to his face? who rewardeth him for the vngraciousnesse that he doth? Yet shal he be brought to his graue, and watch amonge the heape of the deed. Thē shal he be fayne to be buried amoge the stones by the broke syde. All men must folowe him, & there are innumerable gone before him. O how wayne is the comforte y<sup>e</sup> ye geue me? Are not youre answers cleane contrary to right and treuth?

The xxiij. Chapter.

SO Eliphas the Themanite gaue answer, A & sayde: Maye a man be cōpared vnto God in wyszdome, though he seme to him self, for to be like him? What pleasure hath God in y<sup>e</sup> thou art rightuous? Or what doth it profite him, y<sup>e</sup> thy waies are perfecte? Is he afayed to reprove the, & to steppe forth with the in to iudgment? <sup>i</sup>Cōmeth not this for thy greate wickednesse,<sup>k</sup> & for thine vngracious dedes which are innumerable? Thou hast takē the pledge from thy brethrē for naught, & robbed the naked of their clothinge: <sup>l</sup>To soch as were weery, hast thou geuē no water to drynke, thou hast withdrawē bred frō the hungrie: Shulde soch one thē as vseth violēce, wrōge & oppression (doinge all thinges of parcialyte, & hauynge respecte of personnes) dwell in the lōde? Thou hast sent wyddowes awaye emptie and oppressed the poore fatherlesse.

Therefore art thou compased aboute with B snares on euery syde, & sodely vexed with

Now because y God is hyer thē the heauens, ⁊ because thou seist y the starres are so hye, wilt thou therefore saye: "Tush, how shulde God knowe? Doth his dominion reach beyonde the cloudes? Tush, the cloudes couer him, y he maye not se, for he dwelleth in heauen. Well, thou wilt kepe the olde waye, y all wicked mē haue gone: both olde ⁊ yonge, whose foundation is a runnyng water, which saye vnto God: go from vs, and after this maner: "Tush, what wil the Allmightie do vnto vs? where as he (not with stōdinge) fylleth their houses with all good. Which meanyng of the vngodly be farre fro me. For with ioy shal the godly, and with gladnesse shal the innocent se, that their increase shal be hewen downe, ⁊ their posterite consumed with the fyre.

¶ Therefore recoile the vnto God, ⁊ be content, so shal all thinges prospere with the right well. "Receau the lawe at his mouth, ⁊ laye vp his words in thine herte. For yf thou wilt turne to the Allmightie, thou shalt stonde fast, ⁊ all vnrightuousnesse shall be farre from thy dwelling: He shal geue the an haruest, which in plenty ⁊ abundaunce shall excede the dust of the earth, and the golde of Ophir like ryuer stones. Yee the Allmightie his owne self shalbe thine haruest, ⁊ the heape of thy money. Then shalt thou haue thy delyte in the Allmightie, ⁊ lift vp thy face vnto God. Thē shalt thou make thy prayer vnto him, ⁊ he shal heare the, ⁊ thou shalt kepe thy promyses. Thē, loke what thou takest in honde, he shal make it to prospere with the, and the light shall shyne in thy wayes. The xxiij. Chapter.

¶ JOB answered, and sayd: My sayenge is yet this daye in bytternes, and my hande heuy amonge my groninges. O that I might se him ⁊ fynde him: O that I might come before his seate, to pleate my cause before him, and to fyll my mouth with argumentes:

That I might knowe, what answere he wolde geue me: ⁊ that I might vnderstonde, what he wolde saye vnto me. Wil he pleate agaynst me with his greate power ⁊ strength, or wyll he leane him self vtterly vpon me? Oh no, let him not do so with me. But let hym geue me like power to go to lawe, then am I sure to wyne my matter. For though I go before, I fynde him not: yf I come behynde, I eā get no knowlege of him: Yf I go on the left syde to pondre his workes, I can not attayne vnto them: Agayne, yf I go on the right syde, he hydeth himself, y I can not se him. But as for my waye, he knoweth it: ⁊ trieth me as y golde in y fyre.

Neuertheles my fete kepe his path, his hye strete haue I holden, and not gone out of it. I haue not forsaken the cōmaundemēt of his lippes, but loke what he charged me with his mouth, that haue I shutt vp in my herte. It is he himself alone, who will turne him back? He doth as him listeth, and bryngeth to passe what he wil. He rewardeth me in to my bosome, ⁊ many other thinges mo doth he, as he maye by his power. This is y cause, that I shrenke at his presence, so that when I considre him, I am afraied of him. For in so much as he is God, he maketh my herte soft: and seynge that he is Allmightie, he putteth me in feare. Thus can not I get out of darcknesse, the cloude hath so couered my face.

The xxiij. Chapter.

CONSIDERINGE then that there is no tyme hyd from the Allmightie, how happeneth it, that they which knowe him, wil not regarde his dayes? For some mē there be, that remoue other mēs londe markes: that robbe them of their catell, and kepe the same for their owne: that dryue awaye the asse of the fatherlesse: that take y wyddowes oxe for a pledge: that thrust the poore out of the waye, ⁊ oppress the symple of the worlde together. Beholde, the wilde asses in y deserte go by tymes (as their maner is) to spoyle: Yee the very wildernesse ministrerth foode for their children. They reape the corne felde that is not their owne: and gather the grapes out of his vynyarde, whom they haue oppressed by violence. They are the cause y so many men are naked and bare, hauynge no clothes to couer them and kepe them from colde:

B So that when the showers in the mountaynes haue rayned vpon them, ⁊ they be all wett, they haue none other sueoure, but to kepe them amonge the rockes.

They spoyle the suckinge fatherlesse children, and put the poore in prison: In so moch that they let them go naked without clothinge, and yet the hungrie beare the sheeues. The poore are fayne to labour in their oyle mylles, yee and to treade in their wyne presses, and yet to suffre thyrst. <sup>a</sup>The whole cite crieth vnto the LORDE with sighinge, the soules of the slayne make their complaynte: But God destroyeth them not for all this, where as they (not with stōdinge) are rebellious and disobedient enemies: which seke not his light and waye, ner turne agayne in to his path. <sup>b</sup>Tymely in the mornyng do they aryse, to murthur the symple and poore, ⁊ in the night they go a stealinge.

C The eye of the vngodly is like the aduou-terer, that wayteth for the darknesse, and sayeth thus in him self: Tush, there shal no mā se me, ⁊ so he disgyseth his face. In the night season they search the houses, and hyde them selues in the daye tyme, but wil not knowe <sup>c</sup> light. For as soone as the daye breaketh, the shadowe of death commeth vpō them, and they go in horrible dareknesse. The vngodly is very swyft: O <sup>d</sup> his porciō also vpō earth were swyfter then <sup>e</sup> runnyng water, which suffreth not <sup>f</sup> shipmā to beholde the fayre ⁊ pleasaunt vyniades. O <sup>g</sup> they (for the wickednesse which they haue done) were drawn to the hell, sooner thē snowe melteth at the heate. O <sup>h</sup> all cōpassion vpon the were forgottē: <sup>i</sup> their daynties were wormes: that they were clene put out of remembraunce, ⁊ vtterly hewē downe like an vnfrutefull tre. They that manteyne the baren, ⁊ make them <sup>j</sup> they can not beare, ⁊ vnto wyddowes they do no good. They plucke downe the mightie with their power, ⁊ when they them selues are gotten vp, they are neuer without feare, as longe as they liue. And though they might be safe, yet they wil not receaue it, for their eyes loke vpon their owne wayes. They are exalted for a litle, but shortly are they gone, brought to extreme pouerte, ⁊ takē out of the waye: yee ⁊ vtterly plucke of as the eares of corne. Is it not so? Who wil thē reprove me as a liar, ⁊ saye <sup>k</sup> my wordes are nothinge worth?

The xxb. Chapter.

THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, ⁊ <sup>l</sup> sayde: Power ⁊ feare is with him aboue, that maketh peace (sittinge) in his hynesse, whose men of warre are innumerable, and whose light aryseth ouer all. <sup>m</sup>But how maye a man cōpared vnto God, be iustified? Or, how can he be clene, that is borne of a woman? Beholde, the Moone shyneth no thinge in comparison to him, ⁊ the starres are vnclene in his sight. How moch more thē, mā, that is but corrupcion: and the sonne of man, which is but a worme?

The xxvi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O how helpeth <sup>n</sup> thou the weake? what comforte geuest thou vnto him that hath no strēgth? Where is <sup>o</sup> thy cōcell <sup>p</sup> <sup>q</sup> thou shuldest geue him, which hath no wysdome? Wilt thou so shewe thine excellent rightuousnes? Before whom hast thou spoken those wordes? Who made the breth to come out of thy mouth? The giauntes ⁊ worthies <sup>r</sup> are slayne, ⁊ lye vnder <sup>s</sup> worlde with their cōpanions: yee ⁊ all they which dwell beneth in the hell are not hyd frō him, ⁊ the very destruccion it self eā not be kepte out of his sight. He stretcheth out <sup>t</sup> north ouer the emptie, ⁊ hāgeth <sup>u</sup> earth vpō nothinge. He byndeth <sup>v</sup> water in his cloudes, that they fall not downe together. He holdeth back his stole, that it eā not be sene, and spredeth his cloudes before it.

God forbydde, that I shulde graunte youre cause to be right. As for me, vntill myne ende come wil I neuer go fro myne innocency. My rightuous dealyngē wil I kepe fast, ⁊ not forsake it: For my conscience reproueth me not in all my conuersacion. Therefore myne enemy shalbe founde as the vngodly, ⁊ he ſ̄ taketh parte agaynst me, as the vnrightuous. What hope hath ſ̄ Ypocrite, though he haue greate good, and though God geue him riches after his hertes desyre? Doth God heare him the sooner, whē he crieth vnto

B him in his necessite? Hath he soch pleasure ⁊ deleyte in the Allmightie, that he darre allwaye call vpon God? I wil teach you in the name of God, ⁊ the thinge that I haue of ſ̄ Allmightie, wil I not kepe from you. Beholde, ye stonde in youre owne conceate, as though ye knew all thinges. Wherefore then do ye go aboute with soch vayne wordes, sayēge: This is the porcion that the wicked shall haue of God, ⁊ the heretage that Tyrantes shal receaue of ſ̄ Allmightie. Yf he get many childrē, they shal perish with the swearde, ⁊ his posterite shall haue scarcenesse of bred. Loke whom he leaueth behinde him, they shal dye ⁊ be buried, ⁊ no man shall haue pite

Though he haue as moch money as the dust of the earth, ⁊ raymēt as ready as the claye, he maye well prepare it: but the godly shal put it vpon him, and the innocēt shal deale out the money. His house shal endure as the moth, ⁊ as a bothe that the watch man maketh. When the rich man dyeth, he carieth nothinge with him: he is gone in ſ̄ twynklyngē of an eye. Destruction taketh holde vpo him as a water floude, ⁊ ſ̄ tēpest stealeth him awaye in the night season. A vehement wynde carieth him hence, ⁊ departeth: a storme plucketh him out of his place. It ruszheth in vpon him, and spareth him not, he maye not escape from the power therof. Than clappe mē their hōdes at him, yee and ieast of him, whē they loke vpon his place.

The xxviii. Chapter.

THERE are places where syluer is moltē, ⁊ where golde is tryed: where yron is dygged out of the grounde, ⁊ stones resoluēd to metall. The darcknes shal once come to an ende, he can seke out the grounde of all thinges: the stones, the darcke, ⁊ the horrible shadowe, with the ryuer of water parteth he a sunder the straunge people, ſ̄ knoweth no good neighbourheade: such as are rude, vnmanerly ⁊ boysteous. He bryngeth foode out of the earth, ⁊ ſ̄ which is vnder, consumeth he with fyre. There is founde a place, whose stones are clene Saphirs, and where ſ̄ clottes of the earth are golde. There is a waye also that the byrdes knowe not, that no vulturs eye hath sene: wherin ſ̄ proude ⁊ hye mynded walke not, ⁊ where no lyon commeth. There putteth he his honde vpon the stony rockes, ⁊ ouerthroweth the mountaynes. Ryuers floue out of the rockes, ⁊ loke what is pleasaunt, his eye seyth it. Out of droppes bryngeth he greate floudes together, ⁊ the thinge that is hyd bryngeth he to light. How commeth a man then by wysdome? Where is the place that men fynde vnderstandinge? Verely no man can tell how worthy a thinge she is, nether is she foude in the lōde of the lyuynge. The depe sayeth: she is not in me. The see sayeth: she is not with me. She can not be gotten for the most fyne golde, nether maye the pryce of her be bought with eny moneye. No wedges of golde of Ophir, no precious Onix stones, no Saphirs maye be compared vnto her. No, nether golde ner Christall, nether swete odours ner golden plate. There is nothinge so worthy, or so excellēt, as once to be named vnto her: for perfecte wysdome goeth farre beyonde thē all. The Topas that cōmeth out of Inde, maye in no wyse be likened vnto her: yee no maner of apparell how pleasaunt and fayre so euer it be.

From whēce then commeth wysdome? where is the place of vnderstandinge? She is hyd from the eyes of all men, yee ⁊ frō the foules of the ayre. Destruction ⁊ death saie: we haue herde tell of her with oure eares. But God seyth hir waie, ⁊ knoweth hir place. For he beholdeth the endes of the worlde, and loketh vpon all that is vnder the heauē. When he weyed the wyndes, ⁊ measured ſ̄ waters: when he set the rayue in ordre, and gaue the mightie floudes a lawe: Then dyd he se her, thē declared he her, prepared her and knewe her. And vnto man he sayde: "Beholde, to feare the LORDE, is wysdome: ⁊ to forsake euell, is vnderstandinge.

The iiii. Chapter.

A SO Iob proceeded and wote forth in his communicacion, sayenge: O y I were as I was in the monethes by past, ⁊ in the dayes whē God preserued me: when his light shyned vpon my heade: whē I wente after the same light ⁊ shyne euē throw the darknesse. As it stode with me, whē I was welthy ⁊ had ynough: whē God prospered my house: when the allmightie was with me: when my housholde folkes stode aboute me: whē my wayes ranne ouer with butter, ⁊ when the stony rockes gaue me ryuers of oyle: when I wente thorow the cite vnto the gate, ⁊ whē they set me a chayre in y strete: whē the yonge mē (as soone as they sawe me) hyd thē selues, ⁊ when the aged arose, ⁊ stode vp vnto me: whē the princes left of their talkinge, ⁊ laied their hāde to their mouth: whē the mightie kepte still their voyce, and whē their tonges cleued to the rofe of their mouthes. When all they y herde me, called me happe: ⁊ when all they y sawe me, wysshed me good. For I deluyered y poore whē he cried, ⁊ the fatherlesse y wanted helpe. He y shulde haue bene lost, gaue me a good worde, ⁊ y widdowes hert praised me. And why? I put vpon me rightuousnes, which couered me as a garnēt, ⁊ equite was my crowne. I was an eye vnto the blynde, ⁊ a fote to the lame. I was a father vnto the poore, ⁊ whē I knew not their cause, I sought it out diligētly. I brake the chafes of y vnrightuous, ⁊ plucte the spoyle out of their teth.

C Therefore, I thought verely, y I shulde haue dyed in my nest: ⁊ y my dayes shulde haue bene as many as the sondes of the see. For my rote was spred out by the waters syde, ⁊ the dew laye vpō my corne. My honoure increased more ⁊ more, and my bowe was euer the stronger in my hande. Vnto me men gaue eare, me they regarded, ⁊ with sylence they taried for my coucell. Yf I had spoken, they wolde haue it none other wayes, my wordes were so well taken amonge thē.

They taught for me, as the earth doth for the rayne: ⁊ gaped vpon me, as the grounde doth to receaue the latter shower. When I laughed, they knew well it was not earnest: ⁊ this testimony of my cōtenuance pleased thē nothinge at all. When I agreed vnto their waye, I was the chefe, ⁊ sat as a kynge amonge his seruautes: Or as one that comforteth soch as be in heuynesse.

The iiii. Chapter.

BUT now they that are my inferiours ⁊ A yonger then I, haue me in derision: ⁊ euē they, whose fathers I wolde haue thought scorne to haue set with the dogges of my catell. The power ⁊ strēth of their hādes might do me no good, ⁊ as for their age, it is spēt ⁊ past awaye without eny profit. For very misery ⁊ hunger, they wente aboute in the wilderness like wretches ⁊ beggers, pluckyng vp herbes from amonge the buszshes, ⁊ the Iunipers rote was their meate. And when they were dryuen forth, men cried after them, as it had bene after a thefe. Their dwellinge was beside foule brokes, yee in the caues ⁊ denmes of the earth. Vpō the drye heeth wōte they aboute crienge, ⁊ in the brome hilles they gathered them together. They were the children of fooles ⁊ vylanes, which are deed awaye frō the worlde. Now am I their songe, ⁊ am become their iestinge stocke. they abhorre me, they fle farre fro me ⁊ stayne my face with spetle. For y LORDE hath opened his quyuer, he hath hytt me, ⁊ put a brydle in my mouth. Vpon my right hāde they rose together agaynst me, they haue hurte my fete, made a waye to destroye me, ⁊ my path haue they clene marred. It was so easy for them to do me harme, that they neded no man to helpe thē. They fell vpon me, as it had bene y breakyng in of waters, ⁊ came in by heapes to destroye me. Fearfulnesse is turned agaynst me. Myne honoure vanisheth awaye more swiftly then wynde, ⁊ my prosperite departeth hēce like as it were a cloude. Therefore is my mynde poured full of heuynesse, ⁊ y dayes of trouble haue takē holde vpon me. My bones are pearced thorow in y night season, ⁊ my synewes take no rest. With all their power haue they chaunged my garnēt, ⁊ gyrded me therewith, as it were with a coate. I am euē as it were claye, ⁊ am become like aszshes & dust. Whē I crie vnto the, thou doest not heare me: & though I stonde before the, yet thou regardest me not. Thou art become myne enemye, & with thy violēt hāde thou takest parte agaynst me. In tymes past thou didest set me vp an bye, as it were aboute & winde, but now hast thou geuē me a very sore fall. Sure I am, & thou wilt delyuer me vnto death: where as a lodgyng is prepared for all mē lyuinge. Now vse not mē to do violēce vnto the, & are destroyed all-ready: but where hurte is done, there vse thei to helpe. Dyd not I wepe in & tyme of trouble? Had not my soule cōpassion vpō & poore? Yet neuerthelesse where as I looked for good, euell happened vnto me: and where as I waited for light, there came darcknesse. My bowels seeth with in me & take no rest, for & dayes of my trouble are come vpō me. Mekely & lowly came I in, yee & without eny displeasure: I stode vp in & cōgregacion, & commoned with the. But now I am a cōpanyon of dragons, & a felowe of Estriches. My skynne vpō me is turned to black, & my bones are brēt with heate: my harpe is turned to sorow, & my pipe to wepinge.

The xxi. Chapter.

I MADE a couenant with myne eyes, & I wolde not <sup>a</sup>loke vpō a dāsell. For how greate a porciō shal I haue of God frō aboue? & what enheritaunce frō & Almightie on hie? As for the vngodly & he & ioyneth himself to & cōpani of wicked doers shal not destruccion & misery come vpon him? <sup>b</sup>Doth not he se my wayes, & tell all my goings? Yf I haue cleued vnto vanite, or yf my fete haue runne to disceaue: let me be weyed in an eauen balannce, that God maye se my innocency. Yf so be that I haue withdrawn my fote out of the right waye, yf my hert hath folowed myne eye sight, yf I haue stayned or defyled my hōdes: O then is it reason that I sowe, and another eate: yee that my generacion and posterite be clene roted out. Yf my hert hath lusted after my neighbours wife, or yf I haue layed wayte at his dore: O then let my wife be another mans harlot, and let other lye with her. For <sup>c</sup>this is a wickednesse and synne, that is worthy to be punyshed, yee a fyre that vtterly shulde consume, & rote out all my substance. Dyd I euer thynke scorne to do right vnto my seruauētes and maydens, when they had eny matter agaynst me? But seynge that God wil sytt in iudgment, what shal I do? And for so much as he wil nedes vyset me, what answere shal I geue him? He that fashioned me in my mothers wombe, made he not him also? were we not both shapen alyke in oure mothers bodies? When the poore desyred eny thinge at me, haue I denyed it them? Haue I caused & wyddowe stonde waytinge for me in vayne? Haue I eaten my porcion alone, that the fatherles hath had no parte with me? (for mercy grewe vp with me fro my youth, & compassion fro my mothers wombe.) Haue I sene eny man perish thorow nakednes & want of clothinge? Or, eny poore man for lack of rayment, whose sydes thanked me not, because he was warmed with & woll of my shepe?

Dyd I euer lyft vp my honde to hurte the fatherlesse? Yee in the gate where I sawe my self to be in auctorite: The let myne arme fall fro my shulder, & myne arme holes be broken from the ioyntes. For I haue euer feared & vengeance & punyshmēt of God, & knew very well, & I was not able to beare his burthē. Haue I put my trust in golde? Or, haue I sayde to the fynest golde of all: thou art my cōfidence? Haue I reioysed because my substaunce was greate, and because my honde gat so much? Dyd I euer greatly regarde the rysinge of the Sonne? Or, had I the goinge downe of & Moone in greate reputacion? Hath my hert medled priuily with eny disceate? Or, dyd I euer kysse myne owne honde (that were a wickednesse worthy to be punyshed, for then shulde I haue denyed the God that is aboue.) Haue I euer reioysed at the hurte of myne enemy? Or, was I euer glad, & eny harme happened vnto him? Oh no, I neuer suffred my mouth to do soch a synne, as to wysch him euell. Yet they of myne owne housholde saye: who shal let vs, to haue oure bely ful of his flesh? I haue not suffred a stranger to lye with out, but opened my dores vnto him. Haue I euer done eny wicked dede where thorow I shamed my self before men: Or eny abhominacion, & I was fayne to hyde it? For yf I had feared eny greate multitude of people: Or yf I had bene dyspysed of ſymples. Oh then shulde I haue bene afraied. Thus haue I quyetly spent my lyfe, and not gone out at ſy dore. O that I had one which wolde heare me. Lo, this is my cause. Let yf Allmightie geue me answer: ⁊ let him that is my cōtrary party, sue me with a lybell. Then shall I take it vpon my shulder, ⁊ as a garlande aboute my heade. I haue tolde the nombre of my goinges, and delyuered them vnto him as to a pryncce. But yf case be that my londe crie agaynst me, or yf the forowes therof make eny complaynte: yf I haue eaten the frutes therof vnpayed for, yee yf I haue greued eny of the plow men: Than, let thistles growe in steade of my wheate, ⁊ thornes for my barlye.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

SO these three men wolde stryue nomore with Iob, because he helde himself a rightuous man. But Eliu the sonne of Barachel the Bussite <sup>a</sup> of the kynred of Ram, was very sore displeased at Iob, that he called himself iust before God. And with Iobs three frēdes he was angrie also, because they had founde no reasonable answer to ouercome him. Now taried Eliu till they had ended their communication with Iob, for why? they were elder then he. So when Eliu y sonne of Barachel y Bussite sawe, that these three men were not able to make Iob answer, he was myscontent: so that he gaue answer himself, and sayde: <sup>b</sup> Consideringe y I am yonge, ⁊ ye be men of age, I was afraied, ⁊ durst not shewe forth my mynde, for I thought thus within my self: <sup>c</sup> It becōmeth olde men to speake, ⁊ the aged to teach wysdome. Euery mā<sup>d</sup> (no doute) hath a mynde, but it is the inspyracion of the Allmightie that geueth vnderstondinge. All men are not wyse, nether doth euery aged man vnderstonde the thinge that is lauffull. Therefore wil I speake also (in so farre as I maye be herde) ⁊ wil shewe yow myne opinyon. For whē I had wayted till ye made an ende of youre talkyng, ⁊ herde youre wysdome, what argumētes ye made in youre communicacion: yee when I had diligently pondred what ye sayde, I founde not one of you that made eny good argument agaynst

Iob, or that directly coude make answer vnto his wordes: lest ye shulde prayse youre selues, to haue founde out wysdome: because it is God that hath cast him out, ⁊ no man. Neuerthelesse, seynge he hath not spoken vnto me, therfore wil not I answer him as ye haue done (for they were so abaszshed, that they coude not make answer, ner speake one worde) but in so moch as ye wil not speake, stondinge still like dome men ⁊ makinge no answer: I haue a good hope for my parte to shappe him an answer ⁊ to shewe him my meanyng. For I am full of wordes, ⁊ the sprete that is within me, cōpelleth me. Beholde, I am as the new wyne which hath no vente, ⁊ bursteth the new vessels in sunder. Therfore wil I speake, that I maye haue vête: I wil open my lyppes, and make answer. I wil regarde no maner of persone, no man wil I spare. For yf I wolde go aboute to please mē, I knowe not how soone my maker wolde take me awaye.

The xxv. Chapter.

WHEREFORE, heare my wordes (O Iob) <sup>a</sup> ⁊ herken vnto all, that I wyll saye: Beholde, I wil open my mouth, ⁊ my tonge shal speake out of my chawes. My hert shall orde my wordes a right, ⁊ my lyppes shal talke of pure wysdome. The sprete of God hath made me, <sup>b</sup> ⁊ the breth of the Allmightie hath geuē me my life. Yf thou cāst, then geue me answer: prepare thy self to stōde before me face to face. Beholde, before God am I euen as thou, for I am fashioned and made euē of the same moulde. Therefore, thou nedest not be afraied of me, nether nedest thou to feare, that my auctorite shal be to heuy for the. Now hast thou spoken in myne eares, ⁊ I haue herde yf voyce of thy wordes: I am clene without eny fawte, <sup>c</sup> I am innocent, ⁊ there is no wickednesse in me. But lo, he hath pyked a quarell agaynst me, <sup>d</sup> ⁊ taketh me for his enemy: he hath put my fote in the stockes, ⁊ loketh narrowly vnto all my pathes. Beholde, vnto these vnrasonable wordes of thyne wil I make answer.

Shulde God be reprovēd of man? Why <sup>e</sup> doest thou then stryue agaynst him, because he geueth the no accomptes of all his doinges? For whē God doth once commaunde a thinge, there shulde no man be curious, to search whether it be right. "In dreames and visions of the night season (when slombryng cometh vpo mē,<sup>a</sup> that they fall a slepe in their beddes) he rowneth them in the eares, he infourmeth them, & sheweth thē planely, that it is he, which withdraweth man from euell, deliuereth him from pryde, kepeth his soule from destruction, & his life from ſwearde. he chasteneth him with sicknesse, & bringeth him to his bed: he laieth sore punyſhment vpo his bones, so that his life maye awaye with no bred, & his soule abhorreth to eate eny dayntie meate: In so moch, that his body is clenē consumed awaye, & his bones appeare no more. His soule draweth on to destruction, & his life to death. Now yf there be an angel (one amonge a thousande) sent for to speake vnto mā, and to shewe him the right waye: thē the LORDE is mercifull vnto him, & sayeth: He shalbe deliuered, ſo he fall not downe to destruction, for I am ſufficiently recōciled. Than his flesh (which hath bene in misery & trouble) shalbe, as it was in his youth. For yf he submitte himself vnto God, he is gracious, & sheweth him his countenance ioyfully, & rewardeth man for his righteousnes. Such a respecte hath he vnto mē. Therefore let a man cōfesse, (& saye:) I offended, but he hath chastened & reformed me: I dyd vnrightuously, neuerthelesse he hath not recōpeused me therafter. Yee he hath deliuered my soule from destruction, & my life, that it seyth ſo light. Lo, thus worketh God all waie with mā, that he kepeth his soule from perishing, & latteth him enioye the light of ſo lyuinge. Marke well (O Iob) & heare me: holde the still, vntill I haue spoken. But yf thou hast eny thinge to saye, then answer me and speake, for thy answer pleaseth me. Yf thou hast nothinge, then heare me, and holde thy tonge, so shal I teach the wysdome.

The xxxiii. Chapter.

ELIU proceeded forth in his cōmunicacion, & sayde: Heare my wordes (O ye wyse men) herken vnto me, ye ſo haue vnderſtōdinge. For like as the mouth tasteth the meates, so the eare proueth & discerneth the wordes. "As for the iudgmēt, let vs seke it out amonge oure selues, ſo we maye knowe what is right. And why? Iob hath sayde: I am rightuous, but God doth me wronge. I must nedes be a liar, though my cause be right: & violently am I plagued, where as I made no fawte. where is there soch one as Iob, ſo drinketh vp scornefulnes like water? which goeth in ſo company of wicked doers, & walketh with vngodly mē? For he ſaith: Though a mā be good, yet is he naught before God. Therefore herke vnto me, ye ſo haue vnderſtōdinge.

Farre be it from God, that he shulde meddle with wickednesse: and farre be it from the Almightye, ſo he shulde meddle with vnrightuous dealing: but he rewardeth the workes of man,<sup>a</sup> and causeth euery man to fynde accordinge to his wayes. For sure it is, that God cōdemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgmēt of the Almightye is not vnrightuous. Who ruleth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole worlde? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to drawe his sprete and breth vnto him? All flesh shal come together vnto naught, & all mē shal turne agayne vnto earth. Yf thou now haue vnderſtōdinge, heare what I saye and herken to the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loueth no right? Yf thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punyshed? For he is euen the same, ſo knoweth the rebellious kynges, & sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye. He hath no respecte vnto the personnes of ſo lordly, & regardeth not the rich more thē poore. For they be all the worke of his hondes.

In the twyncklinge off an eye shall they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people & the tyrauntes rage, then shal they perish, & be taken awaye without hondes. And why? his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seyth all his goings. There is no darcknes ner thicke shadowe, ſo can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no mā shalbe suffered to go in to iudgment with God.

Many one, yee innumerable doth he punyſhe and setteth other in their steades. For he knoweth their euell & darcke workes, therefore shal they be destroyed. They that were in ſo steade of Seers, dealt like vngodly mē. Therefore turned they back traytorously and vnfaithfully frō hī, & wolde not receaue his wayes. In so moch that they haue caused

But yf he hyde away his countenance, who wil turne it aboute agayne, whether it be to the people or to eny man? For the wickednesse ⁊ synne of y people, he maketh an ypocrite to reigne ouer thē. For so much then as I haue begonne to talke of God, I wil not hyndre the. Yf I haue gone amysse, enfourme me: yf I haue done wronge, I wil leaue of. Wilt thou not geue a reasonable answer? Art thou afayed of eny thinge, seynge thou begānest first to speake, ⁊ not I? For els the men of vnderstōdinge ⁊ wisdom that haue herde me, might saye: What cāst thou speake? As for Iob he hath nether spoken to the purpose ner wysely. O father, let Iob be well tryed, because he hath turned himself to y wicked: yee aboute his synnes he hath blasphemed, which offence he hath done euen before vs, in y he stryueth agaynst God with his wordes.

The xxij. Chapter.

¶ ELIU spake morouer, and sayde: Think-est thou it right that thou sayest: I am righteous before God? Seinge thou sayest so, how doest thou knowe it? What thinge hast thou more excellēt, thē I y am a synner? Therefore will I geue answer vnto the ⁊ thy frendes: loke vnto the heauē, ⁊ beholde it: cōsidre y cloudes, how they are hyer then thou. Yf thou synnest, what dost thou vnto him? Yf thine offences be many, how gettest thou his fauoure? Yf thou be righteous, what geuest thou him? Or, what receaueth he of thy handes? Of such an vngodly personne as thou, ⁊ of y sonne of man that is righteous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greate crie ⁊ cōplaynte made by thē that are oppressed with violence, yee euery man complayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrantes. For soch one neuer sayeth: Where is God that made me? ad y shyneth vpon vs, that we might prayse him in the night? Which geueth vs more vnderstōdinge then he doth the bestes of the earth, and teacheth vs more then the foules off heauē.

Yf eny soch complayne, no mā geueth answer, and y because of the wickednesse off proude tyrantes. But yf a man call vpon

God, doth not he heare him? Doth not the Allmightie accepte his crie? Whā thou speakest then, shulde not he pardon the, yff thou open thy self before him, and put thy trust in him? Then vseth he no violence in his wrath nether hath he pleasure in curious and depe inquisitions. Therefore hath Iob opened his mouth but in vayne, ad folishly hath he made so many wordes.

The xxij. Chapter.

¶ ELIU proceeded forth in his talkinge, ⁊ sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shal shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto y yet more of myne vnderstōdinge, and proue my maker righteous. True are my wordes, ⁊ no lye: and the knowlege wherwithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God casteth not away y mightie, for he himself is mightie in power and wisdom.

As for the vngodly, he preserueth thē not but helpeth the poore to their right. He turneth not his eyes away from the righteous he setteth vp kynges in their Trone, and cōfirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt therin. But yf they be layed in preson and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of pouerte: then sheweth he them their workes ad dedes and the synnes wherwith they haue vsed cruell violence.

He with punyshinge and nurturinge off them, rowneth them in the eares, warneth them to leaue of from their wickednesse, and to amende. Yf they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes in prosperite, and their yeares in pleasure ad ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the swearde, ⁊ perish or euer they be awarre. As for such as be fayned, dyssemblers and ypocrites, they heape vp wrath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his presoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe with y condēd. The poore delyuereth he out of his straynesse, and comforteth such as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the (yf thou wilt be content) from the bottomlesse pytte that is beneth: ⁊ yf thou wilt holde the quyet, he shal fylly thy table with plenteuousnesse.

Neuerthelesse, thou hast condemned the iudgment of the vngodly, yee euen such a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffre. For then shalt thou cause be stilled with crueltie, ner pacified with many giftes. Hath God ordered then, that the glorious life off the  $\tau$  all such mightie men shulde not be put downe? Prolonge not thou the tyme, till there come a night for the, to set other people in thy steade. But beware that thou turne not asyde to wickednesse and synne, which hytherto thou hast chosen more then mekenesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye power: Where is there such a gyde and lawegeuer as he? Who wil reprove him of his waye? who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge?

D O conside how greate and excellent his workes be, whom all men loave and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre of. Beholde, so greate is God, that he passeth oure knowlege, nether are we able to come to  $\hat{y}$  experice of his yeares. He turneth  $\hat{y}$  water to smal droppes, he dryueth his cloudes together for to rayne, "so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can sprede out the cloudes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vpon them, and to couer the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geueth the abundaunce of meate. In  $\hat{y}$  turnyng of a hande he hydeth the light,  $\tau$  at his commaundement it commeth agayne. The rysyng vp therof sheweth he to his freundes and to the catell.

The xxxiii. Chapter.

A T this my hert is astonni'd, and moued out of his place. Heare then the sounde of his voyce, and the noyse  $\hat{y}$  goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. A roaringe voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geueth such a thondre clappe, that (though a man heare it) yet maye he not perceaue it afterwarde. It geueth an horrible sounde, when God sendeth out his voyce: greate thinges doth he, which we can not cōprehende. <sup>a</sup> When he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soone as he geueth the rayne a charge, Immediately the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon euery man, that they might knowe their owne workes. The beestes crepe in to their dennes,  $\tau$  take their rest. Out of the south commeth the tempest, and colde out of the north.

At the breth of God, the frost commeth,  $\tau$  the waters are shed abroad. The cloudes do their laboure in geuyng moystnesse, the cloudes poure downe their rayne. He distributeth also on euery syde, acordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his workes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth the thorow the whole worlde: whether it be to punysh eny londe, or to do good vnto them, that seke him.

Herken vnto this (o Job) stonde still, and conside the wonderous workes of God. Art thou of coucel with God, when he doth these thinges? When he causeth the light to come forth of his cloudes? Art thou of his coucell, when he spredeth out the cloudes? Hast thou the perfecte knowlege of his wonders? and how thy clothes are warme, whē the lōde is still thorow the south wynde? hast thou helped him to spred out the heauen, which is to loke vpon, as it were cast of cleare metall? Teach vs what we shal saye vnto hi, for we are vnmete because of darknes. Shal it be tolde him, what I saye? Shulde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? For euery mā seith not the light,  $\hat{y}$  he kepeth cleare in the cloudes, which he clenseth whan he maketh the wynde to blowe. Golde is brought out of the north, but the prayse and honour off Gods feare commeth frō God himself. It is not we that can fynde out the allmightie: for in power, equite and rightuousnesse he is hyer then can be expressed. Seinge then that euery body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stōde in feare of hi?

The xxxix. Chapter.

KNOWEST thou the tyme when the wilde gotes brige forth their yōge amōge the stony rockes? Or layest thou wayte when the hīndes vse to fawne? Rekenest thou the monethes after they ingendre, y thou knowest the tyme of their bearinge? Or when they lye downe, when they cast their yonge ones, & when they are deluyered off their trauayle & payne? How their yōge ones growe vp & waxe greate thorow good fedinge? who letteth the wilde asse go fre, or who lowseth the bōdes of the Moole? Vnto whō I haue geuen the wyldernes to be their house, & the vntilled loude to be their dwellinge place. That they maye geue no force for the multitude off people in the cities, nether to regarde the crienge of the dryuer: but to seke their pasture aboute the moūtaynes, & to folowe vpon the grene grasse. Wyll the vnicorne be so tame as to do y seruyce, or to abyde still by thy cribbe? Cāst thou bynde y yock aboute him in thy forowes, to make him plowe after the in y valleys? C Hast thou geuen the horse is strength, or lerned him to bowe downe his neck with feare: that he letteth him self be dryuen forth like a greshopper, where as the stoute nyeenge that he maketh, is fearfull? he breaketh & grounde with the hofes of his fete chearfully in his strength, and runneth to mete the harness men. He layeth asyde all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he a back for eny swerde. Though the quyuers rattle vpon him, though the speare and shilde glistre: yet russheth he in fearsly, and beateth vpon the grounde. He feareth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawmes blowe, tush (sayeth he) for he smell-eth the batell asfاره of, & noyse, the captaynes and the shoutinge.

Commeth it thorow thy wysdome, that the goshaanke flyeth towards the south? Doth the Aegle mounte vp & make his nest on hye at thy commaundement? He abyde in the stony rockes, & vpon the hye toppes of harde mountaynes, where no man can come. From thence maye he beholde his praye, and loke farre aboute with his eyes. <sup>a</sup> His yonge ones are fed with bloude, and where eny deed body lyeth, there is he immediatly.

Morouer, God spake vnto Iob and sayde: Can he that stryuet with the Allmightie, be at rest? Shulde not he which disputeth with God, geue him an answer? Iob answered the LORDE, sayenge: Beholde, I am to vyle a personne, to answere the, therefore will I laye my hande vpon my mouth. Once or twyse haue I spoken, but I will saye nomore.

The xl. Chapter.

A THEN spake the LORDE vnto Iob out of the storme, and sayde: <sup>b</sup>gyrde vp thy loynes like a man, and tell me the thinge that I will axe the. Wilt thou disanulle my iudgment? Or, wilt thou condemne me, & thou thy self mayest be made righteous? Is thine arme then like the arme of God? Maketh thy voyce soch a soude as his doth? Then arme thy self with thine owne power, vp, decke the in thy ioly araye, poure out the indignacion of thy wrath: se that thou cast downe all & proude, loke well, that thou makest all soch as be stubburne, to obeye: treade all the vngodly vnder thy fete, cast the downe in to the myre, and couer their faces with darcknesse: Then will I confesse also, that thyne owne right honde hath saued the.

Beholde, the cruell beaste (whom I made with the) which eateth haye as an oxe: lo, how stronge he is in his loynes, and what power he hath in the nauell of his body. He spreadeth out his tale like a Cedre tre, all his vaynes are stiff. His shynnes are like pipes off brasse, his rygge bones are like stanes of yrō. First when God made him, he ordered the wyldernes for him, & the mountaynes shulde geue him grasse, where all the beastes off the felde take their pastyme. He lyeth amōge the redes in the Mosses, the fennes hyde him with their shadowe, and the wylowes of the broke couer him rounde aboute. Lo, without eny labour might he drynke out the whole floude, and suppe off Iordane without eny trauayle. Who darre laye honde vpon him openly, and vndertake to catch him? Or, who darre put an hoke thorow his nose, & laye a snare for him?

C Darrest thou drawe out <sup>c</sup>Leuiathan with an angle, or bynde his tonge with a snare? Canst thou put a ryng in the nose of him, or bore his chafes thorow with an aule? Wylle he make many fayre wordes with the (thynkest thou) or flatre the? Wylle he make a couenaunt with the? Or, art thou able for to compell him to do the contynual seruyce? Wilt thou take thy pastyme with him as with a byrde, or geue him vnto thy maydens, that thy companyons maye bew him in peces, to be parted amōge the marchaunt men? Canst thou fyll the nett with his skynne, or & fysh pānyer with his heade? Darrest thou laye honde vpon him? It is better for the to conside what harme might happē the there thorow and not to touch him. For when thou thynkest to haue holde vpon him, he shall begyle the: Euery man also that seyth him, shall go backe. And why? there darre none be so bolde, as to rayse him vp.

Who openeth the dore of his face? for he hath horrible tethe rounde aboute. His body is couered with scales as it were with shyldes, lockte in, kepte, and well copacte together. One is so ioyued to another, that no ayre can come in: Yee one hangeth so vpon another, and sticke so together, that they can not be sundered. His nesinge is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the mornynge shyne. Out of his mouth go torches and fyre brandes, out off his nostrels there goeth a smoke, like as out off an hote seetinge pott. His breth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remaineth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The members of his body are ioyued so strayte one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hert is as harde as a stone, and as fast as the stythe that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afrayed, and the waves heuy. Yff he drawe out the swerde, there maye nether speare ner brest plate abyde him. He setteth as moch by a strawe as by yro, and as moch by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth not away for him that bendeth the bowe, & as for slynge stones, he careth as moch for stubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorne that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like & sharpe potsherdes. He maketh the depe to seeth and boyle like a pott, and stereth the see together like an oyntment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkynge place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. Yff a man will cōsidre all hye thinges, this same is a kynge ouer all the children off pryde.

O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answer me vnto the thinge that I will axe the. I haue geuen diligent eare vnto the, and now I se & with myne eyes. Wherefore I geue myne owne self & blame, and take repentance in the dust and ashes.

Now whē the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto Iob, he sayde vnto Eliphas & Themanite: I am displeased with the & thy two frendes, for ye haue not spoken the thinge & is right before me, like as my seruauant Iob hath done. Therefore take vij. oxen and seuen rammes, and go to my seruauant Iob,<sup>d</sup> offre vp also for youre selues a brentofferynge, and let my seruauant Iob praye for you. So Eliphas the Themanite, Baldad & Shuhite and Sophar the Naamathite wote their waye, and did acordinge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also 'accepted the personne off Iob, and the LORDE turned him vnto Iob, whē he prayed for his frendes: 'Yee the LORDE gaue Iob twyse as moch as he had afore.

And the LORDE made Iob richer then he was before: for he had xliij. M. shepe, vi. M. camels, a M. yock oxē, and a M. asses. He had children also: vij. sounes and iij. daughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde, poerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In all the londe were none founde so fayre, as the daughters of Iob, & their father gaue them enheritaunce amonge their brethren. After this lyued Iob xl. yeares, so that he sawe his children, & his childers children vnto the fourth generacion.<sup>f</sup> And so he dyed, beinge olde & of a perfecte age.

For thou art not the God  $\hat{y}$  hath pleasure in wickednesse, there maye no vngodly personne dwell with the. Soch as be cruell maye not stoude in thy sight, thou art an enemye vnto all wicked doers.

Thou destroyest the lyers: the LORDE abhorreth the bloude thirstie and disceatfull. But as for me, <sup>a</sup>I wil come in to thy house, enen vpon the multitude of thy mercy: <sup>ad</sup> in thy feare wyll I worshipe towarde thy holy tēple. Lede me (o LORDE) in thy rightuousnesse, because of myne enemyes, <sup>ad</sup> make thy waye playne before me. For there is no faithfulness in their mouthes: they dyssemble in their hertes: their throte is an open sepulchre: with their tonges they disceaue. Punysh them (o God) that they maye perish in their owne ymaginacions: cast them out because of the multitude of their vngodlinesse, for they rebell agaynst the. Agayne, let all them that put their trust in the, reioyse: yee let them euer be geuyng of thanks, because thou defendest them: that they which loue thy name, maye be ioyfull in the. For thou LORDE geuest thy blessinge vnto the rightuous: and with thy fauorable kyndnes thou defendest him, as with a shyld.

The vi. A psalme of Dauid.

A OH LORDE, rebuke me not in thine anger: <sup>c</sup>Oh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. Hauemercy vpon me (o LORDE) for I am weake: o LORDE heale me, for all my bones are vexed. My soule also is in greate trouble, but LORDE how longe? Turne the (o LORDE) & delyuer my soule: Oh saue me, for thy mercies sake. For in death no man remēbreth the: Oh who wil geue the thanks in the hell? I am weery of gronyng: Euery night washe I my bedde, & water my couche with my teares. My countenaunce is changed for very inward greife, I cōsume awaye, I haue so many enemyes. <sup>d</sup>Awaye fro me all ye wicked doers, for the LORDE hath herde the voyce off my wepinge. The LORDE hath herde myne humble peticiō, the LORDE hath receaued my prayer. All myne enemyes shalbe cōfounded & sore vexed: yee they shalbe turned backe and put to shame, and that right soone.

The vij. A psalme of Dauid.

O LORDE my God, in  $\hat{y}$  do I trust: <sup>a</sup>saue me frō all thē  $\hat{y}$  persecute me, & delyuer me. Sela. Stōde vp (o LORDE) in thy wrath, lift vp thyself ouer the furious indignaciō of myne enemyes: aryse vp (for me) in the vengeance that thou hast promysed. <sup>f</sup>That the congregacion of the people maye come aboute the, for their sakes therefore lift vp thyself agayne. The LORDE is iudge ouer the people: Auenge me then (o LORDE) accordinge to my rightuousnes & innocency. Oh let the wickednes of the vngodly come to an ende: but manteyne the iust, thou rightuous God,  $\hat{y}$  triest the very hertes & the reynes. The liij. A psalme of David.

O LORDE oure gouernoure: how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde? how excellent is thy glory aboue the heauens? "Out of the mouth of the very babes & sucklings thou hast ordered prayse, because of thine enemies, y<sup>e</sup> thou mightest destroye the enemye and the auenger. "For I conside thy heauens, euen the worke off thy fyngers: the Moone and the starres which thou hast made. B Oh what is man, y<sup>e</sup> thou art so myndfull of him? ether the sonne of mā that thou visitest him? "After thou haddest for a season made him lower thē the angels, thou crownedest him with honoure & glory. The foules of the ayre: the fysh of the see, and what so walketh thorow the wayes of the see. O LORDE oure gouernoure, how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde?

The iiij. A psalme of David.

I WIL geue thākes vnto the (o LORDE) with my whole herte, "I wil speake of all thy maruelous workes. I wil be glad & reioyse in the, yee my songes wil I make of thy name, o thou most hiest. Because thou hast dryuē myne enemies abacke, they were discōfited, & perished at thy presence. For thou hast manteyned my right and my cause: thou syttest in the Trone that art the true iudge. Thou rebukest the Heithen, and destroyest the vngodly, thou putttest out their name for euer and euer. The enemies swerdes are come to an ende, thou hast ouerthrowen their cities, their memoriall is perished with thē. B But y<sup>e</sup> LORDE endureth for euer, he hath prepared his seate vnto iudgmēt. He gouerneth y<sup>e</sup> worlde with rightuousnes & ministrereth true iudgmēt vnto the people. The LORDE is a defence for the poore, a defence in the tyme of trouble. Therefore they y<sup>e</sup> knowe thy name, put their trust in y<sup>e</sup>: for thou (LORDE) neuer faylest thē, that seke the. "O prayse the LORDE, which dwelleth in Sion, shewe y<sup>e</sup> people of his doings. Here the Hebrues begynne the x. psalme.

WHY art thou gone so farre of, o LORDE? wilt thou hyde thyself in tyme of trouble? Whye y<sup>e</sup> vngodly hath the ouer hande, the poore must suffre persecucion: O that they were taken in the ymaginacions which they go aboute. For the vngodly maketh boost of his owne hertes desyre, the cuvetous blesseth him self, and blasphemeth the LORDE. The vngodly is so proude and full of indignaciō, that he careth not: nether is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthie, thy iudgmentes are farre out of his sight, he defyeth all his enemies. For he sayeth in his herte: "Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happē vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, fraude and disceate: vnder his tōge is trauayle & sorow. He sytteth lurkyng in the gardens, that he maye pruely murther the innocent, his eyes are set vpon the poore. He lyeth waytinge secretly, as it were a lyon in his denne. He lurketh that he maye rauysh the poore, yee to rauish the poore, when he hath gotten him in to his nett. Then smyth he, then oppresseth he & casteth downe the poore with his auctorite. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, God hath forgotten, he hath turned a waye his face, so y<sup>e</sup> he will neuer se it. Aryse o LORDE God, lift vp thine honde, and forget not the poore. Wherefore shulde the wicked blaspheme God, and saye in his herte: Tush, he careth not for it? This thou seist, for thou considrest the misery and sorowe: The poore geueth himself ouer in to thy hande, and committeth him vnto the, for thou art the helper of the frendlesse. Breake thou y<sup>e</sup> arme off the vngodly and malicious, search out the wickednesse which he hath done, that he maye perish. The LORDE is kynge for euer, ye Heithen shal perish out off his londe. LORDE, thou hearest the desyrous longinge off the poore: their herte is sure, that thine eare herkeneth therto. Helpe the fatherlesse and poore vnto their right, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The r. A psalme of Dauid.

In the LORDE put I my trust: how will ye then saye to my soule: that she shulde fle as a byrde vpon youre hill? For lo, the vngodly haue bet their bowe, and made redy their arrowes in the quyer: "that they maye pruely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundation haue they cast downe, what ca the rightuous the do withall? But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: <sup>a</sup> He considereth it with his eyes, <sup>b</sup> his eye lyddes beholde the children of men. The LORDE seith both the rightuous and vngodly, but who so deliteth in wickednes, him his soule abhorreth. Vpon the vngodly he shal rayne suares, fyre, brymstone, storme and tempest: this rewarde shal they haue to drynke. For the LORDE is rightuous, ad he loueth rightuousnes, his countenance beholdeth the thige y<sup>e</sup> is iust.

The ri. A psalme of Dauid.

HELPE LORDE, for there is not one saynte more: very fewe faithfull are there amonge the children off men. Euery man telleth lyes to his neyghoure, they do but flater with their lippes and dissemble in their herte. O that the LORDE wolde rote out all disceatfull lippes, ad the tonge that speaketh proude thinges. Which saye: Oure tōge shulde preuayle: we are they that ought to speake, who is lorde ouer vs? Now for the troubles sake off the oppressed, & because of the complaynte of the poore, I wil vp (sayeth the LORDE) I wil helpe the, and set the at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pure wordes: <sup>c</sup> euē as y<sup>e</sup> syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vij. tymes in the fyre. Kepe the therefore (o LORDE) and preserue vs frō this generacion for euer. And why? when vanite and ydylnes getteth the ouer hande amonge the children of men, all are full of y<sup>e</sup> vngodly.

The rij. A psalme of Dauid.

HOW longe wilt thou forget me, o LORDE? for euer? how longe wilt thou hyde thy face frō me? Oh how lōge shall I seke counsell in my soule? how longe shall I be so vexed in my herte? how longe shal myne enemye triumphe ouer me? Considre, ad heare me, o LORDE my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest myne enemye saye: I haue preuayled agaynst hi, for yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyse at it.

But my trust is in thy mercy, and my hert is ioyfull in thy sauynge health. I wil synge of the LORDE, that dealeth so louyngly with me. (Yee I wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most byest.)

As for you, ye haue made a mocke at the coucell of the poore, because he putteth his trust in the LORDE. "Oh y<sup>e</sup> the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out off Sion. LORDE, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle? <sup>a</sup> who shal rest vpō thy holy hill? PRESERVE me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto y<sup>e</sup> LORDE: thou art my God, my goodes are nothinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earth, and vpon soch like. But they y<sup>e</sup> runne after another, shall haue greate trouble. Their drynkofferynges of bloude wil not I offre, nether make mencion of their name in my mouth. <sup>a</sup> The LORDE himself is my good and my porcion, thou manteynest my enheritaūce. The lott is fallen vnto me in a fayre grounde, yee I haue a goodly heretage. I wil thanke the LORDE for geuyng me warnynge: my reynes also haue chastened me in the night season. Afore honde sawe I God allwayes before me, for he is on my right honde, that I shulde not be moued.

Therefore dyd my hert reioyce, & my tunge was glad, my flesh also shall rest in hope. For why? thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, <sup>a</sup> nether shalt thou suffre thy saynte to se corrupcion. The rliij. A psalme of Dauid when he was deliuered from the honde off Saul.

I WILL loue the (o LORDE) my strēgh. The LORDE is my sauoure, my refuge, my Sauoure: my god, my helper i whō I trust: my buckler, y<sup>e</sup> horn of my health, & my protectiō. I wil prayse y<sup>e</sup> LORDE & call vpon him, <sup>a</sup>so shal I be safe fro myne enemies. The sorowes of death cōpassed me,<sup>b</sup> & the brokes of vngodlynes made me afraied. The paynes of hell came aboute me, the snares of death toke holde vpo me. Yet in my trouble I called vpo the LORDE, & cōplayned vnto my God. So he herde my voyce out off his holy tēple, & my cōplaynte came before hī, yee eue in to his eares. <sup>c</sup>The earth trembled & quaked, the very fōndaciōs of the hilles shoke & were remoued, because he was wrothe. There wēt a smoke out of his nostrils, & a cōsumynge fyre out of his mouth, so y<sup>e</sup> coales were kyndled at it. He bowed the heauē & came downe, & it was darcke vnder his fete. He rode vpo the Cherubins & dyd fle: he came flyenge with the wynges of the wynde. He made darcknesse his payllion rounde aboute hī, with darcke water & thicke cloudes to couer him. At the brightnes off his presence the cloudes remoued, with hale stones & coales of fyre. The LORDE also thondred out of y<sup>e</sup> heanē, & the heyth gaue his thondre with hale stones & coales of fyre. He sent out his arrowes & scatred thē, he cast sore lighteninges, & destroyed thē. The springes of waters were sene, & the foundaciōs of the rōude worlde were discovered at thy chiding (o LORDE) at the blasteing & breth of thy displeasure. He sent downe fro the heyth to fetch me, & toke me out of greete waters. He deliuered me fro my stronge enemies, and fro my foes which were to mightie for me. They preuented me in the tyme of my trouble, but y<sup>e</sup> LORDE was my defence. He brought me forth also in to lyberte: & deliuered me, because he had a fauoure vnto me. The LORDE shall rewarde me after my rightuous dealyng, & acordinge to the clēnesse of my hōdes shal he recōpense me. For I haue kepte the wayes of the LORDE, & haue not behaued myself wickedly agaynst my God. I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, & cast not out his commaundemētes fro me. Vncorrupte will I be before hī, & wil eschue myne owne wickednes. Therefore shal y<sup>e</sup> LORDE rewarde me after my rightuous dealinge, & acordinge vnto y<sup>e</sup> clēnesse of my hōdes in his eye sight. With the holy thou shalt be holy, & with y<sup>e</sup> innocēt thou shalt be innocēt. With the clene thou shalt be clene & with the frowarde thou shalt be frowarde. For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed, & brige downe the hye lokes of the proude. <sup>d</sup>Thou lightest my candle, o LORDE my God: thou makest my darcknesse to be light. For in the I can discōit an hoost of mē: yee in my God I cā leape ouer the wall.

<sup>e</sup>The waye of God is a perfecte waye: the wordes of the LORDE are tried in the fyre: he is a shyld of defence, for all them that trust in him. <sup>f</sup>For who is God, but the LORDE? <sup>g</sup>Or, who hath eny strength, but oure God? It is God that hath gyrded me with strēgh and made my waye vncorrupte. He hath made my fete like hartes fete, and set me vp an hye. <sup>h</sup>He teacheth myne hondes to fight, and maketh myne armes to breake euen a bowe off stele. Thou hast geuē me the defence of thy health, thy right hande vpholdeth me, and thy louynge correccion maketh me greate. Thou hast made rowne ynough vnder me for to go, that my fete steppes shulde not slyde. I will folowe vpon myne enemies, and take them: I will not turne till they be discomfited. I will smyte them, they shall not be able to stonde, but fall vnder my fete. Thou hast gyrded me with strength vnto y<sup>e</sup> batell, thou hast throwē them all downe vnder me, that rose vp agaynst me. Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backes vpon me, thou hast destroyed thē y<sup>e</sup> hated me. They cried, but there was none to helpe thē: <sup>i</sup>yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he herde thē not. I will beate them as small as the dust before the wynde, I will cast them out as y<sup>e</sup> claye in the stretes. The rri. A psalme of Dauid.

MY God, my God: why hast thou forsaken me?<sup>a</sup> & wordes of my cōplaynte are farre fro my health. O my God, I crie in the daye tyme, but thou hearest not: and in the night season also I take no rest. Yet dwellest thou in the Sanctuary, o thou worshipec of Israel. Oure fathers hoped in the, they trusted in the, and thou dydest deliuer them. They called vpon the, and were helped: they put their trust in the, and were not cōfounded. But as for me, I am a worme and no man: a very scorne of mē and the outcast of the people. All they yse me, laugh me to scorne: they shute out their lippes, and shake their heades. He trusted in God,<sup>b</sup> let him deliuer him: let him helpe hi, yf he wil haue him. But thou art he that toke me out of my mothers wōbe:<sup>c</sup> thou wast my hope, when I hauged yet vpon my mothers brestes. I haue bene left vnto the euer sence I was borne, thou art my God, euē fro my mothers wombe. O go not fro me the, for trouble is harde at honde, and here is none to helpe me. Greate bulles are come aboute me, fatt oxen close me in on euery syde. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, as it were a rampinge and roaringe lyon.

I am poured out like water, all my bones are out of ioynt: my hert in the myddest off my body is euen like meltinge waxe. My strength is dried vp like a potsherde, my tunge cleueth to my goomes, and thou hast brought me in to the dust of death. For dogges are come aboute me, the cōcell of y wicked hath layed sege agaynst me. They pearced my hondes and my fete, I might haue tolde all my bones: as for them, they stode staringe and lokinge vpon me. They haue parted my garmentes amonge them,<sup>d</sup> and cast lottes vpon my vesture.

But be not thou farre fro me, o LORDE: thou art my succoure, haist the to helpe me. Deliuer my soule from the swearde, my dear-linge from the power of the dogge. Saue me from the lyons mouth, and heare me frō amonge the hornes off the vnicornes.<sup>e</sup> So wil I declare thy name vnto my brethren,<sup>f</sup> in the myddest off the congregacion will I prayse the. O prayse the LORDE ye that feare him: Magnifie him all ye sede of Iacob, & let all y sede of Israel feare hi. For he hath not despysed ner abhorred the myserable estate of the poore: he hath not hyd his face fro me, but whē I called vnto him, he herde me. I wil prayse the in the greate congregacion, and performe my vowes in the sight off all the that feare the. The poore shal eate and be satisfied:<sup>g</sup> they y seke after y LORDE shal prayse him: your herte shal lyue for euer.

All the endes of the worlde shal remembre them selues, & be turned vnto the LORDE: and all the generacions of the Heithen shal worshipec before him. For the kyngdome is the LORDES, and he shal be the gouernoure of y Heithen. All such as be fat vpō earth, shal eate also and worshipec: All they that lye in the dust, and lyue so hardly, shall fall downe before him. The sede shall serue him, and preach of the LORDE for euer. They shal come, & declare his rightuousnes: vnto a people that shal be borne,<sup>h</sup> whō the LORDE hath made.

THE LORDE is my shepherd,<sup>i</sup> I can wante nothings. He fedeth me in a grene pasture, and ledeth me to a fresh water. Though I shulde walke now in the valley of the shadowe of death, yet I feare no euell, for thou art with me: thy staffe & thy shepehoke cōforte me. Thou preparest a table before me agaynst mine enemies: thou anoyntest my heade with oyle, & fyllest my cuppe full. <sup>b</sup> In to thy hondes I commendē my sprete: thou hast deluyered me O LORDE thou God of treuth. I hate them that holde of vanities, and my trust is in the LORDE. I will be glad and reioyse in thy mercy: for thou hast considred my trouble, thou hast knowne my soule in aduersite. Thou hast not deluyered me ouer in to the hōdes of the enemye, but hast set my fete in a large rowne. Haue mercy vpon me, O LORDE, for I am in trouble, myne eye is consumed for very heuynesse, yee my soule and my body. My life is waxen olde with heuynesse, and my yeares with mournynge. My strēth fayleth me because of my aduersite, and my bones are corrupte. I am become a very reprove amonge all myne enemies, my neighbours & they of myne owne acquauntaunce are afrayed of me: they <sup>e</sup> se me in the strete, cōveye them selues fro me. I am clene forgotten and out of mynde, as a deed man: I am become like a broken vessell.

For I haue herde the blasphemy of the multitude: euery man abhorreth me: they haue gathered a councel together agaynst me, and are purposed to take a waye my life.

But my hope is in <sup>f</sup> O LORDE, & I saye: thou art my God. My tyme is in thy honde: deluyuer me from the honde of myne enemies, & from them <sup>g</sup> persecute me. Shewe thy seruauent the light of thy countenance, helpe me for thy mercies sake. Let me not be confounded (o LORDE) for I call vpon the: let the vngodly rather be put to confucion, and brought vnto the hell. Let the lyenge lippes be put to sylence, which cruelly, disdainedly & despitefully speake agaynst the righteous. O how greate and manifolde is thy good, which thou haist hyd for them that feare <sup>h</sup>? O what thinges bringest thou to passe for them, that put their trust in the, euen before the sonnes of men?

<sup>d</sup> Thou hydest them priuely by thine owne presence from the proude men, thou kepest them secretly in thy tabernacle, from the strife of tongues. Thanks be to the LORDE, for he hath shewed me maruelous greate kyndnesse in a stronge cite. For when the sodane feare came vpon me, I sayde: I am cast out of thy sight. The LORDE is nye vnto them ſ̄ are contrite in hert, & wil helpe such as be of an humble sprete. <sup>a</sup>Great are ſ̄ troubles of the righteous, but the LORDE deluyereth them out of all. He kepeth all their bones, so ſ̄ not one of them is broken. But misfortune shal slaye the vngodly, and they that hate ſ̄ righteous shal be giltye. The LORDE deluyereth the soules of his seruantes, and all they that put their trust in him, shal not offende.

The xxxiiiij. A psalme of Dauid.

STRYUE thou with them (o LORDE) that stryue with me, fight thou agaynst them that fight agaynst me. Laye honde vpon the shyld and speare, and stonde vp to helpe me. Drawe out thy swerde, and stoppe the waye agaynst them that persecute me, saye vnto my soule: I am thy helpe. Let them be cōfounded and put to shame, that seke after my soule: let thē be turned back and brought to confucion, that ymagin myschefe for me. <sup>b</sup>Let thē be as ſ̄ dust before the wynde, and the angell of the LORDE scaterynge thē. Let their waye be dareke and slippery, and the angell of the LORDE to persecute them. For they haue pryuely laied their nett to destroye me without a cause, yee and made a pitte for my soule, which I neuer deserued. Let a sodane destruccion come vpon him vnawarres, and ſ̄ nett that he hath layed pruely, catch him self, that he maye fall in to his owne myschefe. But let my soule be ioyfull in the LORDE, and reioyse in his helpe. All my bones shal saie: LORDE, who is like vnto the? which deluyereſt ſ̄ poore from those that are to stronge for him, yee the poore and the nedy from his robbers.

False witnesses are rysen vp, & laye to my charge thinges that I knowe not. <sup>a</sup>They rewarde me euell for good, to the greate discomfort of my soule. Neuertheles, when they were sick, I put on a sack cloth: I humbled my soule with fasting, and my prayer turned in to myne owne bosome. I behaued my self as though it had bene my frende or my brother, I wēte heuely, as one ſ̄ mourneth for his mother. <sup>b</sup>But in my aduersite they reioyse, and gather them together: yee ſ̄ very lame come together agaynst me vnawarres, makinge mowes at me, & cease not.

With ſ̄ gredy & scornfull ypocrites, they gnaszshed vpon me with their teth. LORDE, whan wilt thou loke vpō this? O restore my soule from ſ̄ wicked rumoure of thē, my dearlinge from the Lyons. <sup>c</sup>So wil I geue ſ̄ thanks in the greate congregacion, & prayse the amonge moch people. O let thē not triūphe ouer me, that are myne enemies for naught: O let them not wyucke with their eyes, that hate me without a cause. <sup>d</sup>And why? their comonyng is not for peace, but they ymagin false wordes agaynst ſ̄ outcastes of the londe. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, sayenge: there there: we se it with oure eyes. This thou seist, o LORDE: holde not thy tonge thē: go not farre fro me, o LORDE. Awake (LORDE) and stonde vp: auenge thou my cause, my God, and my LORDE. Iudge me (o LORDE my God) accordinge to thy righteousness, ſ̄ they triūphe not ouer me. O let thē not saye in their hertes: there there, so wolde we haue it. O let them not saye: we haue ouercome him.

Let them be put to confucion and shame, that reioyse at my trouble: let thē be clothed with rebuke and dishonoure, that boost thē selues agaynst me. Let them also be glad and reioyse, that fauoure my righteous dealing: yee let them saye allwaye: blessed be ſ̄ LORDE, which hath pleasure in the prosperite of his seruauant. And as for my tonge, it shal be talkynge of thy righteousness and of thy prayse, all the daye longe.

The xxxv. A psalme of Dauid.

MY hert sheweth me the wickednesse of the vngodly, that there is no feare of God before his eyes. For he dyssembleth before his face, so longe till his abhominable synne be founde out. The wordes of his mouth are vnrightuousnesse and disceate,<sup>a</sup> he wil not be lerned to do good.

He ymagineth myschefe vpon his bedde, he will come in no good waye, ner refuse the thinge that is euell. <sup>b</sup>Thy mercy (O LORDE) reacheth vnto the heauen, and thy faithfulness vnto the cloudes. Thy rightuousnesse stondesth like the stronge mountaynes, <sup>c</sup>thy iudgment like the greates depe. Thou LORDE preseruest both me <sup>d</sup>and beestes. How precious is thy mercy (O God) that the children of men maye put their trust vnder <sup>e</sup>thy shadowe of thy wynges? They shalbe satisfied with the pleteousnesse of thy house, and thou shalt geue them drynke of the ryuer of thy pleasures. <sup>f</sup>For by the is <sup>g</sup>thy well of life, <sup>h</sup>and in thy light, shall we se light. O sprede forth thy lounge kyndnesse vnto them that knowe the, <sup>i</sup>and thy rightuousnes vnto the that are true of hert. O let not the fote of pryde ouertake me, O let not the hande of <sup>j</sup>thy vngodly cast me downe. As for wicked doers, they fall, they are cast downe, <sup>k</sup>and are not able to stode.

Suffre yet a litle whyle, <sup>z</sup>and <sup>aa</sup>thy vngodly shal be elene gone: thou shalt loke after his place, <sup>ab</sup>and he shal be awaye. <sup>ac</sup>But the meke spreted

But <sup>af</sup>thy LORDE laugheth him to scorne, <sup>ag</sup>for he seith <sup>ah</sup>thy daye is comyng. The vngodly drawe out the swerde <sup>ai</sup>and bende their bowe, to cast downe <sup>aj</sup>thy symple <sup>ak</sup>and poore, and to slaye soch as go <sup>al</sup>thy right waye. Neuertheless, their swerde shal go thorow their owne hert, and their bowe shalbe brokē. <sup>am</sup>A small thinge <sup>an</sup>thy the rightuous hath, is better then greates riches of the vngodly. For the armes of <sup>ao</sup>thy vngodly shalbe broken, but the LORDE vpholdeth the rightuous. The LORDE knoweth the dayes of the godly, <sup>ap</sup>and their enheritaunce shal endure for euer. They shal not be confounded in <sup>aq</sup>thy perous tyme, <sup>ar</sup>and in <sup>as</sup>thy dayes of derth they shall haue ynough. As for <sup>at</sup>thy vngodly, they shall perishe: <sup>au</sup>and whē <sup>av</sup>thy enemies of <sup>aw</sup>thy LORDE are in their floures, they shal cōsume, yee euen as the smoke shal they cōsume awaye. The vngodly <sup>ax</sup>boroweth <sup>ay</sup>and paieeth not agayne, but the rightuous is mercifull <sup>az</sup>and liberal. Soch as be blessed of him, shal possesse the londe: <sup>ba</sup>and they whom he curseth, shalbe roted out. The LORDE ordreth a good mans goyng, <sup>bb</sup>and hath pleasure in his waye. Though he fall, he shal not be hurte, for the LORDE vpholdeth him with his hāde. <sup>bc</sup>I haue bene yonge, <sup>bd</sup>and now am olde: yet sawe I neuer the rightuous forsakē, ner his sede to seke their bred. The rightuous is euer mercifull, <sup>be</sup>and ledeth <sup>bf</sup>gētly, therefore shal his sede be blessed. Fle frō euell, <sup>bg</sup>and do <sup>bh</sup>thy thinge that is good, so shalt thou dwell for euer.

¶ PUT me not to rebuke (Oh LORDE) in thine anger: <sup>a</sup> Oh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. For thy arrowes stick fast in me, and thy honde presseth me sore. There is no whole parte in my body, because of thy displeasure: there is no rest in my bones, by reason of my synnes. For my wickednesses are gone ouer my heade, and are like a sore burthen, to heuy for me to beare.

My woundes stynecke ¶ are corrupte, thorow my folishnesse. I am brought in to so greate trouble and misery, that I go mourninge all the daye longe. For my loynes are clene dried vp, and there is no whole parte in my body. I am feble and sore smyttē, I roare for the very disquietnes of my hert.

¶ LORDE, thou knowest all my desyre, ¶ my gronyng is not hyd from the. My hert paunteth, my strength hath fayled me, ¶ the light of myne eyes is gone fro me. My louers ¶ frendes <sup>d</sup> stonde lokinge vpon my trouble, and my kynsmen are gone a farre of.

They that sought after my life, and to do me euell, spake of lyes and ymaged disceate all the daye longe. As for me, I was like a deaf mā, and herde not: and as one that were domme, not openyng his mouth. I am become as a man that heareth not, and that can make no resistance with his mouth.

¶ For in the (O LORDE) is my trust, thou shalt heare me, O LORDE my God. My desyre is, ¶ myne enemies triumphe not ouer me: for yf my fote slippe, they reioyse greatly against me. I am redy to suffre trouble, and my heuynesse is euer in my sight. For I cōfesse my wickednesse, ¶ my synne greueth me.

But myne enemies lyue, and are mightie: and they that hate me without a cause, are many in nombre. They that rewarde me euell for good, speake euell of me, because I folowe the thinge that good is. Forsake me not (O LORDE my God) O go not farre fro me. Haist the to helpe me, O LORDE my succoure.

The xxxvij. A psalme of Dauid.

¶ SAYDE: I wil kepe my waies, that I <sup>a</sup> offended not in my tonge. And so I shut my mouth, whyle the vngodly layed wayte for me. I helde my tonge, I was domme, I kepte sylence, yee euē from good wordes, but it was payne and grefe to me. My hert was hote within me, ¶ whyle I was thus musyng, the fyre kyndled: so that I spake with my tonge. <sup>d</sup> LORDE, let me knowe myne ende, and the nombre of my dayes: that I maye be certified what I wante. Beholde, thou hast made my dayes a spanne longe, and my life is as it were nothinge before the. O how wayne are all men lyuynge? Sela. Yee euery man walketh as it were a shadowe, and disquieteth himself in wayne: he heapeth vp riches, and can not tell to whom he gathereth them. And now LORDE, wherin shall I comforte me? my hope is in the. Delyuer me from all myne offences, and make me not a scorne vnto the foolish. I kepe sylēce, and open not my mouth, for thou hast done it. Turne thy playes awaye fro me, for I am cōsumed thorow the feare of thy hāde. When thou punyshest man for synne, thou chastenest him: so that his beutie consumeth awaye, like as it were a mothe. O how wayne are all men?

Sela. Heare my prayer o LORDE, and conside my callinge: shewe not thy self as though thou sawest not my teares. For I am a stranger and pilgrymme with the, <sup>e</sup> as all my forefathers were. Oh spare me a litle, that I maye refresh my self, before I go hence, and be nomore sene.

B One depe calleth another with the voyce of thy whystles, "all thy waves & water floudes are gone ouer me." The LORDE hath promised his louynge kyndnesse daylie, therefore wil I prayse him in the night season, and make my prayer vnto  $\hat{y}$  God of my life. I wil saye vnto God my stony rock: why hast thou forgotten me? why go I thus heuely, whyle the enemy oppresseth me? Whyly my bones are broken, & whyle myne enemies cast me in the tette, daylie sayenge vnto me: where is now thy God? Why art thou so heuy (o my soule) & why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet thanke him for the helpe of his countenance, and because he is my God.

The rliij. Psalme.

A GEUE sentence vpon me (o God) & defende my cause agaynst the vnholy people: Oh delyuer me from the disceatfull & wicked man. For thou (o God) art my strength: why hast thou shot me from the? Why go I then so heuely, whyle the enemy oppresseth me? Oh sende out thy light & thy trueth,  $\hat{y}$  they maye lede me & brynge me vnto thy holy hill and to thy dwellinge.

That I maye go in to the alther of God, euen vnto the God which is my ioye & pleasure, & vpon the harpe to geue thakes vnto  $\hat{y}$ , o God, my God. Why art thou so heuy (o my soule) <sup>a</sup> & why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet geue him thakes for  $\hat{y}$  helpe of his countenance, and because he is my God.

The rliij. A psalme of the childre of Corah.

A WE haue herde with oure eares (o God) "oure fathers haue tolde vs, what thou hast done in their tyme, of olde.

How thou hast dryuē out the Heithen with thy honde, & plātēd thē in: how thou hast destroyed the nacions & cast thē out. For they gat not the londē in possession thorow their owne swerde, nether was it their owne arme that helped them. But thy right hāde, thyne arme & the light of thy countenance, because thou haddest a fauoure vnto them.

"Thou art  $\hat{y}$  kinge & my God, thou sendest helpe vnto Iacob. Thorow  $\hat{y}$ , wil we ouerthrowe oure enemies: & in thy name will we treade them vnder, that ryse vp agaynst vs.

For I will not trust in my bowe, it is not my swerde  $\hat{y}$  shal helpe me. But it is thou that sauest vs frō oure enemies, and putttest them to confucion that hate vs. We will allwaye make oure boast of God, and prayse thy name for euer. Sela. But now thou forsake vs, & putttest vs to confucion, and goest not forth with oure hoostes. <sup>B</sup> Thou makest vs to turne oure backs vpon oure enemies, so that they which hate vs, spoile oure goodes. "Thou lettest vs be eaten vp like shepe, & scatrest vs amonge the Heithen.

Thou sellest thy people for naught, & takest no moneye for them. Thou makest vs to be rebuked of oure neighbours, to be laughed to scorne and had in derision, of them that are rounde aboute vs. <sup>a</sup> Thou hast made vs a very byworde amonge the Heithen, & that the people shake their heades at vs. My cōfucion is daylie before me, & the shame of my face couereth me. For the voyce of the slaunderer & blasphemer, for the enemy and auenger. All this is come vpon vs, & yet haue we not forgotten the, ner behaued oure selues vnfaithfully in thy couenaunt. Oure hert is not turned backe, nether oure steppes gone out of thy waye. That thou smytest vs so in the place of the serpēt, & couerest vs with  $\hat{y}$  shadowe of death. Yf we had forgotten the name of oure God, & holdē vp oure hondes to eny straunge God: Shulde not God fynde it out? for he knoweth the very secretes of the hert. But for thy sake we are kyled all the daie longe, and are counted as shepe apoynted to be slayne. Vp LORDE, why slepest thou? Awake, and cast vs not of for euer. Wherefore hydest thou thy face? wilt thou cleue forget oure misery and oppressiō? For oure soule is brought lowe euen vnto the dust, and oure bely cleueth vnto the grounde. Arise o LORDE, helpe vs, and delyuer vs for thy mercie sake.

33 "Thy seate (o God) endureth for euer: the cepter of thy kyngdome is a right cepter.

Thou hast loued rightuousnesse, ⁊ hated iniquite: wherefore God (which is thy God) hath anoynted the with the oyle of gladnes aboute thy felowes. All thy garmentes are like myrre, Aloes ⁊ Cassia, when thou comest out of thine yuerie palaces in thy beutifull glory. Kynges daughters go in thy goodly araye, ⁊ vpon thy right hōde stondesth the queene in a vesture of the most fyne golde. Herken (o daughter) conside, ⁊ enclyne thine eare: forget thine owne people, ⁊ thy fathers house. So shal the kyng haue pleasure in thy beutie, for he is thy LORDE, ⁊ thou shalt worshiþe him. The daughters of Tyre shal be there with giftes,<sup>b</sup> the riche amonge the people shal make their supplicacion before the. The kynges daughter is all glorious within, hir clothinge is of wrought golde. She shalbe brought vnto the kyng in rayment of nedle worke, and maydens after her: soch as be next her shalbe brought vnto the. With ioye and gladnesse shal they be brought, and go in to the kynges palace. In steade of thy fathers thou hast gotten children, whom thou shalt make prynces in all londes. I wil remembre thy name from one generaciō to another: therefore shal the people geue thanks vnto the, worlde without ende.

33 I N oure troubles and aduersite, we haue founde, that God is oure refuge, oure strength and helpe. Therefore wil we not feare, though the earth fell, and though the hilles were caried in to the myddest of the see.

"Though the waters of the see raged ⁊ were neuer so troublous, ⁊ though the mountaynes shoke at the tēpest of the same. Sela.

"For there is a floude, which with his ryuers reioyseth ⁊ cite of God, the holy dwellynge of the most hyest. God is in ⁊ myddest of her, therefore shall she not be remoued: for God helpeth her, ⁊ ⁊ right early. The Heithen are madde, the kyngdomes make moche ado: but whē he sheweth his voyce, ⁊ earth melteth awaye. The LORDE of hoostes is with vs, the God of Iacob is oure defence.

Sela. O come hither, ⁊ beholde ⁊ workes of the LORDE, what destruccion he hath brought vpon ⁊ earth. "He hath made warres to ceasse in all the worlde: he hath broken the bowe, he hath knapped the speare in sonder, ⁊ brēt the charettes in the fyre. Be still thē ⁊ confesse ⁊ I am God: I wil be exalted amonge the Heithē, ⁊ I wil be exalted vpon earth. The LORDE of hoostes is with vs, the God of Iacob is oure defence. Sela.

33 O CLAPPE youre hōdes together (all ye people) O synge vnto God with the voyce of thākesgeyunge. For the LORDE the most hyest is to be feared, ⁊ he is the greate kyng vpon all ⁊ earth. He shal subdue the people vnder vs, ⁊ the Heithē vnder oure fete. He choseth vs for an heretage, the beutie of Iacob whom he loued. Sela. God is gone vp with a mery noyse, ⁊ the LORDE with the sownde of the trōpet. O synge prayses, synge prayses vnto God: O synge prayses, synge prayses vnto oure kyng.

For God is kyng of all the earth, O synge prayses vnto him with vnderstandinge.

God is kyng ouer the Heithē, God sitteth in his holy seate. The prynces of the people are gathered together vnto the God of Abraham: for God is farre farre hyer exalted, then the mightie lordes of the earth

The rlvij. A psalme of the children of Corah.

33 G REATE is ⁊ LORDE ⁊ hvelie to his praysed, in ⁊ cite of oure God, euē vpon his holy hill. The hill of Sion is like a fayre plāte, wherof all the londe reioyseth: vpon the north syde lyeth the cite of the greate kyng.

God is well knowne in hir palaces, ⁊ he is the defence of the same. "For lo, kynges are gathered, and gone by together. They marveled, to se soch thinges: they were astonied, ⁊ sodēly cast downe. Feare came there vpon thē, ⁊ sorowe as vpon a woman in hir trauayle. Thou shalt breake ⁊ shippes of the see, throw the east wynde. same for euer. Sela. We wayte for thy lounge kyndnesse (o God) in the myddest of thy temple. O God, according vnto thy name, so is thy prayse vnto the worldes ende: thy right hōde is full of righteousness.

“Oh let the moūt Sion reioyse, & y daughters of Iuda be glad because of thy iudgm̄tes. Walke aboute Sion, go rounde aboute her, and tell hir towres. Marke well hir walles, set vp hir houses: that it maye be tolde them y come after. For this God is oure God for euer & euer, and he shal allwaie be oure gyde.

The xliij. A psalme of the children of Corah.

A HEARE this, all ye people: pondre it well, all ye that dwell vpon the earth.

Hye & lowe, riche & poore, one with another. My mouth shal speake of wysdome, and my hert shal muse of vnderstondinge. I wil encline myne eare to the parable, & shewe my darcke speach vpon the harpe. Wherefore shulde I feare the euell dayes, whē the wickednesse of my heles cōpaseth me rounde aboute? They that put their trust in their good, & boost them selues in the multitude of their riches. No man maye deliuer his brother, ner make agrement for him vnto God.

B “For it costeth more to redeme their soules, so that he must let that alone for euer. Yee though he lye lōge, & se not y graue. “For it shal be sene, y soch wyse mē shal dye & perishe together, as well as the ignoraunt and foolish, & leaue their goodes for other. Loke what is in their houses, it cōtinueth still: their dwellinge places endure from one generacion to another, & are called after their owne names vpon the earth. Neuerthelesse mā abydeh not in soch honoure, but is cōpared vnto y brute beastes, & becōmeth like vnto the.

This waie of theirs is very foolishnesse, & yet their posterite prayse it with their mouth.

Sela. They lye in the hell like shepe, death shal gnawe vpon them, & the righteous shal haue dominacion of them in the mornyng by tymes: their strēgh shal consume, & hell shal be their dwellinge. But God shal deliuer my soule from the power of hell, when he receaueth me. Sela. O be not thou afrayed, when one is made riche, & the glory of his house increased. “For he shal cary nothinge awaye with him when he dyeth, nether shal his pompe folowe him. Whye he lyueth, he is counted an happie man: & so lōge as he is in prosperite, mē speake good of him. But whē he foloweth his fathers generacion, he shal neuer se light eny more.

When a man is in honoure and hath no vnderstōdinge, he is compared vnto the brute beastes, and becommeth like vnto them.

The xliij. A psalme of Asaph.

THE LORDE euen the mightie God hath spokē, & called the worlde from the rysinge vp of the sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. Out of Sion appeareth the glorious beutie of God. “Oure God shal come, and not kepe sylence: there goeth before him a consuminge fyre, and a mightie tempest rounde aboute him. He shal call the heauens from aboue, and the earth, that he maye iudge his people. Gather my sayntes together vnto me, those y set more by the couenant then by eny offeringe. And the heauens shal declare his rightuousnesse, for God is iudge himself.

Sela. Heare, o my people: let me speake, let me testifie amonge you, o Israel: I am God, euen thy God. I reprove the not because of thy sacrifice, thy burntofferings are allwaie before me. “I wil take no bullockes out of thy house, ner gotes out of thy foldes. For all the beestes of the felde are myne, and thousandes of catell vpon the hilles.

I knowe all the foules vpon the mountaynes, and the wilde beastes of the felde are in my sight. “Yf I be hongrie, I wil not tell the: for y whole worlde is myne, and all that therein is. Thynkest thou, that I wil eate the flesh of oxen, or drynke the bloude of goates? Offre vnto God prayse and thankesgeuyng, and paye thy vowes vnto the most hyest. “And call vpon me in the tyme of trouble, so wil I heare the, that thou shalt thanke me. But vnto the vngodly sayeth God: Why doest thou preach my lawes, and takest my couenant in thy mouth? Where as thou hatest to be re-fourned, and castest my wordes behynde the? Yf thou seist a thefe, thou runnest with him, and art partaker with the aduouterers. Thou lettest thy mouth speake wickednesse, & thy tonge paynteth disceate. The l. A psalme of Dauid.

HAUE mercy vpon me (o God) after thy goodnes, & acordinge vnto thy greate mercies, do awaye myne offences.

Wash me well from my wickednesse, & clense me from my synne.<sup>a</sup> For I knowlege my fautes, and my synne is euer before me.

Agaynst the only, agaynst the haue I synned, and done euell in thy sight: that thou mightest be iustified in thy saynges,<sup>b</sup> and shuldest ouer come when thou art iudged.

Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synne hath my mother conceaued me.

But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the treuth, and hast shewed me secrete wysdome. <sup>c</sup>O reconcile me with Isope, and I shal be clene: wash thou me, and I shalbe whyter then snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken, maye reioyse. Turne thy face from my synnes, and put out all my mysdedes. <sup>d</sup>Make me a clene hert (o God) and reuue a right sprete within me. Cast me not awaie from thy presence, and take not thy holy sprete from me. O geue me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and stablish me with thy fre sprete. Then shal I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, that synners maye be conuerted vnto the. Delyuer me from bloudegyltynesse o God, thou that art the God of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy rightuousnesse. Open my lippes (O LORDE) that my mouth maye shewe thy prayse.

The lii. A psalme of Dauid.

WHY boastest thou thy self (thou Ty-raunt) that thou canst do myschefe? Where as the goodnesse of God endureth yet daylie. Thy tonge ymagineth wickednesse, and with lyes it cutteth like a sharpe rasoure. Thou lovest vngraciousnesse more the good, to talke of lyes more then rightuousnesse. Sela.

Thou lonest to speake all wordes y maye do hurte. O thou false tōge. Therefore shal God cleane destroye the, smyte the in peces, plucke the out of thy dwellinge, and rote the out of the londe of the luynges. Sela.

The rightuous shal se this, & feare, and laugh him to scorne. <sup>h</sup>Lo, this is the mā, y toke not God for his strēgh, but trusted vnto the multitude of his riches, & was mightie in his wickednesse. As for me, I am like a grene olyue tre in y house of God: my trust is in the tender mercy of God for euer & euer.

I wil allwaye geue thanks vnto the, for that thou hast done: and wil hope in thy name, for thy sayntes like it well.

The liij. A psalme of Dauid.

THE foolish bodies saye in their hertes: <sup>i</sup>Tush, there is no God. Corrupte are they, and become abhominable in their wickedneses: there is not one, that doth good. God loked downe from heauen vpō the children of men, to se yf there were eny that wolde vnderstonde, or seke after God. <sup>k</sup>But they are all gone out of y waye, they are all become vnprofitable: there is none y doth good, no not one. How cā they haue vnderstondinge, that are the workers of wickednes, eatinge vp my people as it were bred, & call not vpon God? They are afrayed, where no feare is: for God breaketh the bones of them that besege the: thou putteth them to confusion, for God despieth them. Oh y the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out of Sion: Oh that the LORDE wolde delyuer his people out of captiuyte. Then shulde Iacob reioyse, & Israel shulde be right glad.

The liiiij. A psalme of Dauid.

HEARE my prayer (o God) and hyde not thy self fro my petition. Take hede vnto me and heare me, how piteously I mourne & cōplayne. The enemy crieth so, & the vngodly commeth on so fast: for they are mynded to do me some myschefe, so maliciously are they set agaynst me. My herte is heuy within me, and the feare of death is fallen vpon me. Fearfullnesse and tremblinge are come vpon me, and an horrible drede hath ouerwhelmed me. And I sayde: O that I had wynges like a doue, that I might fle somewhere, and be at rest. Lo, then wolde I get me awaye farre of, and remayne in the wilderness. Sela.

I wolde make haist to escape, from the stormy wynde and tempest. Destroye their tonges (o LORDE) and deuyde them, <sup>b</sup> for I se vnrightuousnes & strife in <sup>g</sup> cite. This goeth daye and night aboute the walles, myschefe and vyce are in the myddest of it.

Wickednesse is therin, disceate and gyle go not out of hir stretes. Yf it were myne enemy that reuyled me, I coude beare it: or yf one that ought me euell wil dyd threaten me, I wolde hyde myself from him. But it is thou my companion, <sup>c</sup> my gyde and myne owne familier frēde. We had swete and secrete communicacion together, and louingly walked we together in <sup>g</sup> house of God.

As for me, I will call vnto God, and the LORDE shall helpe me. In the eueuinge, mornyng and at noone daye wil I mourne and complayne: and he shal heare my voyce.

It is he that deliyuereth my soule in peace, from them that laye waite for me: for they are many agaynst me. Yee euen God that endureth for euer, shal heare me, and brynge them downe. Sela.

For they wil not turne: and why? they feare not God. Yee they laye hondes vpon such as be at peace with him, and so thei breake his couenaunt. Their mouthes are softer then butter, & yet haue they batell in their mynde: their wordes are smother then oyle, and yet be they very swerdes. 'O cast thy burthen (or care) vpon the LORDE, he shal norish the, and not leaue the rightuous in vnquietnesse. But as for them, thou (o God) shalt cast them downe in to the pitte of destruction. The bloudthurstie and disceatfull shal not lyue out half their daies. Neuerthelesse my trust is in the.

BE mercifull vnto me (o God) for men wil treade me downe: they are daylie fightinge & troublinge me. Myne enemies treade me daylie vnder their fete, for they be many, & proudly fight agaynst me.

Neuerthelesse, whē I am afrayed, I put my trust in the. I wil comforte my self in Gods worde, yee I wil hope in God, and not feare: What can flesh then do vnto me?

They vexe me daylie in my wordes: all <sup>g</sup> they ymagin, is to do me euell. They holde altogether, & kepe them selues close: they marck my steppes, how they maye catch my soule. But in vayne, for it shal escape the: and why? thou (o God) in thy displeasure shalt cast downe soch people. Thou tellest my flittinges, thou puttest my teares in thy botell, and nombrest them. When so euer I call vpon the, myne enemies are put to flight: wherby I knowe, that thou art my God. In Gods worde wil I reioyse, in the LORDES worde wil I comforte me. Yee in God do I trust, & am not afraied: what cā man the do vnto me? Vnto the (o God) wil I paye my vowes, vnto <sup>g</sup> wil I geue thākes & prayse. inges had wel nye slipte. And why? I was greued at  $\hat{y}$  wicked,<sup>a</sup> to se the vngodly in soch prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they plaged like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puffed vp in pryde, & ouerwhelmed with crueltie and vnrightuousnesse. Their eyes swell for fatnesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heauen, & their tonge goeth thorow the worlde. Therefore fall the people vnto them, and there out sucke they no small auantage. <sup>b</sup>Tush (saye they) how shulde God perceaue it? is there knowlege in the most hyest? Lo, these are the vngodly, these prospere in the worlde, these haue riches in possession. Shulde I then cense my hert in vayne (thought I) & wash my hondes in innocency? Wherefore shulde I be then punyshed daylie, & be chastened euery mornynge? Yee I had almost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children. Then thought I to vnderstonde this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I wete in to  $\hat{y}$  Sanctuary of God, & considered the ende of these men. Remembre this (o LORDE) how the enemye rebuketh, & how the foolish people blaspheme thy name. are full of wickednesse. O let not the synple go awaye ashamed, for the poore & nedy geue prayes vnto thy name. Aryse (o God) & manteyne thine owne cause, remembre how the foolish mā blasphemeth the daylie. Forget not the voyce of thine enemies, for the presumption of them that hate the, increaseth euer more & more.

VNTO the (o God) will we geue thākes, yee vnto the wyll we geue thankes, & seynge thy name is so nye, we will tell of thy wonderous workes. When I maye get a conuenient tyme, I shal iudge acordinge vnto right. The earth is weake & all that is therein, but I beare vp hir pilers. Sela.

I sayde vnto the madde people: deale not so madly, & to the vngodly: set not vp youre hornes. Set not vp youre hornes an hye, & speake not with a stiff necke. For promociō commeth nether from the east ner from the west, ner yet frō the wyldernesse. And why? God is the iudge: he putteth downe one & setteth vp another. For in the honde of the LORDE there is a cuppe full of stronge wyne, & he poureth out of the same: As for the dregges therof, all ſ vngodly of the earth shal drynke them, & sucke them out. But I wil talke of the God of Iacob, & prayse him for euer. All the hornes of the vngodly will I breake, & ſ hornes of the righteous shalbe exalted.

The lxxv. A psalme of Asaph.

IN Iuda is God knowne, his name is greate in Israel. At Salem is his tabernacle, & his dwellinge in Sion. There breaketh he the arrowes of the bowe, & shylde, the swerde & the whole battayll.

Sela. Thou art of more honoure & might thē the hilles of robbers. The proude shalbe robbed & slepe their slepe, & ſ mightie shalbe able to do nothinge with their hōdes. Whē thou rebukest them (o God of Iacob) both the charrettes & horsmen shal fall on slepe. Thou art feareful, for who maye abyde in thy sight, when thou art angrie? When thou latest thy iudgment be herde from heauen, the erth trembleth & is still. Yee when God aryseth to geue iudgment, & to helpe all them that be in aduersite vpon earth. Sela.

When thou punysshest one man, he must knowlege, that thou art redy to punysh other mo. The lxxvi. A psalme of Asaph.

I CRIED vnto God with my voyce, yee euen vnto God cried I with my voyce, & he herde me. In the tyme of my trouble I sought the LORDE, I helde vp my hondes vnto him in the night season, for my soule refused all other comforte. When I was in heuynesse, I thought vpō God: whē my hert was vexed, then dyd I speake.

Sela. Thou heldest myne eyes wakyng, I was so feble, that I coude not speake. Then remembered I the tymes of olde, & the yeares that were past. I called to remembrance my songe in the night, I commoned with myne owne herte, and sought out my sprete. Wil the LORDE cast out for euer?

Wil he be nomore intreated? Is his mercy cleane gone? Is his promyse come vtterly to an ende for euermore? Hath the LORDE forgotten to be gracious? Or, hath he shut vp his louynge kyndnesse in displeasure? Sela. At the last I came to this poynte, that I thought: O why art thou so foolish? the right honde of the most hiest can chaunge all.

Therefore wil I remembre the workes of the LORDE, and call to mynde thy wonders of olde tyme. I wil speake of all thy workes, and my talkynge shalbe of thy doinges.

Thy waye (o God) is holy, who is so greate & mightie as God? Thou art the God, that doth wonders, thou hast declared thy power amonge the people. The lxxvij. A psalme of Asaph.

HEARE my lawe (o my people) encline youre eares vnto  $\hat{y}$  wordes of my mouth. <sup>a</sup>I wil open my mouth in parables, and speake of thinges of olde. Which we haue herde and knowne, and soch as oure fathers haue tolde vs. That we shulde not hyde them from the children of the generacions to come: but to shewe the honoure of the LORDE, his might and wonderfull workes that he hath done. He made a couenaunt with Iacob, <sup>b</sup>and gaue Israel a lawe, which he comaunded oure forefathers to teach their children. That their posterite might knowe it, and the children which were yet vborne.

To the intent  $\hat{y}$  when they came vp, they might shewe their children the same. That they also might put their trust in God,  $\tau$  not to forget what he had done, but to kepe his comaundementes. <sup>c</sup>And not to be as their forefathers, a frowarde and ouerthwarte generacion, a generacion that set not their herte a right, and whose sprete was not true towarde God. Like as the children of Ephraim, which beyng harnesssed and carienge bowes, turned them selues backe in the tyme of battayll. They kepte not the couenaunt of God,  $\tau$  wolde not walke in his lawe.

They forgot what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had shewed for them. Maruelous thinges dyd he in the sight of their fathers in the londe of Egipte, euen in the felde of Zoan. <sup>d</sup>He deuyded the see and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to stonde like a wall. <sup>e</sup>In the daye tyme he led them with a cloude, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloaue the hard rockes in the wilderness, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had bene out of the greate deapth. He brought waters out of the stony rocke, so that they gushed out like the ryuers. Yet for all this they synned agaynst him, and prouoked the most hyest in the wilderness. They tempted God in their hertes, and requyred meate for their lust. <sup>f</sup>For they spake agaynst God and sayde: Yee yee, God shal prepare a table in the wyldernes, shall he? Lo, he smote the stony rocke, that the watery streames gushed out, and the streames flowed withall: but how can he geue bred and prouyde flesh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroth: so the fyre was kyndled in Iacob, and heuy displeasure agaynst Israel.

Because they beleued not in God, and put not their trust in his helpe. So he comaunded the cloudes aboue, and opened the dores of heauen. <sup>g</sup>He rayned downe Manna vpo them for to eate, and gaue them bred from heauen. Then ate they angels fode, for he sent them meate yough. He caused the east wynde to blowe vnder the heauen, and thorow his power he brought in the south wynde. <sup>h</sup>He made flesh to rayne vpon them as thicke as dust, and fethered foules like the sonde of  $\hat{y}$  see. He let it fall amoge their tētes rōude aboute their habitaciōs. So they ate  $\tau$  were fylled, for he gaue them their owne desyre. <sup>i</sup>They were not dispoyned of their lust.

But whyle  $\hat{y}$  meate was yet in their mouthes: The heuy wrath of God came vpo thē, slewe  $\hat{y}$  welthiest of thē,  $\tau$  smote downe  $\hat{y}$  chosen men of Israel. But for all this they synned yet more, <sup>k</sup>and beleued not his wōderous workes. Therfore their dayes were consumed in vanite, and sodenly their yeares were gone. When he slewe them, they sought him, and turned them early vnto God.

They thought then that God was their socoure, and that the hye God was their redeemer. Neuerthesse, they dyd but flater him in their mouthes, and dissembled with him in their tonges. For their herte was not whole with him, nether continued they in his couenaunt. But he was so mercifull, that he forgave their mysdedes, and destroyed them not: Yee many a tyme turned he his wrath awaye, and wolde not suffice his whole displeasure to aryse. <sup>l</sup>For he considered  $\hat{y}$  they were but flesh: euen a wynde that passeth awaye, and commeth not agayne. O how oft haue they greued him in the wilderness? How many a tyme haue they prouoked him in the deserte? They turned backe  $\tau$  tempted God, and moued the holy one in Israel. They thought not of his hâde, in  $\hat{y}$  daye when he delyuered them from the hande of  $\hat{y}$  enemye. How he had wrought his miracles in Egipte, and his wôders in the londe of Zoan. How he turned their waters in to bloude, so that they might not drynke of the ryuers.<sup>a</sup> How he sent lyse amonge them, to eate them vp, and frogges to destroye them. How he gaue their frutes vnto the catirpiller, and their labour vnto the greshopper. <sup>b</sup>How he bett downe their vynyardes with hayle stones, and their Molbery trees with the frost. How he smote their cattell with haylestones, and their flockes with hote thôder boltes. How he sent vpon them  $\hat{y}$  furiousnesse of his wrath, anger  $\tau$  displeasure: with trouble and fallinge in of euil angels. <sup>c</sup>When he made a waye to his fearfull indignaciô, and spared not their soules from death, yee and gaue their cattell ouer to the pestilence. <sup>d</sup>When he smote all the firstborne in Egipte, the most principall and mightiest in  $\hat{y}$  dwellings of Ham.

The fyre consumed their yonge men, and their maydes were not geuen to mariage.

Their prestes were slayne with the swerde, and there were no wyddowes to make lamentacion. So the LORDE awaked as one out of slepe, and like a giaunte refreshed with wyne. <sup>h</sup>He smote his enemies in  $\hat{y}$  hynder partes, and put them to a perpetuall shame. He refused the tabernacle of Ioseph, and chose not the trybe of Ephraim. Neuerthelesse, he chose  $\hat{y}$  trybe of Iuda, euē the hill of Sion which he loued. <sup>i</sup>And there he buylded his temple on hye, and layed  $\hat{y}$  fundacion of it like  $\hat{y}$  grounde, that it might perpetually endure. <sup>j</sup>He chose Dauid also his seruauit, and toke him awaye from the shepe foldes. As he was followinge the yowes greate with yonge, he toke him, that he might fede Iacob his people, and Israel his inheritaunce. So he fed them with a faithfull and true hert, and ruled them with all  $\hat{y}$  diligence of his power.

O GOD,  $\hat{y}$  Heithen are fallen in to thine heretage: <sup>k</sup>thy holy temple haue they defyled, and made Ierusalem an heape of stones. <sup>l</sup>The deed bodies of thy seruantes haue they geuen vnto  $\hat{y}$  foules of the ayre to be deuoured, and the flesh of thy sayntes vnto  $\hat{y}$  beestes of the londe. Their bloude haue they shed like water on euery syde of Ierusalem, and there was no mā to burie them. <sup>m</sup>We are become an open shame vnto oure enemies, a very scorne and derision vnto them that are rounde aboute vs.

LORDE, how longe wilt thou be angrie? shal thy gelousy burne like fyre for euer? Poure out thy indignacion vpon the Heithen that knowe the not, <sup>n</sup>and vpon the kyngdomes that call not vpon thy name.

For they haue deuoured Iacob, and layed waiste his dwellinge place. <sup>o</sup>O remēbre not oure olde synnes, but haue mercy vpon vs ( $\tau$  that soone) for we are come to greate mysery.

The lxxxv. Psalme. A prayer of David.

BOWE downe thine eare (o LORDE) and heare me, for I am cōfortles and poore. O kepe my soule, for I am holy: my God, helpe thy seruauant that putteth his trust in the. Be mercifull vnto me (o LORDE) for I call daylie vpon the. Cōforte the soule of thy seruauant, for vnto the (o LORDE) do I lift vp my soule. "For thou LORDE art good and gracious, & of greate mercy vnto all them that call vpon the.

Geue eare LORDE vnto my prayer, and ponde my humble desyre. In the tyme of my trouble I call vpon the, for thou hearest me. Amonge the goddes there is none like the o LORDE, there is not one that cā do as thou doest. All nacions whom thou hast made, shall come and worships before the o LORDE, and shal glorifie thy name. For thou art greate, thou doest wonderous thinges, thou art God alone. Lede me in thy waye (o LORDE) that I maye walke in thy trueth: O let my hert delyte in fearynge thy name. I thanke the o LORDE my God, & wil prayse thy name for euer. For greate is thy mercy towarde me, 'thou hast deliuered my soule from y<sup>e</sup> nethermost hell. O God, the proude are rysen agaynst me, and the cōgregation of y<sup>e</sup> mightie seketh after my soule, & set not y<sup>e</sup> before their eyes. 'But thou (o LORDE God) art full of compassion and mercy, longe suffrynge, greate in goodnesse & trueth. O turne the then vnto me, haue mercy vpō me: geue thy strength vnto thy seruauant, & helpe the some of thy handmaydē.

Shewe some tokē vpon me for good, that they which hate me, maye se it and be ashamed: because thou LORDE hast helped me, & comforted me.

The lxxxvii. A psalme of the children of Corah.

O LORDE God my Sauyoure, I crie a daye & night before the: Oh let my prayer entre in to thy presence, endline thine eare vnto my callinge. For my soule is full of trouble, & my life draweth nye vnto hell. I am coited as one of thē that go downe vnto the pytte, I am euē as a mā that hath no strēth. Fre amōge the deed, like vnto thē y<sup>e</sup> lye in the graue, which be out of remembraunce, and are cutt awaye from thy honde. Thou hast layed me in the lowest pytte, in y<sup>e</sup> darcknesse and in the depe. Thy indignacion lieth hard vpon me, and thou vexest me with all thy floudes. Sela. Thou hast put awaye myne acquitaunce farre fro me, & made me to be abhorred of them: I am so fast in preson, that I can not get forth.

My sight fayleth for very trouble: LORDE, I call daylie vpō the, and stretch out my hondes vnto the. 'Doest thou shewe wonders amonge the deed? Can the physiciā rayse them vp agayne, that they maye prayse the? / Maye thy louynge kyndnes be shewed in the graue, or thy faithfulness in destruction? Maye thy wonderous workes be knowne in the darcke, or thy righteousnes in the londe where all thinges are forgottē?

Vnto the I crie (o LORDE) and early cōmeth my prayer before the. LORDE, why putttest thou awaye my soule? Wherefore hydest thou thy face fro me? My strength is gone for very sorow and misery, with fearfulness do I beare thy burthens. Thy wrothfull displeasure goeth ouer me, the feare of the oppresseth me. They come rounde aboute me daylie like water, and compase me together on euery syde. My louers and frēdes hast thou put awaye fro me, and turned awaye myne acquitaunce.

For who is he amonge the cloudes, that maye be cōpared vnto the LORDE? <sup>e</sup> Yee what is he amonge the goddes, that is like vnto the LORDE? God is greatly to be feared in the counsell of the sayntes, <sup>f</sup> and to be had in reuerence of all thē that are aboute him. O LORDE God of hoostes, who is like vnto the in power? thy trueth is rounde aboute the. <sup>g</sup> Thou rulest the pryde of the see, thou stillest the wawes thereof, whē they arise. Thou breakest the proude, like one that is wounded, thou scatrest thine enemies abrode with thy mightie arme. The heauens are thine, the earth is thine: thou hast layed the foundaciō of the roude worlde and all that therein is. Thou hast made the north and the south, Tabor and Hermon shal reioyse in thy name. Thou hast a mightie arme, stronge is thy hande, and hye is thy right hande. A prayer of Moses the man of God.

LORDE, thou art oure refuge from one generacion to another. Before the mountaynes were brought forth, or euer the earth & the worlde were made, thou art God from cuerlastinge and worlde with out ende. Thou turnest man to destruction, Agayne, thou sayest: come agayne ye children of men. <sup>b</sup>For a thousande yeares in thy sight are but as yesterdaye that is past, and like as it were a night watch.

<sup>c</sup>As soone as thou scatrest them, they are euen as a slepe, and fade awaye sodenly like the grasse. <sup>d</sup>In the mornynge it is grene and groweth vp, but in the euenynge it is cutt downe and withered. For we consume awaye in thy displeasure, and are afrayed at thy wrothfull indignacion. Thou settest oure miszdedes before the, and oure secrete synnes in the light of thy countenance. For when thou art angrie, all oure dayes are gone, we brynge oure yeares to an ende, as it were a tayle that is tolde. The dayes of oure age are iij. score yeares & ten: & though men be so stronge that they come to iijj. score yeares, yet is their strength then but laboure and sorowe: so soone passeth it awaye, & we are gone. But who regardeth the power of thy wrath, thy fearfull & terrible displeasure? <sup>e</sup>O teach vs to nombre oure dayes, that we maye applie <sup>f</sup>oure hertes vnto wysdome.

Turne the agayne (o LORDE) at the last, and be gracious vnto thy seruantes. O satisfie vs with thy mercy, and that soone: so shal we reioyse and be glad all the dayes of oure life. Who so preuely slaundreth his neyghboure, him wil I destroye: Who so hath a proude loke & an hye stomacke, I maye not awaye with him. Myne eyes shal loke for such as be faithfull in the londe, <sup>h</sup>they maye dwell with me: and who so ledeth a godly life, shal be my seruauant. There shall no disceatfull personne dwell in my house, he that telleth lyes shal not tary in my sight. I shal soone destroye all the vngodly of the londe, that all wicked doers maye be roted out of the cite of the LORDE.

The ci. Psalme.

HEARE my prayer<sup>i</sup> (o LORDE) and let <sup>j</sup>my crye come vnto the. Hyde not thy face from me in the tyme of my trouble: enclyne thine eares vnto me when I call, O heare me, and that right soone. For my dayes are consumed awaye like smoke, & my bones are brent vp as it were a fyre brande.

My hert is smytted downe and wythered like grasse, so that I forget to eate my bred.

<sup>k</sup>For the voyce of my gronyng, my bone wil scarce cleue to my flesh. I am become like a Pellicane in the wildernes, and like an Oule in a broken wall. I wake, and am euen as it were a sparow sittinge alone vpon the house toppe. Myne enemies reuyle me all the daye longe, they laugh me to scorne, and are sworne together against me. I eate ashes with my bred, and mengle my drynke with wepyng. And that because of thy indignacion and wrath, for thou hast taken me vp, and cast me awaye. My dayes are gone like a shadowe, and I am wythered like grasse. But thou (o LORDE) endurest for euer, and thy remembraunce thorow out all generacions. Arise therefore and haue mercy vpon Sion, <sup>l</sup>for it is tyme to haue mercy vpon her, yee the tyme is come. And why? thy seruantes haue a loue to hir stones, & it pitieth them to se her in the dust. The Heithen shal feare thy name (o LORDE) and all the kynges of the earth thy maiesty. For the LORDE shal buylde vp Sion, and shal appeare in his glory. He turneth him vnto the prayer of the poore destitute, and despyseth not their desyre. This shalbe written for those y come after, that the people which shalbe borne, maye prayse the LORDE.

For He loketh downe from his Sanctuary, out of the heauen doth the LORDE behold the earth.

That he maye heare the mournynge of soch as be in captiuyte, and delyuer the children of death. That they maie preach the name of the LORDE in Sion, and his worshipe at Ierusalem. When the people are gathered together, and the kyngdomes also to serue y LORDE. He hath brought downe my strength in my journey, and shortened my dayes. Yet wil I saye: O my God, take me not away in y myddel of myne age: as for thy yeares, they endure thorow out all generacions. They shal perishe, but thou shalt endure: they all shall wexe olde as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt thou chaunge the, and they shalbe chaunged. But thou art the same, and thy yeares shal not fayle.

The ciiij. A psalme of Dauid.

PRAYSE the LORDE (o my soule) and all that is within me prayse his holy name. Prayse the LORDE o my soule, and forget not all his benefites. Which forgeueth all thy synnes, and healeth all thy infirmities. Which saue thy life from destruccion, and crowne the with mercy and louynge kyndnesse. Which satisfieth thy desyre with good thinges, makynge the yonge and lusty as an Aegle. The LORDE executeth rightuousnesse and iudgment, for all them y suffre wronge. He shewed his wayes vnto Moses, and his workes vnto the children of Israel. The LORDE is full of compassion and mercy, longe sufferinge, and of greate goodness. He wil not allwaye be chydynge, nether wil he kepe his anger for euer.

He hath not dealt with vs after oure synnes, ner rewarded vs accordinge to oure wickednesses. For loke how hye the heauē is in comparison of the earth, so greate is his mercy also towarde them that feare him.

Loke how wyde the east is from the west, so farre hath he set oure synnes from vs.

Yee like as a father pitieth his owne children, euen so is the LORDE mercifull vnto the that feare him. For he knoweth wherof we be made, he remembreth that we are but dust. That a man in his tyne is but as is grasse, and floriseth as a floure of the felde.

For as soone as the wynde goeth ouer it, it is gone, and the place therof knoweth it nomore. But the mercifull goodness of y LORDE endureth for euer and euer, vpon them y feare him, and his rightuousnesse vpon their childers children. Soch as kepe his couenaunt, and thinke vpon his commaundementes to do them. The LORDE hath prepared his seate in heauē, and his kyngdome ruleth ouer all. O prayse the LORDE ye angels of his, ye that be mightie in strength, fulfillingge his commaundement, that me maye heare the voyce of his wordes. O prayse the LORDE all ye his hoostes, ye seruantes of his, that do his pleasure. O speake good of the LORDE all ye workes of his, in euery place of his dominion: prayse thou the LORDE, o my soule.

The ciiij. Psalmc.

PRAYSE the LORDE o my soule: O LORDE my God, thou art become exceedinge glorious, thou art clothed with maiesty and honoure. Thou deckest thy self with light, as it were with a garment, thou spreddest out the heauen like a curtayne.

Thou voltest it aboue with waters, thou makest the cloudes thy charet, and goest vpon the wynges of the wynde. Thou makest thine angels spretes, and thy ministers flammes of fyre. Thou hast layed y earth vpon hir foundacion, that it neuer moueth at any tyme. Thou couerest it with the depe like as with a garnēt, so that the waters stonde aboue the hilles. Seke the LORDE, and his strength, seke his face euermore. Remembre the maruelous workes that he hath done, his wonders and the iudgments of his mouth. O ye sede of Abraham his seruauant, ye children of Iacob his chosen. He is the LORDE oure God, worde came, and till the worde of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE had tried him. "Then sent the kinge and caused him be deluyered, the prynce of the people bad let him go. He made him lorde of his house,  $\tau$  ruler of all his substaunce. That he might enfourme his prynces after his wil, and teach his Senatours wysdome.  $\hat{b}$  Israel also came in to Egipte, and Iacob was a straunger in the lode of Ham.

$\hat{c}$  But he increased his people exceedingly, and made them stronger then their enemies.

"Then sent he Moses his seruaunt, and Aaron whom he had chosen. These dyd his tokens amōge them, and wonders in the londe of Ham. "He sent dareknesse and it was darcke, for they were not obedient vnto his worde.

"He turned their waters in to bloude, and slewe their fishe. Their londe brought forth frogges, $\hat{c}$  yee euen in their kynges chambers. He spake the worde,  $\tau$  their came all maner of flies  $\tau$  lise in all their quarters. He gaue them hale stones for rayne, and flammes of fyre in their lode. He smote their vynyardes  $\tau$  fige trees, and destroyed the trees that were in their coastes. He spake  $\hat{y}$  worde,  $\hat{a}$  and their came greshoppers  $\tau$  catirpillers innumerable. These ate vp all the grasse in their lode, and deuoured the frutes of their grofde.

$\hat{e}$  He smote all  $\hat{y}$  first borne in their lode, $\hat{f}$  euen the chefe of all their substaunce. He brought them forth with syluer  $\tau$  golde, there was not one feble personne amōge their trybes. Egipte was glad of their departinge, for they were afraied of the.

"He spred out a cloude to be a couerynge, and fyre to geue light in the night season.

"At their desyre, there came quales, and he fylled them with the bred of heauē. "He opened the rocke of stone,  $\tau$  the waters flowed out: so that ryuers ranne in the wilderness.

For why, he remembered his holy promyse which he had made vnto Abraham his seruaunt. Thus he brought forth his people with ioye, and his chosen with gladnesse.

And gaue them the lodes of the Heithē, where they toke the labours of the people in possession. That they might kepe his statutes, and obserue his lawes. Halleluya.

The cō. Psalmc. Halleluya.

O GEUF thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. "Who can expresse  $\hat{y}$  noble actes of the LORDE, or shewe forth all his prayse? Blessed are they that allwaye kepe iudgment, and do rightuousnes. Remembre vs (o LORDE) accordinge to the fauoure that thou bearest vnto thy people: o vyset vs with thy sauinge health. That we might se the pleasure of thy chosen, that we might reioyse in the gladnesse of thy people, and geue thanks with thine enheritaunce. "We haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Oure fathers regarded not thy wonders in Egipte, they kepte not thy greate goodnesse in remembrance: but were dishobedit at the see, euē at the reed see. Neuertheles, he helped the for his names sake, that he might make his power to be knowne. He rebuked the reed see, and it was dried vp:  $\hat{f}$  so he led the thorow the depe as in a wilderness. Thus he saued them from the honde of the hater,  $\tau$  deluyered them from the honde of the enemy.

As for those  $\hat{y}$  troubled them, the waters ouerwhelmed the, there was not one of the left. "Then beleued they in his worde, and songe prayse vnto him. But within a whyle they forgot his workes,  $\tau$  wolde not abyde his counsell. "A lust came vpō them in the wilderness, so that they tempted God in the deserte. Yet he gaue them their desyre, and sent the ynough at their willes. They angered Moses in the tētes, $\hat{f}$  and Aaron the saynte of the LORDE. So the earth opened  $\tau$  swallowed vp Dathan, and couered the congregaciō of Abiram. The fyre was kyndled in their company, the flame brent vp the vngodly. Yee they thought scorne of y<sup>e</sup> pleasant loude, and gaue no credence vnto his worde.

But murmured in their tentes, and herkened not vnto the voyce of the LORDE.

Then lift he vp his honde agaynst them, to ouerthrowe them in the wilderness. To cast out their sede amonge the nacions, and to scatter them in the londes. They ioyned them selues vnto Baal Peor, and ate the offeringes of the deed. Thus they prouoked him vnto anger with their owne inuencions, and the plage was greate amonge them.

Then stode vp Phineas and executed iustice, so to the plage ceased. And that was counted vnto him for rightuousnesse, amonge all posterites for euermore. They angered him also at the waters of strife, so that Moses was punyshed for their sakes. Because they prouoked his sprete, and he tolde th<sup>e</sup> plainly with his lippes. Neither destroyed they the Heithen, as the LORDE commaunded them. But were mengled amonge the Heithen, and lerned their workes.

In so much that they worshipped their ymages, which turned to their owne decaye.

Yee they offred their sonnes and their daughters vnto deuels. And shed the innocent bloude of their sonnes and of their daughters, whom they offred vnto the ymages of Canaan, so that the londe was defyled with bloude. Thus were they stayned with their owne workes, and wente a whoringe with their owne inuencions. Therefore was the wrath of the LORDE kyndled agaynst his people, in so much that he abhorred his owne enheritaunce. And gaue them ouer in to the honde of the Heith<sup>e</sup>, and they that bated them, were lordes ouer them. Their enemies oppressed th<sup>e</sup>, and had them in subieccion. Many a tyme dyd he deliuer them, but they prouoked him with their owne inuencions, and were brought downe for their wickednesse. Neuerthelesse wh<sup>e</sup> he sawe their aduersite, he herde their complaynte. He thought vpo his couenaunt, and pitied th<sup>e</sup>, acordinge vnto the multitude of his mercies. Yee he made all those y<sup>e</sup> had led them awaye captiue, to pitie them. Deliyer vs (o LORDE oure God) gather vs from amōge the Heithen: that we maye geue thanks to thy holy name, and make oure boast of thy prayse. Blessed be the LORDE God of Israel from euerlastinge and worlde without ende, and let all people saye: Amen, Amen. Halleluya.

The cxi. Psalme.

GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. Let them geue thākes whom the LORDE hath redemed, and deliyuered from the hande of the enemye. And gathered th<sup>e</sup> out of the londes, fro the east, fro the west, fro the north and fro the south.

They wente astraye in the wilderness in an vtroden waye, and founde no cite to dwell in. Hongrie and thirstie, and their soule faynted in th<sup>e</sup>. So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, and he deliyuered th<sup>e</sup> from their distresse. He led th<sup>e</sup> forth by y<sup>e</sup> right waie, y<sup>e</sup> they might go to y<sup>e</sup> cite where they dwelt.

O that mē wolde prayse the goodnesse of the LORDE, and the wonders that he doth for the childrē of mē. For he satisfied the emptye soule, and fylled the hongrie soule with good.

Such as sat in darcknesse and in the shadowe of death, beyng fast bounde in misery and yron. Because they were not obediēt to the commaundementes of God, but lightly regarded the counsell of the most highest.

Their herte was vexed with labour, they fell downe, and there was none to helpe them.

So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, and he deliyuered them out of their distresse. He brought th<sup>e</sup> out of darcknesse and out of the shadowe of death, and brake their bondes in sonder. O that men wolde prayse the goodnesse of the LORDE, and the wōders that he doth for the childrē of men. For he hath broken the gates of brasse, and smittē the barres of yron in sonder. Foolish mē were plagued for their offence, and because of their wickednesse. Their soule abhorred all maner of meate, they were euē harde at deathes dore. So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, and he deliyuered th<sup>e</sup> out of their distresse. He sent his worde and healed th<sup>e</sup>, and sauēd th<sup>e</sup> from destruction. O that men wolde prayse the goodnesse of the LORDE, and the wonders that he doth for the children of men. That they wolde offre vnto him the Moab is my wash pottle, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue, Philistea shal be glad of me. Who wil lede me in to the stronge cite? Who wil brynge me in to Edom? Shalt not thou do it (o God) which hast cast vs out: thou God, ⁊ wtestest not forth with oure hoostes? O be thou oure helpe in trouble, for vayne is the helpe of man. <sup>a</sup> HOLDE not thy tōge, o God of my prayse. For the mouth of the vngodly, yee and the mouth of the disceatfull is opened vpon me, and speake agaynst me with false tōges. They compase me aboute with wordes of hatred, ⁊ fight agaynst me without a cause. For the loue that I had vnto them, they take now my contrary parte, but I geue my self vnto prayer.

Let them be allwaye before the LORDE, but as for the memoriall of them selues, let it perish from out of the earth. And that because his mynde was not to do good, but persecuted the poore helplesse, and him that was vexed at the herte, to slaye him. His delite was in cursynge, and therefore shall it happe vnto him: he loned not blessinge, and that shall be farre frō him. He clothed him self with cursynge like as with a rayment: yee it wente in to his bowels like water, and like oyle in to his bones. Let it be vnto him as the cloke that he hath vpon him, and as the gyrdle that he is gyrded withall. Let it thus happen from the LORDE vnto myne enemies, and to those that speake euell agaynst my soule. But deale thou with me (o LORDE God) accordinge vnto thy name, for swete is thy mercy. O delyuer me, for I am helplesse & poore, & my herte is wounded within me. I go hence like ŷ shadowe that departeth, and am dryuen awaye as ŷ greshoppers. My knees are weake thorow fastynge, my flesh is dried vp for want of fatnesse. I am become a rebuke vnto them, they loke vpō me<sup>a</sup> and shake their heades. Helpe me o LORDE my God, oh saue me for thy mercies sake. That they maye knowe, how that this is thy hande, and that thou hast done it. Though they curse, yet blesse thou: and let them be cōfounded, that ryse vp agaynst me, but let thy seruaunt reioyse. Let myne aduersaries be clothed with their owne shame, as with a cloake.

As for me, I wil geue thanks vnto the LORDE with my mouth, and prayse him amonge the multitude. <sup>b</sup>For he stondesth at the right hande of the poore, to saue him from such as condemne his soule.

The cix. A psalme of Dauid.

THE LORDE sayde vnto my LORDE: <sup>c</sup>Syt thou on my right hande, vntill I make thine enemies thy fote stole.

The LORDE shal sende the rodde of thy power out of Sion, be thou ruler euen in ŷ myddest amonge thine enemies. In the daye of thy power shal thy people offre the frewill offerings with an holy worships, ŷ dewe of thy byrth is of the wōbe of the mornynge. The LORDE sware, and wil not repent: <sup>d</sup>Thou art a prest for euer after ŷ order of Melchisedec. The LORDE vpon thy right honde, shal smyte euen kynges in the daye of his wrath. He shal be iudge amōge the Heithen, he shal fyll them with deed bodies, and smyte in soulder the heades ouer dyuerse countres. He shal drynke of the broke in the waye, therefore shal he lift vp his heade.

The cx. Psalme. Halleluia.

IWIL geue thanks vnto the LORDE with my whole herte: secretly amonge the faithfull, and in the congregacion. The workes of the LORDE are greate,<sup>e</sup> sought out of all thē that haue pleasure therein. His worke is worthy to be praysed and had in honoure, and his rightuousnesse endureth for euer. The mercifull & gracious LORDE hath so done his marvelous workes, ŷ they ought to be had in remēbraunce. <sup>f</sup>He geueth meate vnto thē ŷ feare him, he is euer myndfull of his couenaūt.

He sheweth his people the power of his workes, that he maye geue them the heretage of the Heithen. The workes of his hōdes are verite & iudgment, all his cōmaundemētes are true. They stonde fast for euer & euer,<sup>g</sup> & are done in trueth & equite. He sent redemption vnto his people, he hath commaunded his couenaunt for euer, holy & reuerent is his name. <sup>h</sup>The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, a good vnderstandinge haue all they that do thereafter: the prayse of it endureth for euer.

The cxi. Psalme. Halleluya.

BLESSED is the man ŷ feareth the LORDE, & <sup>i</sup>hath greate delite in his commaundementes. His sede shall be mightie vpon earth, the generacion of the faithfull shalbe blessed. Riches & plēteousnesse shalbe in his house, & his rightuousnes endureth for euer. Vnto the godly there ariseth vp light in the darcknesse: he is mercifull, louynge & rightuous. <sup>k</sup>Wel is him that is mercifull, & lendeth gladly, & pōd्रेth his wordes with discrecion. PRAYSE the LORDE (O ye seruantes) O prayse the name of the LORDE.<sup>b</sup> Blessed be the name of the LORDE, frō this tyme forth for euermore. The LORDES name is worthy to be praysed, <sup>c</sup> frō the rysinge vp of the Sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. The LORDE is hye aboue all Heithen, and his glory aboute the heauē. Who is like vnto the LORDE oure God, ꝑ hath his dwellinge so hye, which humbleth himself, to beholde that is in heauen and earth? <sup>d</sup> Which taketh vp the symple out of the dust, and lifteth the poore out of the myre. The cxiij. Psalme.

WHEN Israel came out of Egipte, ⁊ the house of Iacob <sup>e</sup> from amonge that straunge people. Iuda was his Sactuary, Israel his dominion. <sup>f</sup> The see sawe that, and fled, Iordan turned backe. The mountaynes skipped like rammes, ⁊ the litle hilles like yonge shepe. What ayled the (o thou see) that thou fleddest? and thou Iordan, that thou turnedest backe? Ye mountaynes, that ye skipped like rammes? and ye litle hilles, like yonge shepe? The earth trembled at the presence of the LORDE, at the presence of the God of Iacob. <sup>g</sup> Which turned the harde rocke in to a stondeinge water, ⁊ the flynt stone in to a sprynginge well.

B Not vnto vs (o LORDE) not vnto vs, but vnto thy name geue the prayse, for thy louinge mercy and faithfulness. Wherefore shal the Heithen saye: <sup>h</sup> where is now their God?

As for oure God, he is in heauen, he doth what soueuer it pleaseth him. Their ymagēs are but syluer and golde, euen the worke of mens hōdes. <sup>i</sup> They haue mouthes, and speake not: eyes haue they, but they se not.

They haue eares, and heare not: noses haue they, but they smell not. They haue handes and handle not, fete haue they, but they can not go, nether can they speake thorow their throte. They that made them, are like vnto them, and so are all such as put their trust in them. But let Israel trust in ꝑ LORDE, for he is their succoure ⁊ defence. Let the house of Aaron put their trust in ꝑ LORDE, for he is their succoure ⁊ defence. They that feare the LORDE, let thē put their trust in the LORDE, <sup>j</sup> for he is their succoure and defence. The LORDE is myndeßull of vs, ⁊ blesseth vs: he blesseth ꝑ house of Israel, he blesseth ꝑ house of Aaron. Yee he blesseth all them that feare the LORDE, both small ⁊ greate. The LORDE encrease you more ⁊ more: you, and youre childrē. For ye are ꝑ blessed of the LORDE, which made heauen ⁊ earth. All the whole heauens are the LORDES, but the earth hath he geuē vnto ꝑ childrē of men. <sup>k</sup> The deed prayse not the (o LORDE) nether all they that go downe in to sylence. But we will prayse the LORDE, from this tyme forth for euermore. Halleluya.

The cxiij. Psalme.

The xrb. Psalme.

This psalme dothe Hebrues ioyn vnto it that goeth before, and it is with them the cxvi. psalme.

I BELEUED, and therefore haue I spokē, but I was sore troubled. I sayde in my haist: All men are liers.

What rewarde shal I geue vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, for all the benefites  $\hat{y}$  he hath done vnto me? I wil receaue the cuppe of saluaciō, and call vpon the name of the LORDE.

I wil paye my vowes in the presence of all his people, right deare in the sight of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE is the death of his sayntes. O LORDE, I am thy seruauit, I am thy seruauant, and the sonne of thy handmayden, thou hast broken my boundes in sonder. I wil offre the the sacrifice of thankes geuyng, and wil call vpon the name of the LORDE. I wil paye my vowes vnto the LORDE in the sight of all his people, in the courtes of the LORDES house, euē in the myddest of the, o Ierusalem. Halleluya.

The xrbj. Psalme.

O PRAYSE the LORDE all ye Gentiles. I laude him all ye people. For his mercifull kyndnes is euer more and more towarde vs, and the trueth of the LORDE endureth for euer. Halleluya.

The xrbij. Psalme.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. Let Israel now confesse,  $\hat{y}$  his mercy endureth for euer. Let the house of Aaron now confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. Yee let thē now that feare the LORDE, confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. I called vpon the LORDE in trouble, and the LORDE herde me at large. The LORDE is my helper, I wil not feare what man doeth vnto me. The LORDE is my helper, and I shal se my desyre vpon myne enemies. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put eny confidence in man. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put eny confidēce in prynces. All Heithen compassed me rounde aboute, but in the name of the LORDE wil I destroye thē.

They kepte me in on euery syde, but in the name of the LORDE, I wil destroye them.

They came aboute me like bees, and were as hote as the fyre in the thornes, but in the name of the LORDE I wil destroye them.

They thrust at me, that I might fall, but the LORDE was my helper. The LORDE is my strēth, and my songe, and is become my saluacion. The voyce of ioye and myrth is in the dwellynge of  $\hat{y}$  rightuous, for  $\hat{y}$  right hande of the LORDE hath gottē the victory.

The right hande of the LORDE hath the preemynce, the right hāde of the LORDE hath gottē the victory. I wil not dye, but lyue, and declare the workes of the LORDE.

The LORDE hath chastened and correcte me, but he hath not geuen me ouer vnto death.

Open me the gates of rightuousnes,  $\hat{y}$  I maye go in there thorow, and geue thakes vnto the LORDE. This is the dore of the LORDE, the rightuous shall entre in thorow it.

I thanke the,  $\hat{y}$  thou hast herde me, and art become my saluaciō. The same stone which the buylders refused, is become the heade stone in the corner. This was the LORDES doynge, and it is maruelous in oure eyes. This is the daye which the LORDE hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in it. Helpe now o LORDE, o LORDE sende vs now prosperite.

Blessed be he that cōmeth in the name of the LORDE, we wish you good lucke, ye that be of the house of the LORDE. God is the LORDE, and hath shewed vs light: O garnish the solempne feast with grene braunches, euē vnto the hornes of  $\hat{y}$  aluter. Thou art my God, and I wil thanke the: thou art my God, and I wil prayse the. O geue thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.

For I am become like a botell in y smoke, yet do not I forget thy statutes. How many are the dayes of thy seruaunt? Whē wilt thou be auenged of my aduersaries? The proude haue dygged pittes for me, which are not after thy lawe.

All thy commaundemētes are true, they persecute me falsly, O be thou my helpe.

They haue almost made an ende of me vpon earth, but I forsake not thy commaundemētes. O quickē me after thy louinge kyndnes, and so shall I kepe the testimonies of thy mouth.

LAMED.

O LORDE, thy worde endureth for euer in heauē. Thy treuth also remayneth from one generacion to another: thou hast layed the foundation of the earth, and it abydeth.

They cōtinue this daye accordinge to thy ordinaunce, for all thinges serue the. Yf my delyte were not in thy lawe, I shulde perishe in my trouble. I wil neuer forget thy cōmaundementes, for with thē thou quickenest me. I am thine, oh helpe me, for I seke thy commaundementes. The vngodly laye wayte for me to destroye me, but I conside thy testimonies. I se that all thinges come to an ende, but thy commaundemēt is excedeinge brode.

MEM.

O what a loue haue I vnto thy lawe? all the daye longe is my talkynge of it. Thou thorow thy commaundement hast made me wyser thē myne enemies, for it is euer by me.

I haue more vnderstandinge then all my teachers, for thy testimonies are my studie.

Yee I am wyser then the aged, for I kepe thy cōmaundementes. I refrayne my fete from euery euell waye, that I maye kepe thy wordes. I shrenck not from thy iudgements, for thou teachest me. O how swete are thy wordes vnto my throte? Yee more thē honey

PE.

Thy testimonies are wonderfull, therefore doth my soule kepe them. "When thy worde goeth forth, it geueth light and vnderstōdinge, euē vnto babes. I opē my mouth ⁊ drawe in my breth, for I desyre thy commaundemētes. O lōke thou vpon me, and be mercyfull, as thou vvest to do vnto those ſ loue thy name. Ordre my goinges after thy worde, that no wickednesse raigne in me. O delyuer me from the wrōgeous dealinges of mē, and so shal I kepe thy commaundemētes. Shewe the light of thy countenance vnto thy seruānt, and lerne me thy statutes. Myne eyes gusshe out with water, because men kepe not thy lawe.

ZADI.

Rightuous art thou (o LORDE) ⁊ true is thy iudgmēt. The testimonies that thou hast commaūded, are exceedinge rightuous and true. "My zeale hath enen consumed me, because myne enemies haue forgotten thy wordes. Thy worde is tried to the vtmost, ⁊ thy seruante loueth it. I am small and of no reputaciō, yet do not I forget thy cōmaundementes. Thy rightuousnesse is an euerlastinge rightuousnes, and thy lawe is true. Trouble and heuynesse haue takē holde vpō me, yet is my delite in thy commaundementes. The rightuousnes of thy testimonies is euerlastinge, o graunte me vnderstōdinge, and I shal lyue.

I call with my whole herte, heare me (o LORDE) I wil kepe thy statutes. Yee euen vpō the do I call, helpe me, and I shal kepe thy testimonies. Early in ſ mornynge do I crie vnto the, for in thy worde is my trust. Myne eyes preuēte ſ night watches, ſ I might be occupied in thy wordes. Hear me my voyce (o LORDE) acordige vnto thy louynge kyndnesse, quyeckē me acordige as thou art wōt. They drawe nye ſ of malice persecute me, ⁊ are farre frō thy lawe. Be thou nye at hōde also (o LORDE) for thy promises are faithfull.

As concernynge thy testimonies. I haue knowne euer sens the begynnynge, that thou hast grounded them for euer.

RES.

O considre my aduersite, ⁊ delyuer me, for Psal. 18. b. Mat. 11. c.    * Psal. 68. b. Iohā. 2. h.

I do not forget thy lawe. Manteyne thou my cause and defende me, quyenken me accordinge vnto thy worde. Health is farre frō the vngodly, for they regarde not thy statutes. Greate is thy mercy (o LORDE) quyenken me as thou art wout. Many there are that trouble me, and persecute me, yet do not I swarue frō thy testimonies. It greueth me, whan I se, that the transgressours kepe not thy lawe. Considre (LORDE) how I loue thy cōmaundementes, O quyenken me with thy louinge kyndnesse. Thy worde is true from euerlastinge, all the iudgmentes of thy righteousness endure for euermore.

SIN.

X The prynces persecute me without cause, but my herte stōdeth in awe of thy wordes.

"I am as glad of thy worde, as one ŷ fyndeth greate spoyles. As for lyes, I hate & abhorre them, but thy lawe do I loue. Seuen tymes a daye do I prayse the, because of thy righteousness iudgmentes. Greate is the peace ŷ they haue which loue thy lawe, & they are not offended at it. LORDE, I lōke for thy sauynge health, & do after thy cōmaundemētes. My soule kepeth thy testimonies, & loueth thē exceedingly. I kepe thy cōmaundemētes & testimonies, for all my wayes are before the.

THAU.

Þ Let my cōplaynte come before the (o LORDE) geue me vnderstandinge, accordinge vnto thy worde. Oh let my supplicaciō come before the, delyuer me accordinge to thy prayse. My lippes shall speake of thy prayse, seynge thou hast taught me thy statutes.

Yee my tōge shall syng of thy worde, for all thy cōmaundemētes are right. Let thy hāde helpe me, for I haue chosen thy cōmaundementes. I longe for thy sauynge health (o LORDE) & in thy lawe is my delyte. Oh let my soule lyeue & prayse the, ŷ thy iudgmentes maye helpe me. I go astraye, like a shepe that is lost: Oh seke thy seruante, for I do not forget thy cōmaundementes.

The cxiij. Psalme.

¶ WHEN I am in trouble, I call vpon ŷ LORDE, & he answereth me.<sup>a</sup> Delyuer my soule (o LORDE) frō lyenge lippes, & frō a disceatfull tōge. What rewarde shal be geuen or done vnto the, thou false tonge?

Euen mightie & sharpe arrowes, with hote burnynge coales. Wo is me ŷ my banishmēt endureth so lōge: I dwell in the tabernacles of the sorowfull. My soule hath lōge dwelt amonge them, that be enemies vnto theof. I laboured for peace, but when I spake thereof, they made them to batayll.

The cxiij. Psalme.

I LIFT vp myne eyes vnto the hilles, frō whence cometh my helpe? My helpe cōmeth euen from the LORDE, which hath made heauen and earth. He will not suffre thy fote to be moued, and he ŷ kepeth the, slepeth not. Beholde, he that kepeth Israel, doth nether slombre ner slepe. The LORDE himself is thy keeper, the LORDE is thy defence vpon thy right honde. So that the Sonne shal not burne the by daye, neither the Moone by night. The LORDE preserueth the from all euell, yee it is the LORDE that kepeth thy soule. The LORDE preserueth thy goinge out and thy cōmyng in, from this tyme forth for euermore.

The cxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

I WAS glad, when they sayde vnto me: "we wil go in to the house of the LORDE. Oure fete shal stonde in thy gates, O Ierusalem. Ierusalē is buylded as a cite, that is at vnite in it self. For there ŷ trybes go vp, euen the trybes of the LORDE: to testifie vnto Israel, to geue thanckes vnto the name of the LORDE. For there is the seate of iudgement, euē the seate of the house of Dauid. O praye for the peace of Ierusalē, they shal prospere that loue the. Peace be within thy walles, and plenteousnes within thy palaces. For my brethren and companions sakes, I wil wish the prosperite. Yee because of ŷ house of the LORDE oure God, I wil seke to do the good.

The cxiij. Psalme.

VNTO the lift I vp myne eyes, & thou ŷ dwellest in the heauens. Beholde, euen as the eyes of seruantes lōke vnto the handes of their masters: and as the eyes of a mayden vnto the handes of hir mastresse, euen so oure eyes wayte vpon the LORDE oure God, vntill he haue mercy vpō vs. Haue mercy vpō vs (o LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, for

The cxxviiij. A psalme of David.

A IF the LORDE had not bene of oure syde (now maye Israel saye) Yf the LORDE had not bene of oure syde, whē mē rose vp agaynst vs: <sup>a</sup> They had swallowed vs vp quycke, when they were so wrothfully displeased at vs. <sup>b</sup> Yee the waters had drowned vs, the streame had gone ouer oure soule.

The depe waters of the proude had gone euē vnto oure soule. But praysed be <sup>h</sup> LORDE, which hath not geuen vs ouer for a pray vnto their teth. Oure soule is escaped, euen as a byrde out of the snare of <sup>h</sup> fouler: <sup>h</sup> snare is broke, and we are deluyered. <sup>c</sup> Oure helpe stōdeth in the name of the LORDE, which hath made heauen and earth.

The cxxviiij. Psalme.

A THEY that put their trust in <sup>h</sup> LORDE, are euē as the mount Zion, <sup>d</sup> which maye not be removed, but stōdeth fast for euer. The hilles stonde aboute Ierusalem, euen so stondeth the LORDE rounde aboute his people, frō this tyme forth for euermore. That the rodd of the vngodly come not in to the lott of the rightuous, lest the rightuous put their honde vnto wickednesse. Do wel (o LORDE) vnto those that be good and true of herte. As for such as turne backe vnto their owne wickednesse, <sup>e</sup> the LORDE shal lede them forth with the euell doers: but peace be vpon Israel.

The cxxv. Psalme.

A WHEN the LORDE turneth agayne <sup>h</sup> captiuyte of Zion, then shal we be like vnto them that dreame. Thē shal oure mouth be fylled with laughter, and oure tonge with ioye. Then shal it be sayed amonge the Heithen: the LORDE hath done greate thinges for them. Yee the LORDE hath done greate thinges for vs allready, wherof we reioyse. Turne oure captiuyte (o LORDE) as the ryuers in the south. <sup>f</sup> They that sowe in teeres, shal reape in ioye. He <sup>h</sup> now goeth his waye wepige & beareth forth good sede,

EXCEPT the LORDE buylde the house, <sup>a</sup> their labour is but lost that buylde it. <sup>c</sup>

Lo, children and <sup>h</sup> frute of the wombe are an heretage and gift, that cōmeth of the LORDE. Like as the arowes in the hōde of the giaūte, euē so are the yonge childrē.

Happie is the mā, <sup>h</sup> hath his quyuer full of them: they shal not be ashamed, when they speake with their enemies in the gate.

The cxxviij. Psalme.

BLESSED are all they <sup>a</sup> that feare the LORDE, & walke in his wayes. For thou shalt eate the laboures of thine owne hondes: o well is the, happie art thou. Thy wife shalbe as a frutefull vyne vpon the wallles of thy house. Thy children like the olyue braunches rōūde aboute thy table. Lo, thus shal <sup>h</sup> mā be blessed, <sup>h</sup> feareth the LORDE. <sup>b</sup> The LORDE shal so blesse the out of Zion, that thou shalt se Ierusalē in prosperite all thy life longe. Yee that thou shalt se thy childers childrē, & peace vpō Israel.

The cxxviij. Psalme.

MANY a tyme haue they fought agaynst <sup>a</sup> me fro my youth vp (maye Israel now saie). Yee many a tyme haue they fought agaist me fro my youth vp, but they haue not ouercome me. <sup>c</sup> The plowers plowed vpō my backe, & made lōge forowes. My soule doth patiently abyde the LORDE, frō the one mornynge to the other. Let Israel trust in the LORDE, for with the LORDE there is mercy and plenteous redempcion. <sup>b</sup>And he shal redeme Israel from all his synnes.

The cxxij. A psalme of Dauid.

A LORDE, I am not hye mynded, I haue no proude lokes. <sup>c</sup>I do not exercise myself in greate matters, which are to hye for me. But I refrayne my soule and kepe it lowe, like as a childe <sup>d</sup>is weened from his mother, yee my soule is euen as a weened childe. Let Israel trust in the LORDE, frō this tyme forth for euermore.

The cxxij. Psalme.

A LORDE, remembre Dauid and all his trouble. <sup>e</sup>How he swore vnto <sup>f</sup>thy LORDE, and vowed a vowe vnto <sup>g</sup>thy mightie one of Iacob: I wil not come within the tabernacle of my house, ner clymme vp <sup>h</sup>to my bedde. I wil not suffre myne eyes to slepe, ner myne eye lyddes to slōber. Vntill I fynde out a place for the LORDE, an habitaciō for the mightie one of Iacob. Lo, we herde of the same at Ephrata, and fōūde it in <sup>i</sup>thy wod.

We wil go in to his tabernacle, and fall downe before his fōtestole. <sup>j</sup>Arise (o LORDE) in to thy restinge place, thou <sup>k</sup>and <sup>l</sup>thy arke of thy strength.

<sup>m</sup>Let thy prestes be clothed with rightuousnesse, and let thy sayntes reioyse. For thy seruante Dauids sake turne not awaye the presence of thine aynoynted. The LORDE hath made a faithfull oath vnto Dauid, <sup>n</sup>and he shal not shrenke from it: Of the frute of thy body shal I set vpon thy seate. Yf thy children wil kepe my couenaunt, and my testimony <sup>o</sup>thy I shal lerne the, their childrē also shal syt vpon thy seate for euermore. For the LORDE hath chosen Siō, to be an habitaciō for himself hath he chosen her. This shalbe my rest, here wil I dwell, for I haue a delite therein. I will blesse hir vytales with increase, and wil satisfie hir poore with bred. <sup>p</sup>I wil decke hir prestes with health, and hir sayntes shal reioyse and be glad. <sup>q</sup>There shall I make the horne of Dauid to florish, I haue ordered a lanterne for myne aynoynted. The cxxvij. A psalme of David.

I WIL geue thākes vnto the (o LORDE) with my whole hert, euen before the goddes wil I synge prayes vnto the.

“I wil worshippē towarde thy holy tēple, and prayse thy name because of thy louynge kyndnesse and treuth, for thou hast magnified thy worde, acordynge vnto thy greate name. When I call vpon the, thou hearest me, and endewest my soule with moche strēth. All the kynges of the earth shal prayse the (o LORDE) when they heare the wordes of thy mouth. Yee they shal synge in the wayes of the LORDE, that greate is the glory of the LORDE. “For though the LORDE be hye, yet hath he respecte vnto y lowly: as for y proude, he beholdeth him afare off. Though I walke i y myddest of trouble, yet shalt thou refresh me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hāde vpon the furiousnes of myne enemies, ⁊ thy right hande shal saue me. The LORDE shal make good for me, yee thy mercy (o LORDE) endureth for euer: “despyse not then the worke of thine owne handes.

The cxxvij. A psalme of David.

O LORDE, thou searchest me out, and knowest me. Thou knowest my downe syttinge ⁊ my vprisyng, thou vnderstodest my thoughtes afare off. Thou art aboute my path ⁊ aboute my bedd, ⁊ spyest out all my wayes. For lo, there is not a worde i my tōge, but thou (o LORDE) knowest it altogether. Thou hast fashioned me behinde ⁊ before, ⁊ layed thine hōde vpon me. Soch knowlege is to wonderfull ⁊ excellēt for me, I can not attayne vnto it. Whither shal I go then from thy sprete? “Or, whither shal I fle from thy presence? “Yf I clymme vp in to heauen, thou art there: yf I go downe to hell, thou art there also. Yf I take the wynges of the mornyng, ⁊ remayne in the vtemost parte of the see: Euen there also shal thy honde lede me, and thy right hande shal holde me. Yf I saye: peraduēture the darcknesse shal couer me, then shal my night be turned to daye. Yee the darcknesse is no darcknesse with the, but the night is as cleare as the daye, the darcknesse ⁊ light are both alike. For my reynes are thyne, thou hast couered me in my mothers wombe. I wil geue thākes

How deare are thy couēces vnto me o God? O how greate is the summe of them? Yf I tell them, they are mo in nombre then the soude: when I wake vp, I am present with the. Wilt thou not slaye y wicked (oh God) that the bloudethyrstie mighte departe frome? For they speake vnright of the, thine enemies exalte them selues presumptuously.

I hate them (o LORDE) that hate the, ⁊ I maye not awaye with those that ryse vp agaynst the. Yee I hate them right sore, therfore are they myne enemies. “Trye me (o God) and seke the grounde of myne hert: proue me, ⁊ examen my thoughtes. stroyed. Sure I am, that the LORDE wil avenge the poore, and manteyne the cause of the helplesse. The rightuous also shal geue thākes vnto thy name, & the iust shal continue in thy sight.

The cxi. A psalme of David.

ALORDE, I call vpon the: haist the vnto me, and consider my voyce, whē I crie vnto the. "Let my prayer be set forth in thy sight as the incēse, and let the liftinge vp of my hādes be an euenynge sacrifice." <sup>b</sup> Set a watch (o LORDE) before my mouth, yee a watch at the dore of my lippes. O let not myne hert be enclyned to eny euell thīge, to be mynded as the vngodly or wicked men, lest I eate of soch thinges as please thē.

Let the rightuous (rather) smyte me frendly, and reproc me: so wil I take it, as though he had poured oyle vpō my heade: it shal not hurte my heade, yee I wil praye yet for their wickednesse. Their iudges stōble at the stone, yet heare they my wordes, & they be ioyfull. Oure bones lye scatered before & pytt, like as when one graueth and dygeth vp the grounde. But myne eyes loke vnto &, o LORDE God: in the is my trust, oh cast not out my soule. Kepe me frō & snare which they haue layed for me, and frō the trappes of the wicked doers. Let the vngodly fall in to their owne nettes together, vntill I be gone by them.

The cxli. A psalme of David.

ICRIE vnto the LORDE with my voyce, yee eue vnto the LORDE do I make my supplicacion. I poure out my complaynte before him, and shewe him of my trouble. When my sprete is in heuynesse, for thou knowest my path: in the waye where in I walke, haue they preuely layed a snare for me. I loke vpon my right honde & se, there is no man that wil knowe me. I haue no place to fle vnto, no man careth for my soule. Therefore do I crie vnto the (o LORDE) and saye: thou art my hope and my porcion, in the londe of the luyngē. Cōsidre my complaynte, for I am brought very lowe. Oh delyuer me frō my persecuters, for they are to stronge for me: Brynge my soule out of prison, that I maye geue thākes vnto thy name: which thinge yf thou wilt graunte me, then shal the rightuous resorte vnto my cōpany.

The cxlij. A psalme of David.

HEARE my prayer (o LORDE) conside my desyre: answer me for thy truth & rightuousnesse sake. And entre not in to iudgment with thy seruant, for in thy sight shal no man luyngē be iustified. For the enemie persecuteth my soule, he smyteth my life downe to the grounde, he layeth me in the darknesse, as the deed men of the worlde. Therefore is my sprete vexed within me, and my herte within me is desolate. Yet do I remēbre the tynes past, I muse vpō all thy workes, yee I exercise my self in the workes of thy hondes. I stretch forth my hondes vnto the, my soule crieth vnto the out of the thyrstie londe. Sela. Heare me (o LORDE) and that soone, for my sprete waxeth faynte: hyde not thy face frō me, lest I be like vnto thē that go downe in to the graue. Oh let me heare thy louynge kyndnesse by tynes in the mornynge, for in the is my trust: shewe thou me the waye that I shulde walke in, for I lift vp my soule vnto the. Delyuer me (o LORDE) frō myne enemies, for I resorte vnto the.

Teach me to do the thinge that pleaseth the, for thou art my God: let thy louynge sprete lede me forth vnto the londe of rightuousnesse. Quyeckē me (o LORDE) for thy names sake, and for thy rightuousnesse sake brynge my soule out of trouble. And of thy goodnesse scatter myne enemies abroad, and destroye all them that vexē my soule, for I am thy seruaut.

The cxliij. A psalme of David.

BLESSED be the LORDE my refuge, which teacheth my hādes to warre, & my fingers to fight. My hope and my castell, my defence and my delyuerer, my shyld in whom I trust, which gouerneth the people that is vnder me. LORDE, what is mā, that thou hast soch respecte vnto him? Or the sonne of man, that thou so regardest him? Man is like a thinge of naught, his tyme passeth awaye like a shadowe. Bowe thy heauē (o LORDE) & come downe, touch the mountaynes, & they maye smoke withall.

The cxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

I WIL magnifie the (o my God  $\tau$  kyng) I wil prayse thy name for euer  $\tau$  euer. Every daye wil I geue thanks vnto the, and prayse thy name for euer and euer. Greate is the LORDE,  $\tau$  maruelous worthy to be praysed, there is no ende of his greatnesse. One generacion shal prayse thy workes vnto another, and declare thy power. As for me I wil be talkige of thy worshippe, thy glory, thy prayse and woderous workes.

So that men shal speake of the might of thy maruelous actes, and tell of thy greatnes.

The memoriall of thy abundaunt kyndnes shal be shewed, and mē shal synge of thy righteousness. The LORDE is gracious and mercifull, longe sufferynge  $\tau$  of greate goodnesse. The LORDE is louynge vnto euery man, and his mercy is ouer all his workes.

All thy workes prayse the (o LORDE) and thy sayntes geue thanks vnto the. They shewe the glory of thy kyngdome, and talke of thy power. That thy power, thy glory

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The wysdome of God calleth vs by the mouth of Salomō, exorteth vs, and geueth vs warnyng to eschue the wicked : whose vngodly cōuersacion in worde and worke, and punishment also of the same, is here descrybed.

Chap. II.

How wysdome maye be gotten, and what profit commeth of it.

Chap. III.

He exorteth us to the feare of God and to pacience : he commendeth wysdome, & requyeth us to cleue vnto the same.

Chap. IIII.

A fatherly exortacion vnto wysdome, with the profit therof, and how we ought to refrayne the mēbres of oure body fro euell.

Chap. V.

He exorteth vnto wysdōe, and to beware of harlottes : he telleth what harme maye folowe therout, whē men medle with soch : he teacheth men, louyngly to cleue vnto their married wyues, and descrybeth the ende of the vngodly.

Chap. VI.

He warneth men to beware of suertishipe, exorteth the slouthfull to laboure, sheweth the wikednesse of false tonges, and requyeth men to beware of aduoutry, because it is more perlous then theft or felony.

Chap. VII.

He exorteth vnto wysdome, sheweth the condicions of harlottes, and what hurt happeneth vnto soch as encline to the prouocaciōs and desyres of the flesh.

Chap. VIII.

Wysdome calleth men swetely vnto her, and telleth them what treasure and power she hath. A cōmendacion and prayse of wysdome, wherout euery mā is exorted to cleue vnto her.

Chap. IX.

Wysdome crieth vpo the ignoraut, and promiset them greate thinges. The foolish maner of a light woman.

Chap. X.

From this chapter forth vnto the XXXI, there are described many swete, louely and wyse sentences, which teach men wysdome and what profit commeth of it : Agayne, how men maye auoyde foolishnesse, and the hurte therof.

Chap. XXXI.

Wysdome warneth vs to beware of euell women, and descrybeth the cōuersacion, maner, & behaoure of an honest married wyfe.

THESE are the prouerbes of Salomon the sonne of Dauid kynge of Israel : to lerne wysdome, nurtoure, vnderstandinge, prudence, rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite. That the very babes might haue wyt, and that yonge men might haue knowlege and vnderstandinge. By hearinge, the wyse mā shal cōme by more wysdome : and by experience, he shal be more apte to vnderstonde a parable, and the interpretacion therof : the wordes of the wyse, and the darcke speeches of the same. <sup>a</sup>The feare of the LORDE is the begynnyng of wysdome. But fooles despyse wysdome and nurtoure.

The first Chapter.

A MY sonne, heare thy fathers doctryne, and forsake not the lawe of thy mother: for that shal brynge grace vnto thy heade, & shal be a cheyne aboute thy necke. My sonne, cōsente not vnto synners,<sup>a</sup> yf they entyse the, and saye: come wyth us, let vs laye wayte for bloude, & lurke preuely for the innocēt wythout a cause: let us swalowe thē vp like fy hell,<sup>b</sup> let us deuoure thē quyeke and whole, as those that go downe in to the pytt. So shal we fynde all maner of costly riches, and fyll oure houses wyth spoyles. Cast in thy lott amonge us, we shal haue all one purse.

My sonne, walke not thou with them, re-frayne thy fote frō their wayes. For their fete rūne to euell, & are haistie to shed bloude. B But in wayne is fy net layed forth before the byrdes eyes. Yee they thē selues laye wayte one for anothers bloude, and one of thē wolde slaye another. These are the wayes of all soch as be couetous, that one wolde rauysh anothers life.

Wyszdomē crieth without,<sup>c</sup> & putteth forth hir voyce in the stretes. She calleth before fy congregacion in fy open gates, and sheweth hir wordes thorow fy cite, sayenge: O ye childrē, how lōge wil ye loue childyshnesse? how longe wil fy scorners delyte in scornynge, & fy vnwyse be enemies vnto knowlege? O turne you vnto my correccion: lo, I wil expresse my mynde vnto you, and make you vnderstōde my wordes.

C Seinge then that I haue called, and ye refused it: I haue stretched out my honde, and no mā regarded it, but all my cōcels haue ye despyed, and set my correcciōs at naught. Therefore shal I also laugh in youre destruccion, and mocke you, when fy thinge that ye feare cōmeth vpon you: euen whē fy thinge that ye be afrayed of, falleth in sodenly like a storme, and youre miserye like a tempest: yee whā trouble and hynnesse cōmeth vpon you. Then shal they call vpō me, but I wil not heare: they shal seke me early, but they shal not fynde me: And fy because they hated knowlege, and receaued not fy feare of fy LORDE, but abhorred my counsell, and despyed my correccion. Therefore shal they eate fy frutes of their owne waye, and be fylled with their owne counceils: for fy turnynge awaye of fy vnwyse shal slaye thē, & fy prosperite of fooles shalbe their owne destrucciō. But who so harkeneth vnto me, shal dwell safely,<sup>d</sup> and haue ynough without eny feare of euell.

The ij. Chapter.

A MY sonne, yf thou wilt receaue my wordes, and kepe my cōmaundemētes by the, that thine eare maye herken vnto wysdome, applie thine herte then to vnderstōdinge. For yf thou criest after wyszdome, & callest for knowlege: yf thou sekest after her as after money, and dyggest for her as for treasure: Thē shalt thou vnderstōde fy feare of the LORDE, and fynde fy knowlege of God. For it is the LORDE that geueth wyszdome,<sup>e</sup> out of his mouth commeth knowlege and vnderstōdinge. He preserueth fy welfare of the righteous, and defendeth them fy walke innocently: he kepeth them in fy right path, and preserueth fy waye of his sayntes. Then shalt thou vnderstōde rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite, yee and euery good path. Yf wyszdome entre in to thine herte, and thy soule delyte in knowlege: then shal counsell preserue the, and vnderstōdinge shal kepe the. That thou mayest be deliyered frō fy euell waye, and from the man fy speaketh frowarde things. From soch as leaue the hye strete, and walke ī fy wayes of darcknesse: which reioyse in doyngē euell, and delyte ī wicked things: whose wayes are croked, and their pathes slaunderous.

C That thou mayest be deliyered also from the straunge woman, and from her that is not thine owne: which geueth swete wordes, forsaketh the huszbande of hir youth, and forgetteth the couenaunt of hir God. For hir house is enclyned vnto death, and hir pathes vnto hell. All they that go in vnto her, come not agayne, nether take they holde of the waye of life.

That thou mayest walke in fy good waye, and kepe the pathes of the righteous. For the iust shal dwell in the londe, and the innocētes shal remayne in it: but the vngdyd shalbe roted out of fy londe, and the wicked doers shalbe taken out of it.

So shalt thou fynde fauoure and good vnderstandinge in ſ̄ sight of God and men. Put thy trust in ſ̄ LORDE with all thine herte, and leane not vnto thine owne vnderstandinge. In all thy wayes haue respecte vnto him, and he shal ordre thy goinges. <sup>a</sup>Be not wyse in thine owne conceyte, but feare ſ̄ LORDE and departe from euell: so shal thy navel be whole, and thy bones stronge.

B <sup>b</sup>Honoure the LORDE with thy substance, ⁊ with ſ̄ firstlings of all thine encrease: so shal thy barnes be fylled with plenteousnesse, and thy presses shal flowe ouer with swete wyne. My sonne, despye not the chastenyng of ſ̄ LORDE, nether faynte when thou art rebuked of him. For whō the LORDE loueth, him he chasteneth: and yet delyteth in him euen as a father in his owne sonne. Well is him that fyndeth wysdome, ⁊ opteyneth vnderstandinge, for th<sup>e</sup> gettinge of it is better then eny marchaundise of syluer, ⁊ the profit of it is better then golde. Wysdome is more worth thē precious stones, <sup>c</sup>⁊ all ſ̄ thynges ſ̄ thou canst desyre, are not to be compared vnto her. Vpon hir right hande is longe life, ⁊ vpon hir left hande is riches ⁊ honoure.

Hir wayes are pleasaunt wayes, and all hir pathes are peaceable. She is a tre of life <sup>d</sup> to them that laye holde vpon her, and blessed are they that kepe her fast.

C With wysdome hath ſ̄ LORDE layed the foudacion of ſ̄ earth, ⁊ thorow vnderstandinge hath he stablished ſ̄ heauen. Thorow his wysdome ſ̄ depthes breake vp, ⁊ ſ̄ cloudes droppe downe the dew. My sonne, let not these thynges departe from thyne eyes, but kepe my lawe and my counsell: so shal it be life vnto thy soule, ⁊ grace vnto thy mouth.

Then shalt thou walke safely in thy waye, ⁊ thy fote shal not stamble. Yf thou slepest, thou shalt not be afraied, <sup>e</sup>but shalt take thy rest ⁊ slepe sweetly. Thou needest not to be afraied of eny sodane feare, nether for the violent russhinge in of the vngodly, when it comnieth.

For the LORDE shal be besyde the, ⁊ kepe

thy fote ſ̄ thou be not taken. Refuse not to do good vnto him that shulde haue it, so longe as thine hande is able to do it. Saye not vnto thy neyghboure: go thy waye ⁊ come agayne, tomorrow wil I geue the: where as thou hast now to geue him. Intende no hurte vnto thy neyghboure, seynge he hopeth to dwell in rest by the. Stryue not lightly with eny man, where as he hath done ſ̄ no harme. <sup>f</sup>Folowe not a wicked man, and chose none of his wayes: for the LORDE abhorreth the frowarde, but his secrete is amonge the righteous. The curse of the LORDE is in the house of the vngodly, but he blesseth the dwellinges of the righteous.

As for the scornefull, he shal laugh thē to scorne, but he shal geue grace vnto the lowly. The wyse shal haue honoure in possession, but shame is the promociō that fooles shal haue.

Th<sup>e</sup> iiii. Chapter.

HEARE (O ye children) the fatherly exhortaciō, ⁊ take good hede, that ye maye lerne wysdome. Yee I shal geue you a good rewarde, yf ye wil not forsake my lawe. For when I myself was my fathers deare sonne, and tenderly beloued of my mother, he taught me also, sayenge: <sup>g</sup>let thine herte receaue my wordes, kepe my commaundementes, and thou shalt lyue.

Get the wysdome, get the vnderstandinge, forget not ſ̄ wordes of my mouth, ⁊ shrēke not from them. Forsake her not, and she shal preserue the: loue her, and she shal kepe the. The chefe poynte of wysdome is, that thou be wyllyng to opteyne wysdome, and before all thy goodes to get the vnderstandinge. Make moch of her, <sup>h</sup>and she shal promote the: Yee yf thou embracest her, she shal brynge the vnto honoure.

B She shal make the a gracious heade, and garnish the with ſ̄ crowne of glory. Heare my sonne, and receaue my wordes, that the yeares of thy life maye be many. I wil shewe the the ſ̄ waye of wysdome, and lede the in the right pathes. So that yf thou goest therin, there shal no straytnesse hynder the: and when thou runnest, thou shalt not fall. Come not in the path of the vngodly, "and walke not in the waye of the wicked.

Eschue it, ⁊ go not therin: departe asyde, ⁊ passe ouer by it. For they can not slepe, excepte they haue first done some myschefe: nether take they eny rest, excepte they haue first done some harme. For they eate the bred of wickednesse, and drike the wyne of robbery. The path of the rightuous shyneth as the light, and is euer brighter ⁊ brighter vnto the perfecte daye. But ⁊ waye of the vngodly is as the darknesse, wherin mē fall, or they be awarre.

My sonne, marcke my wordes, and encline thine eare vnto my saynges. Let them not departe from thine eyes, kepe them euen in the myddest of thine herte. For they are life vnto all those that finde the, and health vnto all their bodies. Kepe thine hert with all diligence, for there vpon hangeth life. Put awaye from the a frowarde mouth, and let the lippes of slaunder be farre from the. Let thine eyes beholde the thinge ⁊ is right, ⁊ let thine eye lyddes loke straight before the. Pōdre the path of thy fete, so shal all thy wayes be sure. Turne not asyde, nether to the right hande ner to the lefte, but witholde thy fote from euell.

The v. Chapter.

MY sonne, geue hede vnto my wysdome, ⁊ bowe thine eare vnto my prudēce: ⁊ thou mayest regarde good counsell, and that thy lippes maye kepe nourtoure.

For the lippes of an harlot are a droppinge hony combe, and hir throte is softer then oyle. But at ⁊ last she is as bitter as worn-wod, and as sharpe as a two edged swerde. Hir fete go downe vnto death, and hir steppes pearse thorow vnto hell. She regardeth not the path of life, so vustedfast are hir wayes, that thou canst not knowe them. Heare me therfore (o my sonne) and departe not frō the wordes of my mouth. Kepe thy waye farre from her, and come not nye ⁊ dores of hir house. That thou geue not thine honoure vnto another, and thy yeares to the cruell.

That other men be not fylled with thy goodes, ⁊ that thy labours come not in a straunge house. Yee that thou mourne not at the last (when thou hast spent thy body and goodes)

and then saye: Alas, why hated I nurtoure? why dyd my hert dyspse correccion? Wherefore was not I obedient vnto the voyce of my teachers, ⁊ herkened not vnto them that in-fourmed me? I am come almost in to all mysfortune, in the myddest of the multitude and congregacion. Drinke of the water of thine owne well, and of the ryuers that runne out of thine owne spriges. Let thy welles flowe out a brode, that there maye be ryuers of water in the stretes. But let them be only thine owne, ⁊ not straungers with the. Let thy well be blessed, and be glad with the wife of thy youth. Louynge is the hynde, and frendly is the Roo: let her brestes alwaye satisfie the, and holde the euer content with hir loue. My sonne, why wilt thou haue pleasure in an harlot, and embrace the bosome of another womā? For euery mā's wayes are open in the sight of the LORDE, and he pōdereth all their goings. The wickednesses of the vngodly shal catch himself, and with the snares of his owne synnes shal he be trapped. Because he wolde not be reformed, he shal dye: and for his greате foolishnesse he shal be destroyed.

The vi. Chapter.

MY sōne, yf thou be suertie for thy neighbour, ⁊ thou hast fastened thine hōde with another mā: yee thou art boūde with thine owne wordes, and taken with thine owne speach. Therefore (my sonne) do this, discharge thy self, for thou art come ī to thy neighbours daunger. Go thy waye then soone, ⁊ intreate thy neighbour: let not thine eyes slepe, ner thine eye lyddes slomber. Saue thy self as a doo frō ⁊ honde, ⁊ as a byrde frō the hōde of the fouler. Go to the Emmet (thou slogarde) cōsidre hir wayes, ⁊ lerne to be wyse. She hath no gyde, no teacher, no leder: yet in the sommer she prouideth hir meate, ⁊ gathereth hir foode together ī ⁊ haruest. How lōge wilt thou slepe, thou slogish mā? Whā wilt thou aryse out of thy slepe? Yee slepe on still a litle, slōber a litle, folde thine handes together yet a litle, that thou mayest slepe: so shal pouerte come vnto the as one ⁊ trauayleth by the waye, ⁊ necessite like a wapened man. frowarde mouth: he wyneketh with his eyes, he tokeneth with his fete, he poyneth with his fynghers, he is euer ymagyninge myschefe & frowardnesse in his hert, & causeth discorde. Therefore shal his destruccione come hastily vpō him, sodenly shal he be all tobroke, and not be healed.

There be sixe thynges, which the LORDE hateth, & the seuenth he vtterly abhorreth: "A proude lōke, a dyssemblynge tonge, hādes that shed innocent bloude, an herte y goeth aboute with wicked ymaginaciōs, <sup>4</sup>fete that be swift in rennyng to do myschefe, a false wytnesse y bringeth vp lyes, & soch one as soweth discorde amonge brethren. My sonne, kepe thy fathers cōmaundemētes, & forsake not y lawe of thy mother. Put thē vp together in thine herte, and hynde thē aboute thy necke. That they maye lede the where thou goest, preserue the when thou art aslepe, & y when thou awakest, thou mayest talke of thē ("For the cōmaundement is a lanterne, and the lawe a light: yee chastenyng & nurtoure is y waye of life) that they maye kepe the frō the euell woman, <sup>4</sup>& frō the flaterynge tonge of the harlott: y thou lust not after her beuty in thine herte, & lest thou be takē with hir fayre lōkes. An harlot wil make a mā to begg his bred, but a mariēd woman wil hunt for y precious life. Maye a man take fyre in his bosome, and his clothes not be brent? Or can one go vpon hote coales, and his fete not be hurte? Euen so, who so euer goeth in to his neighbours wiche, and toucheth her, can not be vngiltie. "Men do not vtterly despyse a thefe, that stealeth to satisfie his soule, when he is hongerie: but yf he maye be gotten, he restoreth agayne seuen tymes asmoch, or els he maketh recompence with all the good of his house. But who so cōmitteth aduoutrie with a womā, he is a foole, and bryngeth his life to destruccione. He getteth him self also shame & dishonoure, such as shal neuer be put out. For the gelousy & wrath of the mā will not be ytreated, no though thou woldest ofre him greates gifts to make amendes, he will not receaue them.

The viij. Chapter.

MY sonne, kepe my wordes, & laye vp my cōmaundemētes by the. <sup>1</sup>Kepe my cōmaundemētes & my lawe, euē as the aple of thine eye, & thou shalt lyue. Bynde them vpon thy fynghers, & wryte thē in the table of thine hert. Saye vnto wysdome: thou art my sister, and call vnderstandinge thy kynswoman: "that she maye kepe y frō y straūge womā, & frō y harlot which geneth swete wordes. For out of the wyndowe of my house I loked thorow the trelies, & behelde the simple people: & amonge other yonge folkes I spyed one yonge foole goinge ouer the stretes, by the corner in the waye towarde the harlottes house in the twilight of the euenynge, when it begāne now to be night and darcke. And beholde, there mett him a womā in an harlottes apparell (a disceatfull, wāton & an vnstedfast womā: whose fete coude not abyde in y house, now is she without, now i y stretes, & lurketh i euery corner) she caught y yōge mā, kyssed him & was not ashamed, sayēge: I had a vowe to paye, & this daye I performe it. Therefore came I forth to mete the, that I might seke thy face, and so I haue founde the. I haue deckte my bed with coueringes & clothes of Egipte. My bed haue I made to smell of Myrre, Aloes and Cynamom. Come, let vs lye together, & take oure pleasure till it be daye light. For the good man is not at home, he is gone farre of. He hath taken the barge of moneye with him, who can tell whē he cōmeth home? <sup>4</sup>Thus with many swete wordes she ouercame him, and with hir flaterynge lippes she wanne him.

Immediatly he foloweth her, as it were an oxe led to the slaughter (and like as it were to the stockes, where fooles are punyshed) so longe till she hath wounded his lyuer with hir darte: like as yf a byrde haisted to the snare, not knowinge that the parell of his life lyeth there vpō. Heare me now therfore (o my sonne) and marke the wordes of my mouth. Let not thine herte wandre in hir wayes, & be not thou disceaue in hir pathes. For many one hath she wōded and cast downe, yee many a stronge mā hath she slayne. Hir house is the waye vnto hell, where men go downe to the chambers of death.

Stondeth she not in the hyc places in the stretes & wayes? doth she not crie before the whole cite, & in the gates where men go out & in? It is you, o ye men (sayeth she) whom I call. Vnto you (o ye childre of mē) lift I vp my voyce. Take hede vnto knowlege o ye ignorant, be wyse in herte o ye fooles. Geue eare, for I wil speake of greate matters, & open my lippes to tell thinges that be right. For my throte shal be talkynge of ſ̄ trueth, & my lippes abhorre vngodlynesse. All the wordes of my mouth are rightuous, there is no frowardnesse ner falsede therein. They are all playne to soch as wil vnderstōde, & right to thē that fynde knowlege. Recceauē my doctrine therfore and not syluer,<sup>a</sup> & knowlege more then fyne golde. For wysdome is more worth then precious stones, yee all the thinges that thou cast desyre, are not to be compared vnto it.

B I wysdome haue my dwellynge with knowlege, and prudent counsell is myne owne. With me is the feare of the LORDE, and ſ̄ eschuyngē of euell. As for pryde, disdayne, an euell waye, & a mouth that speaketh wicked thiges, I vterly abhorre thē. I can geue counsell, and be a gyde: I haue vnderstandinge, I haue strength.

Thorow me, kynges reigne: <sup>b</sup> thorow me, prices make iust lawes. Thorow me, lordes beare rule, and all iudges of ſ̄ earth execute iudgmēt. I am louynge vnto those that loue me, and they that seke me early, shal fynde me.

Riches & honoure are with me, yee excellent goodes & rightuousnes. My frute is better thē golde & precious stone, & myne encrease more worth then fyne syluer. I walke in ſ̄ waye of rightuousnes, & in the strete of iudgment. That I maye sende prosperite to those that loue me, & to encrease their treasure.

C The LORDE himself had me in possessiō in the begynnynge of his wayes, or euer he beganne his workes afore tyme. <sup>c</sup> I haue bene ordered frō euerlastige, & frō ſ̄ begynnyngē or euer the earth was made. When I was borne, there were nether depthes ner springes of water. Before the foundations of ſ̄ mountaynes were layed, yee before all hilles was I borne. The earth and all that is vpon the earth was not yet made, no not the grounde it self. <sup>d</sup> For when he made the heauens, I was present: whā he set the depthes in ordre: whan he hanged the cloudes aboue: whan he fastened the sprynges of the depe: <sup>e</sup> / Whan he shutt the see within certayne bowndes, that ſ̄ waters shulde not go ouer their marches. When he layed the foundations of the earth, I was with him, ordryngē all thinges, delytyngē daylie & reioysynge allwaye before him. As for the rōude cōpase of his worlde, I make it ioyfull, for my delyte is to be amōge the children of men.<sup>f</sup>

Therefore harken vnto me (o ye children) for blessed are they that kepe my wayes.

O geue eare vnto nurtoure, be wyse, and refuse it not. Blessed is ſ̄ man that heareth me, watchinge daylie at my gates, & geuyngē attendaunce at the postes of my dores.

For who so fyndeth me, fyndeth life, and shal optayne fauoure of the LORDE. But who so offendeth agaynst me, hurteth his owne soule. All they that hate me, are the louers of death.

The ix. Chapter.

WYSDOME hath buylded herself an house, and bewen out seven pilers: she hath slaughted, poured out hir wyne, and prepared hir table. She hath sent forth hir maydens to crie vpō the hyst place of the cite: Who so is ignorant, let him come hither. And to the vnwise she sayde: O come on youre waye, eate my bred, and drynke my wyne, which I haue poured out for you. For-sake ignoraūce, and ye shal lyue: and se that ye go in the waye of vnderstandinge.

Who so reproueth a scornfull personne, getteth him self dishonoure: and he that rebuketh the vngodly, stayneth himself.

Reproue not a scorner, lest he owe the euell wil: but rebuke a wyse man, and he wil loue the. Geue a discrete man but an occasion, & he wilbe the wyser: teach a rightuous man, and he wil increase. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, <sup>g</sup> & the knowlege of holy thinges is vnderstandinge. For thorow me thy dayes shalbe prolonged, and the yeares of thy life shal be many. Yf thou be wyse, thy wysdome shal do thy selfe good: but yf thou thynkest scorne therof, it shalbe thine owne harme. A foolish restlesse woman, full of wordes, and

But they cōsider not that death is there, and that hir gēstes go downe to hell.

The r. Chapter.

These are prouerbes of Salomon.

A WYSE sonne maketh a glad father, but <sup>a</sup>an vndiscrete sonne is the heuynesse of his mother. Treasures that are wickedly gotten, profit nothinge, but rightuousnesse delyuereth from death. <sup>b</sup>The LORDE wil not let the soule of the rightuous suffre hōger, but he putteth <sup>c</sup>fyngodly frō his desyre. An ydle hande maketh poore, but a quicke laboringe hande maketh riche.

Who so gathereth in Sommer, is wyse: but he that is slogish in haruest, bringeth himself to confucion. Louynge and fauorable is the face of the rightuous, but <sup>d</sup>fy fore heade of the vngodly is past shame, and presumptuous. <sup>e</sup>The memoriall of the iust shall haue a good reporte, but the name of the vngodly shal styneke. A wyse man wil receaue warnynge, but a foole wil sooner be smytten in the face.

In <sup>k</sup>fy lippes of him <sup>l</sup>fy hath vnderstōdinge a mā shal fynde wysdome, but <sup>m</sup>fy rodde belōgeth to <sup>n</sup>fy backe of <sup>o</sup>fy foolish. Wyse mē laye vp knowlege, but <sup>p</sup>fy mouth of <sup>q</sup>fy foolish is nye destrucciō. The rich mās goodes are his strōge holde, but pouerte oppresseth the poore.

C To take hede vnto <sup>r</sup>fy chastenynge of nourtoure, is <sup>s</sup>fy waye of life: but he that refuseth to be reformed, goeth wrōge. Dissembynge lippes kepe hatred secretly, and he that speaketh eny slauder, is a foole. Where moch bablinge is, there must nedes be offence: he that refrayneth his lippes, is wysest of all. An innocent tonge is a noble treasure, but the herte of the vngodly is nothinge worth. The lippes of the rightuous fede a whole multitude, but fooles shal dye in their owne foly. <sup>t</sup>The blessinge of the LORDE maketh rich mē, as for carefull trauaile, it doth nothinge therto. A foole doth wickedly & maketh but a sporte of it: neuertheles it is wysdome for a man to beware of soch.

The thinge that the vngodly are afraied of, shal come vpon them, but the rightuous shal haue their desyre. The vngodly is like a tempest that passeth ouer & is nomore sene, but the rightuous remayneth sure for euer. As vyneger is to the teth, and as smoke is vnto <sup>u</sup>fy eyes, euē so is a slogish personne to them that sende him forth. The feare of <sup>v</sup>fy LORDE maketh a lōge life, but <sup>w</sup>fy yeares of <sup>x</sup>fy vngodly shal be shortened. The pacient abydinge of the rightuous shalbe turned to gladnesse, but the hope of the vngodly shal perish. The waye of the LORDE geueth a corage vnto <sup>y</sup>fy godly, but it is a feare for wicked doers. The rightuous shal neuer be ouerthrowne, <sup>z</sup>but <sup>aa</sup>fy vngodly shal not remayne in the londe. The mouth of the iust wilbe talkynge of wysdome, but the tonge of the frowarde shal perish. The lippes of the rightuous are occupied in acceptable thinges, but the mouth of the vngodly taketh them to the worst.

The ri. Chapter.

A FALSE balaunce is an abhominacion <sup>ab</sup>vnto the LORDE, <sup>ac</sup>but a true weight pleaseth him. Where pryde is, there is shame also and confucion: but where as is lowlynes, there is wysdome. The innocent dealynge of the iust shal lede them, but the vnfaythfulnesse of the despyers shalbe their owne destrucciō. <sup>ad</sup>Riches helpe not in the daye of vengeance, but rightuousnesse delyuereth frō death. The rightuousnes of <sup>ae</sup>fy innocent ordreth his waye, but the vngodly shal fall in his owne wickednesse. The rightuousnesse of the iust shal delyuer them, but the despyers shalbe taken in their owne vngodlynnesse. When an Thorow ⁊ mouth of ⁊ dyssembler is his neyghboure destroyed, but thorow knowlege shal the iust be delyuered. When it goeth well with the rightuous, the cite is mery: and when the vngodly perish, there is gladnesse. When the iust are in wealth, the cite prospereth: but when the vngodly haue the rule, it decayeth. A foole bryngeth vp a slaunder of his neyghboure, but a wyse man wil kepe it secrete. <sup>a</sup> A dyssembler person wil discouer preuy thinges, but he that is of a faithfull hert, wil kepe counsell. Where no good counsell is there the people decaye: but where as are many that can geue counsell, there is wealth. <sup>d</sup> He that is suertye for a straunger, hurteth himself: but he that meddleth not with suerteshippe, is sure. A gracious womā manteyneth honestie, as for the mightie, they manteyne ryches. He <sup>e</sup> hath a gentle liberrall stomacke, is mercifull: but who so hurteth his neyghboure, is a tyraūt.

The labour of the vngodly prospereth not, but he that soweth rightuousnes, shal receaue a sure rewarde. Like as rightuousnes bryngeth life, euē so to cleue vnto euell, bryngeth death. The LORDE abhorreth a fayned hert, but he hath pleasure in them that are vndefyled. It shal not helpe <sup>f</sup> wicked, though they laye all their hondes together, but the sede of the rightuous shalbe preserued. A fayre woman without discrete maners, is like a ryng of golde in a swynes snoute. The iust labour for peace and traquylite, but the vngodly for disquyetnesse.

Who so maketh disquyetnesse in his owne house, he shal haue wynde for his heretage, and the foole shal be seruauant to the wyse.

The frute of the rightuous is as the tre of life, a wyse man also wynneth mens soules. <sup>l</sup> Yf <sup>m</sup> rightuous be recōpēsed vpō earth, how moch more thō the vngodly ⁊ <sup>n</sup> synner?

The xij. Chapter.

WHO so loueth wysdome, wil be content to be reformed: but he that hateth to be reproued, is a foole. A good man is acceptable vnto the LORDE, but <sup>o</sup> wicked wyl he condemne. A man cā not endure in vngodlynesse, but <sup>p</sup> rote of <sup>q</sup> righteous shal not be moued. A stedfast woman is a crowne vnto hir huszbonde: but she that behaueth herself vnonestly, is a corrupcion in his bones. The thoughtes of <sup>r</sup> righteous are right, but the ymaginacion of the vngodly are disceatfull. The talkynge of the vngodly is, how they maye laye wayte for bloude, but the mouth of <sup>s</sup> righteous wil delyuer them. Or euer thou canst turne the aboute, <sup>t</sup> the vngodly shal be ouerthrowne, but the house of the righteous shal stōde.

A man shalbe commended for his wysdome, but a foole shal be despysed. A simple man which laboureth and worketh, <sup>u</sup> is better the one that is gorgious and wanteth bred.

A righteous man regardeth the life of his catell, but the vngodly haue cruell hertes. <sup>v</sup> He that tilleth his lōde, shal haue plenteousnesse of bred: but he <sup>w</sup> foloweth ydylnes, is a very foole. The desyre of <sup>x</sup> vngodly hunteth after myschefe, but the rote of the righteous bryngeth forth frute. <sup>y</sup> The wicked falleth in to the snare thorow <sup>z</sup> malyce of his owne mouth, but the iust shal escape out of parell. Euery man shal enioye good acordinge to the innocency of his mouth, and after the workes of his hādes shal he be rewarded. C Loke what a foole taketh in honde, he thinketh it well done: but he that is wyse, wyl be coiceled. A foole vttereth his wrath in all the haist, but a discrete man forgeueth wronge. Heuynesse discourageth <sup>5</sup> herte of man,<sup>6</sup> but a good worde maketh it glad agayne. The righteous is liberal vnto his neigboure, but the waye of the vngodly wil disceauē them selues. A disceatfull man shal fynde no vantage, but he that is content with that he hath,<sup>7</sup> is more worth thē golde. In the waye of righteousnesse there is life, as for eny other waye, it is the path vnto death.

The iij. Chapter.

Some men are riche, though they haue nothinge:<sup>2</sup> agayne, some mē are poore hauynge greate riches. With goodes euery man deuyereth his life, and the poore wyl not be reprovēd. The light of the righteous maketh ioyfull,<sup>3</sup> but the candle of the vngodly shal be put out. Amonge the proude there is euer strife, but amonge those that do all thinges with aduysement, there is wysdome. Hastely gottē goodes are soone spent, but they that be gathered together with the hande, shal increase. Longe tarienge for a thinge that is dyffered, greueth <sup>4</sup> herte: but when the desyre cometh, it is a tre of life. Who so despyseth the worde, destroyeth himself: but he that feareth the comaundement, shal haue peace. The lawe is a wel of life vnto the wyse, that it maye kepe him from the snares of death. Good vnderstondinge geueth fauoure, but harde is the waye of the despyers. A wyse man doth all thinges with discrecion, but a foole wil declare his foly. An vngodly messaiger bryngeth myschefe, but a faithfull embassitoure is wholsome. He that thinketh scorne to be reformed, cometh to pouerte and shame: but who so receaueth correccion, shal come to honour. When a desyre is brought to passe, it delyteth the soule: but fooles abhorre him that eschuethe euell. He that goeth in the company of wyse men, shal be wyse: but who so is a cōpanyō of fooles, shal be hurte. Myschefe foloweth vpon synners, but the righteous shal haue a good rewarde. Which their childers childrē shal haue in possessiō, for <sup>5</sup> the riches of the synner is layed vp for <sup>6</sup> iust. There is plenteousnesse of fode in the feldes of the poore, & shalbe increased out of measure. <sup>7</sup> He that spareth the rodde, hateth his sonne: but who so loueth him, holdeth him euer in nurtoure. The righteous eateth, and is satisfied, but <sup>8</sup> y bely of the vngodly hath neuer ynough.

Who so feareth the LORDE, walketh in the right path: & regardeth not him that abhorreth the wayes of the LORDE. In the mouth of the foolish is the boostinge of lordshipe, but <sup>1</sup> lippes of <sup>2</sup> wyse wilbe warre of soch. Where no oxen are, there the crybb is emptie: but where the oxen laboure, there is moch frute. A faithfull wytnesse wyl not dyssemble, but a false recorde wil make a lye.

A scornefull body seketh wysdome, & fyndeth it not: but knowlege is easy to come by, vnto him that wil vnderstonde. <sup>3</sup> Se <sup>4</sup> y thou medle not with a foole, & do as though thou haddest no knowlege. The wysdome of him that hath vnderstondinge is, to take hede vnto his waye, but the foolishnesse of the vnwyse disceaueth. Fooles make but a sporte of

B synne, but there is fauourable loue amōge the righteous. The herte of him that hath vnderstandinge wil nether dispare for eny sorow, ner be to presumptuous for eny sodane ioye.

The houses of the vngodly shalbe ouerthrowne, but the tabernacles of ſ righteous shal florish. ⁹ There is a waye, which some men thinke to be right, but the ende therof ledeth vnto death. The herte is soroufull euen in laughter, and the ende of myrth is heynesse. An vnfaithfull personne shal be fylled with his owne wayes, but a good mā wyl bewarre of soch. An ignoraūt body beleueth all thinges, but who so hath vnderstandinge, loketh well to his goinges. A wyse man feareth, and departeth from euell, but a foole goeth on presumptuously. An vnpatient man handeleth foolishly, but he that is well aduysed, doth other wayes.

The euell shal bowe them selues before ſ good, and the vngodly shal wayte at the dores of the righteous. The poore is hated euen of his owne neyhbours, but the riche hath many frendes. Who so despyseth his neyhboure, doth amysse: ⁹ but blessed is he that hath pyte of the poore. They that ymagin wickednes, shalbe disapoynted: but they that muse vpō good thinges, vnto soch shal happen mercy and faithfulness. Diligēt laboure bryngeth riches, but where many wayne wordes are, truly there is scarcenesse.

B Riches are an ornament vnto the wyse, but the ignorance of fooles is very foolishnesse. A faithfull wytnesse delyuereth soules, but a lyar dysceaueth them. The feare of the LORDE is a strōge holde, for vnto his he wyl be a sure defence. The feare of the LORDE is a well of life, to auoyde the snares of death. The increase and prosperite of the comons is the kynges honour, but the decaye of the people is the confusiō of the prynce. Pacience is a token of wysdome, but wrath and haistie displeasure is a token of foolishnesse. A mery herte is the life of the body, but rancoure consumeth awaye the bones. ⁹ He that doth a poore man wrōge, blasphemeth his maker: but who so hath pitie of the poore, doth honoure vnto God.

The vngodly is afrayed of euery parell, but the righteous hath a good hope euē in death. Wysdome resteth in the herte of him that hath vnderstandinge, and he wyl teach them that are vlnerved. ⁹ Rightuousnes setteth vp the people, but wyckednesse bryngeth folke to destruccion. A discrete seruauit is a pleasure vnto ſ kyng, but one ſ is not honest, prouoketh him vnto wrath.

The xv. Chapter.

A SOFTE aswere<sup>e</sup> putteth downe displeasure, but frowarde wordes prouoke vnto anger. A wyse tonge commendeth knowlege, a foolish mouth blabbeth out nothinge but foolishnesse. The eyes of the LORDE loke in euery place, both vpon ſ good and badd. A wholsome tonge is a tre of life, but he that abuseth it, hath a broken mynde. A foole despyseth his fathers correccion, but he ſ taketh hede whan he is reprovved, shal haue ſ more vnderstōdinge.

In the house of the righteous are greate riches, but in the increase of the vngodly there is mysordre. A wyse mouth poureth out knowlege, but ſ herte of the foolish doth not so. ⁹ The LORDE abhorreth ſ sacrifice of the vngodly, but the prayer of the righteous is acceptable vnto him. The waye of the vngodly is an abhominaciō vnto ſ LORDE, but who so foloweth righteousnes, him he loueth. He that forsaketh ſ right strete, shalbe sore punyshed: ⁹ who so hateth correccion, falleth in to death. The hell with hir payne is knowne vnto the LORDE, how moch more then the hertes of men?

slouthfull is full of thornes, but  $\hat{y}$  strete of the rightuous is well clenſed. A wyſe ſonne maketh a glad father, but an vndiſcrete body ſhameth his mother. A ſoole rei oyſeth in fooliſh thinges, but a wyſe man loketh well to his owne goinges. Vnadyſed thoughtes ſhal come to naught, but where as are men  $\hat{y}$  can geue counzell, there is ſtedfaſtneſſe. O how ioyfull a thinge is it, a man to geue a conuenient anſwere? O how pleaſaunt is a worde ſpoken in due ſeaſon? The waye of life ledeth vnto heauē,  $\hat{y}$  a man ſhulde bewarre of hell beneth.

D The LORDE wyl breake downe  $\hat{y}$  houſe of  $\hat{y}$  proude, but he ſhal make faſt  $\hat{y}$  borders of  $\hat{y}$  wyddowe. The LORDE abhorreth  $\hat{y}$  ymaginacions of  $\hat{y}$  wicked, but pure wordes are pleaſaunt vnto him. The couetous man wrutteth vp his owne houſe, but who ſo hateth rewardes, ſhal lyue. A rightuous mā muſeth in his mynde how to do good, but  $\hat{y}$  mynde of the vngodly ymagineth, how he maye do harme. The LORDE is farre from the vngodly, but he heareth  $\hat{y}$  prayer of the rightuous. Like as  $\hat{y}$  clearneſſe of  $\hat{y}$  eyes rei oyſeth  $\hat{y}$  herte, ſo doth a good name fede  $\hat{y}$  bones. The eare  $\hat{y}$  harkeneth vnto wholeſome warynge, and encl yneth therto, ſhall dwell amonge  $\hat{y}$  wyſe. He that refuseth to be reſournded, deſpyſeth his owne ſoule: but he that ſubmytteth himſelf to correccion, is wyſe.

The xvi. Chapter.

A THE feare of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE is  $\hat{y}$  right ſcyēce of wyſdomme, and lowlynnes goeth before honoure. A man maye well purpoſe a thinge in his harte, but  $\hat{y}$  anſwere of  $\hat{y}$  tonge cōmeth of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE. A mā thinketh all his waies to be clene, but it is  $\hat{y}$  LORDE  $\hat{y}$  fashiōneth  $\hat{y}$  myndes. Commytte thy workes vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, and loke what thou deuyſeſt, it ſhal proſpere. The LORDE doth all thinges for his owne ſake, yee  $\tau$  when he kepeth  $\hat{y}$  vngodly for  $\hat{y}$  daye of wrath.

The LORDE abhorreth all preſumptuous  $\tau$  proude hertes, there maye nether ſtrength ner power eſcape. With louynge mercy  $\tau$  faithfulneſſe ſynnes be forgeuen, and who ſo feareth  $\hat{y}$  LORDE eſchueth euell. When a mans wayes pleaſe  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, he maketh his very enemies to be his frendes. Better is it to haue a litle thinge with rightuousnes, the greates rentes wrongeouſly gotten. A mā deuyſeth a waye in his herte, but it is  $\hat{y}$  LORDE  $\hat{y}$  ordreth his goinges. When  $\hat{y}$  prophecy is in  $\hat{y}$  lippes of  $\hat{y}$  kynge, his mouth ſhal not go wrōge in iudgment. A true meaſure  $\tau$  a true balauce are  $\hat{y}$  LORDES, he maketh all weightes. It is a greates abhominaciō when kyngeſ are wycked, for a kyngeſ ſeaſe ſhulde be holden vp with righteouſneſſe.

Righteous lippes are pleaſaunt vnto kyngeſ, and they loue him  $\hat{y}$  ſpeaketh  $\hat{y}$  trueth.

The kyngeſ diſpleaſure is a meſſaunger of death, but a wyſe man wyl pacifie him.

The cherefull countenaunce of  $\hat{y}$  kynge is life, and his louynge fauoure is as the euenynge dewe. To haue wyſdomme in poſſeſſion is better then golde, and to get vnderſtōdyng, is more worth then ſyluer. The path of  $\hat{y}$  righteous eſchueth euell,  $\tau$  who ſo loketh well to his wayes, kepeth his owne ſoule.

Presumptuousnes goeth before deſtruction, and after a proude ſtomake theſe foloweth a fall. Better it is to be of humble mynde with the lowly, then to deuyde  $\hat{y}$  ſpoyleſ with  $\hat{y}$  proude. He  $\hat{y}$  handleth a matter wyſely, opteyneth good:  $\tau$  bleſſed is he,  $\hat{y}$  putteth his truſt in  $\hat{y}$  LORDE. Who ſo hath a wyſe vnderſtōdyng, is called to counzell: but he  $\hat{y}$  can ſpeake fayre, getteth more riches. Vnderſtōdyng is a well of life vnto him  $\hat{y}$  hath it, as for  $\hat{y}$  chaſtenynge of foolles, it is but fooliſhneſſe. The herte of the wyſe enſourmeth his mouth, and amendeth  $\hat{y}$  doctryne in his lippes.

Fayre wordes are an hony combe, a reſreſhing of  $\hat{y}$  mynde,  $\tau$  health of  $\hat{y}$  bones.

There is a waye  $\hat{y}$  men thinke to be right, but the ende therof leadeth vnto death. A troublous ſoule diſquyeteth hir ſelfe, for hir owne mouth hath brought her therto. An vngodly perſonne ſtereth vp euell, and in his lippes he is as an whote burnynge fyre.

A frowarde body cauſeth ſtrife, and he  $\hat{y}$  is a blabbe of his tonge, maketh deuyſion amonge prynces. A wicked mā begyleth his neighbour,  $\tau$  ledeth him  $\hat{y}$  waye  $\hat{y}$  is not good.

He that wyncketh with his eyes, ymagineth myſchefe: and he  $\hat{y}$  byteth his lippes, wyl do some harme. " Age is a crowne of worship, yf it be founde in the waye of righteousness.

A pacient man is better then one that is ströge: and he that can rule him selfe, is more worth then he yf wynneth a cite. The lottes are cast in to the lappe, but their fall stödeh in the LORDE.

The xviij. Chapter.

BETTER is a drye morsell with quyetnesse, thā a full house and many fatt catell with stryfe. <sup>a</sup> A discrete seruauit shal haue more rule then the sonnes yf haue no wysdome, and shal haue like heretage with the brethren. <sup>c</sup> Like as syluer is tried in the fyre and golde in the fornaçe, euen so doth the LORDE proue the hertes. A wicked body holdeth moch of false lippes, <sup>e</sup> a dyssemblynge persone geueth eare to a disceatfull töge. <sup>d</sup> Who so laugheth yf poore to scorne, blasphemeth his maker: and he yf is glad of another mans hurte, shal not be vnpunished. Childers children are a worshippe vnto the elders, and the fathers are the honoure of the children. An eloquent speech becömeth not a foole, a dyssemblynge mouth also besemeth not a prync. Liberalite is a precious stone vnto him that hath it, for where so euer he becömeth, he prospereth. Who so couereth another mans offence, seketh loue: but he yf discloseth the faute, setteth frendes at variance. One reprove only doth more good to him yf hath vnderstödinge, then an C. stripes vnto a foole. A sedicious persone seketh myschefe, but a cruell messaunger shal be sent agaynst him. It were better to come agaynst a she Bere robbed of hir whelpes, then agaynst a foole in his foolishnes. <sup>e</sup> Who so rewardeth euell for good, the plage shal not departe frō his house. that geueth ſentence in a matter before he heare it, is a foole, and worthy to be confounded. A good stomacke dryncth away a mā's diſeaſe, but whā ſprete is vexed, who maye abyde it? A wyſe herte labourerth for knowledge, and a prudent eare ſeketh vnderſtandinge. Liberalite bryngeth a man to honour and worſhipe, ⁊ ſetteth him amonge greate men.

C The righteous accuſeth hi ſelf firſt of all, yf hiſ neighbour come, he ſhal fynde him. The lot paciſieth ſy variañce, ⁊ parteth ſy mightie aſunder. The vnite of brethren is ſtronger then a caſtell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace. A mans bely ſhalbe ſatisfied with the frute of hiſ owne mouth, and with the increaſe of hiſ lippes ſhal he be fylled. Death and life ſtonde in the power of the tonge, he that loueth it, ſhal enioye the frute thereof. <sup>a</sup>Who ſo fyndeth a wiſe fyndeth a good thyng, ⁊ receaueth an whoſome benefite of the LORDE. The poore maketh ſupplicacion and prayeth mekely, but the riche geueth a rough anſwere.

A frende that delyteth in loue, doth a man more frēdſhipe, and ſticketh faſter vnto him then a brother.

The xix. Chapter.

BETTER is the poore <sup>a</sup>that lyueth godly, B thā the blaſphemer that is but a foole. Where no diſcretion is, there the ſoule is not well: and who ſo is ſwiſte on fote, ſtombleth haſtely. Fooliſhneſſe maketh a man to go out of hiſ waye, ⁊ then is hiſ herte vnpacient agaynſt the LORDE. Riches make many frendes, but the poore is forſakē of hiſ owne frendes. <sup>c</sup>A false wyneſſe ſhal not remayne vnpunyſhed, and he that ſpeaketh lyes ſhal not eſcape. The multitude hāgeth vpō greate men, ⁊ euery man fauoureth him that geueth rewardes. As for the poore, he is hated amonge all hiſ brethren: yee hiſ owne frendes forſake him, ⁊ he that geueth credēce vnto wordes, getteth nothinge. He that is wyſe, loueth hiſ owne ſoule: and who ſo hath vnderſtandinge, ſhal proſpere. A false wyneſſe ſhal not remayne vnpunyſhed, ⁊ he ſy ſpeaketh lyes ſhal periſhe. Delicate eaſe becōmeth not a foole, moch more vnſmely is it, a boude man to haue ſy rule of prynces. A wyſe man putteth of diſpleaſure, ⁊ it is hiſ honour to let ſome fautes paſſe.

<sup>d</sup>The kynges diſfauoure is like ſy roaringe of a Lyō, but hiſ frēdſhipe is like the dewe vpō ſy grasse. <sup>e</sup>An vndiſcrete ſonne is ſy heuynes of hiſ father, ⁊ a braulyng wife is like the topp of an houſe, where thorow it is euer droppyng. Houſe ⁊ riches maye a mā haue by ſy heretage of hiſ elders, <sup>f</sup>but a diſcrete womā is the giſte of the LORDE. Slouthfulneſſe bryngeth ſlepe, ⁊ an ydell ſoule ſhal ſuffer hōger. Who ſo kepeth the cōmaundemēt, kepeth hiſ owne ſoule: but he ſy regardeth not hiſ waye, ſhal dye. He ſy hath pitie vpon the poore, lēdeth vnto ſy LORDE: ⁊ loke what he layeth out, it ſhalbe payed him agayne. Chaſtē tly ſonne whyle there is hope, but let not thy ſoule be moued to ſlaye hi. For greate wrath bryngeth harme, therefore let him go, and ſo mayeſt thou teach him more nurtoure. O geue eare vnto good counsell, ⁊ be content to be reformed, that thou mayeſt be wyſe hereafter. <sup>g</sup>There are many deuices in a mā's herte, neuertheles the cōcell of ſy LORDE ſhal ſtōde. It is a mans worſhipe to do good, ⁊ better it is to be a poore mā, then a dyſſembler. The feare of the LORDE preſerueth the life, yee it geueth plēteuſnes, without the viſitaciō of any plage. <sup>h</sup>A ſlouthfull body ſhuteth hiſ honde in to hiſ boſome, ſo ſy he cau not put it to hiſ mouth. <sup>i</sup>Yf thou ſmyeſt a ſcornefull perſonne, the <sup>j</sup>ignoraūt ſhal take better hede: ⁊ yf thou reproueſt one ſy hath vnderſtandinge, he wil be ſy wyſer. He ſy hurteth hiſ father or ſhuteth out hiſ mother, is a ſhamefull ⁊ an vnworthy ſonne. My ſonne, heare nomore the doctrine ſy leadeth the awaye from the wordes of vnderſtandinge.

A false wyneſſe laugheth iudgmēt to ſcorne, ⁊ the mouth of the vngodly eateth vp wickednes. Punyſhmentes are ordered for the ſcornefull, and ſtripes for fooles backes.

The xx. Chapter.

WYNE is a voluptuous thinge, ⁊ drōckennes cauſeth ſedicion: <sup>k</sup>who ſo delyteth therein, ſhal neuer be wyſe. <sup>l</sup>The kyng ought to be feared as the roaringe of a lyō, who ſo prouoketh him vnto anger, offendeth agaynſt hiſ owne ſoule. It is a mans honour to kepe himſelf from ſtrife, but they ſy haue pleaſure in braulinge, are fooles eueryone.

A slouthfull body wyl not go to plowe for colde, therefore shal he go abegginge in Sommer, and haue nothinge. Wyse counsell in the herte of man is like a water in the depe of the earth, but he that hath vnderstondinge, bryngeth it forth. Many there be that are called good doers, but where shal one fynde a true faithfull mā? Who so ledeeth a godly and an innocent life, <sup>a</sup>happie shal his children be, whom he leaueth behynde him.

B A kynge that sytteth in iudgment, and loketh well aboute him, dryueth awaye all euell. Who can saye: <sup>b</sup>my hert is cleane, I am innocent from synne? To vse two maner of weightes, or two maner of measures, both these are abhominable vnto the LORDE.

A childe is knowne by his conuersacion, whether his workes be pure and right. As for the hearinge of the eare & the sight of <sup>c</sup>eye, <sup>d</sup>the LORDE hath made the both. Delyte not thou in slepe, lest thou come vnto ponerte: but open thine eyes, & thou shalt haue bred ynough. It is naught, It is naught (saye men) when they haue it, but when it is gone, they geue it a good worde.

C A mouth of vnderstondinge is more worth then golde, many precious stones, and costly Jewels. Take his garment that is suertie for a straunger, & take a pledge of him for <sup>e</sup>thy vnknowne mans sake. Euery mā liketh the bred that is gotten with disceate, but at the last is mouth shalbe fylled with grauell.

Thorow counsell the thynges that men deuyse go forwarde: & with discrecion ought warres to be taken in honde. Medle not with him that bewrayeth secretes, and is a slauderer, and disceaueth with his lippes. <sup>f</sup>Who so curseth his father and mother, his light shalbe put out in the myddest of darcknesse. The heretage that commeth to haistely at the first, shal not be prayd at the ende. D Saye not thou: I will recompence euell, but put thy trust in the LORDE, & he shal defende <sup>g</sup>the. The LORDE abhorreth two maner of weightes, and a false balace is an euell thyng. The LORDE ordreth euery mā's goings, for what is he, that vnderstondeth his owne wayes? It is a snare for a man to blasphemie that which is holy, & then to go aboute with vowes. A wyse kynge destroyeth

The xxi. Chapter.

THE kynges hert is in the hande of the LORDE, like as are the ryuers of water: he maye turne it whither so euer he wyll. Euery man thinketh his owne waye to be right, but the LORDE iudgeth <sup>l</sup>the hertes. To do rightuousnesse and iudgment is more acceptable to the LORDE than the sacrifice.

A presumptuous loke, a proude stomacke, & the lanterne of the vngodly is synne. The deuyses of one that is diligent, brynge plenteousnes: but he <sup>m</sup>the vngodly is vnadysed, commeth vnto pouerte. Who so hoordeth vp riches with <sup>n</sup>the disceatfulness of his tonge, he is a foole, & like vnto them that seke their owne death. The robberies of the vngodly shalbe their owne destruction, for they wolde not do the thyng that was right. The wayes of the forwarde are straunge, but <sup>o</sup>the workes of him <sup>p</sup>the vngodly is cleane, are right. It is better to dwell in a corner vnder <sup>q</sup>the house toppe, then with a braulynge woman in a wyde house.

The soule of the vngodly wyssheth euell, and hath no pitie vpon his neighbour.

When the scornfull is punyshed, the ignorant take <sup>r</sup>the better hede: & when a wyse man is warned, he wil receaue the more vnderstondinge. The rightuous enfourmeth the house of the vngodly, but <sup>s</sup>the vngodly go on still after their owne wickednesse. Who so stoppeth his eare at the crye of the poore, <sup>t</sup>he shal erie himself and not be herde. A preuy rewarde pacieth displeasure, and a gifte in the bosome stilleth furiousnesse.

C The iust delyteth in doyng the thyng that is right, but the workers of wickednesse abhorre the same. The man that wandreth out of the waye of wysdome, shal remayne in the congregacion of <sup>u</sup>the deed. He <sup>v</sup>the vngodly hath pleasure in banquettes, <sup>w</sup>shal be a poore man: Who so delyteth in wyne and delicates, shal not be riche. The vngodly shalbe geuen for the righteous, ⁊ the wicked for the iust.

It is better to dwell in a wyldernes, <sup>a</sup>thē with a chydinge and an angrie woman. In a wyse mans house there is grete treasure and plenteuousnesse, but a foolish body spendeth vp all. Who so foloweth rightuousnesse and mercy, fyndeth both life, rightuousnesse and honoure. A wyse man wynneth the cite of the mightie, and as for the strength <sup>ȳ</sup>they trust in, he bryngeth it downe. Who so kepeth his mouth and his tonge, <sup>a</sup>the same kepeth his soule from troubles. He <sup>ȳ</sup>is proude ⁊ presumptuous, is called a scornfull mā, which in wrath darre worke maliciously.

He coueteth and desyreth all the daye longe, but the righteous is allway geuyng ⁊ kepeth nothinge backe. <sup>a</sup>The sacrifice of the vngodly is abhominacion, for they offre the thinge <sup>ȳ</sup>is gotten with wickednes. <sup>a</sup>A false wytnesse shal perishe, but he <sup>ȳ</sup>wilbe content to heare, shal allway haue power to speake himself. An vngodly man goeth forth rashly, but the iust refourmeth his owne waye.

There is no wysdome, <sup>a</sup>there is no vnderstandinge, there is no counsell agaynst the LORDE. The horse is prepared agaynst <sup>ȳ</sup>daye of battayll, but the LORDE geueth the victory.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A GOOD name is more worth then greates riches, <sup>a</sup>and louyng fauoure is better then syluer and golde. Whether riches or pouerte do mete vs, it commeth all of God. A wyse man scyth the plage and hydeth himself, but the foolish go on still and are punyshed. The ende of lowlynes ⁊ the feare of God, is riches, honoure, prosperite and health. Speares and suares are in <sup>ȳ</sup>waye of the forwarde, but he <sup>ȳ</sup>wil kepe his soule, let him fle frō soch. Yf thou teachest a childe in his youth what waye he shulde go, he shall not leaue it when he is olde. The rich ruleth the poore, and <sup>ȳ</sup>borower is seruaunt to <sup>ȳ</sup>lender. He <sup>ȳ</sup>soweth wickednesse, shal reape sorowe, ⁊ the rodde of his plage shal destroye him. <sup>a</sup>A louyng eye shalbe blessed, for he geueth of his bred vnto <sup>ȳ</sup>poore. Cast out <sup>ȳ</sup>scornefull man, and so shal strife go out with him, yee variaunce and slaunder shal cease. Who so delyteth to be of a clene herte and of gracious lyppes, <sup>ȳ</sup>kyng shal be his frende.

The eyes of <sup>ȳ</sup>LORDE preserue knowlege, but as for <sup>ȳ</sup>wordes of <sup>ȳ</sup>despyteful, he bryngeth them to naught. The slouthfull body sayeth: there is a lyō with out, I might be slayne in <sup>ȳ</sup>strete. The mouth of an harlot is a depe pytt, <sup>a</sup>wherin he falleth that <sup>ȳ</sup>LORDE is angrie withall. Foolishnes sticketh in the herte of <sup>ȳ</sup>lad, but <sup>ȳ</sup>rod of correccion driueth it awaye. Who so doth a poore man wronge to increase his owne riches, geueth (comōly) vnto the rich, and at the last commeth to pouerte himself. My sonne, bowe downe thine eare, and herken vnto the wordes of wysdome, applye thy mynde vnto my doctryne: for it is a pleasaunt thinge yf thou kepe it in thine herte, and practise it in thy mouth: that thou mayest allway put thy trust in the LORDE. Haue not I warned <sup>ȳ</sup>very oft with counsell and lerninge? <sup>ȳ</sup>I might shewe <sup>ȳ</sup>the treuth, and that thou with the verite mightest answer them <sup>ȳ</sup>laye eny thinge against <sup>ȳ</sup>? Se <sup>ȳ</sup>thou robbe not <sup>ȳ</sup>poore because he is weake, and oppresse not <sup>ȳ</sup>simple in iudgment: for <sup>ȳ</sup>LORDE himself wyl defende their cause, and do violence vnto them <sup>ȳ</sup>haue vsed violence.

Make no frēdshepe with an angrie wyllfull man, and kepe no company with <sup>ȳ</sup>furious: lest thou lerne his wayes, and receaue hurte vnto thy soule. <sup>a</sup>Be not thou one of them <sup>ȳ</sup>bynde their hande vpō promyse, and are suertie for dett: for yf thou hast nothinge to paye, they shal take awaye thy bed from vnder the. <sup>a</sup>Thou shalt not remoue the lande marcke, which thy fore elders haue sett. <sup>a</sup> Take not ouer greate traunyle and labour to be riche, beware of soch a purpose. Why wilt thou set thine eye vpon ȝ thinge, which sodenly vanisheth away? For riches make them selues wynges, and take their flight like an Aegle in to ȝ ayre. Eate not thou with ȝ enuyous, and desyre not his meate, for he hath a maruelous herte. He sayeth vnto ȝ: eate and drynke, where as his herte is not with ȝ. Yee ȝ morsels that thou hast eaten shalt thou perbreake, and lese those swete wordes. Tel nothing in to ȝ eares of a foole, for he wyl despyse the wyszdome of thy wordes. <sup>b</sup> Remoue not ȝ olde lande marke, and come not within ȝ felde of the fatherlesse: For he ȝ deliuereth them is mightie, euen he shal defende their cause agaynst the. Applie thine herte vnto lernynge, and thine eare to the wordes of knowlege. <sup>c</sup> Witholde not correccon from ȝ childe, for yf thou beatest him with the rodde, he shal not dye therof. Thou smytest him with the rodde, but thou delyuerest his soule from hell. My sonne, yf thy herte receaue wyszdome, my herte also shal reioyce: yee thy reynes shal be very glad, yf thy lypes speake the thinge ȝ is right. <sup>d</sup> Let not thine herte be gelous to folowe synners, but kepe ȝ still in the feare of the LORDE all the daye lōge: for the ende is not yet come, and thy pacient abydinge shal not be in vayne. My sonne, geue eare ȝ be wyse, so shal thine hert prospere in the waye. Kepe no company with wyne bebbers and ryotous eaters of flesh: for such as be dronckardes and ryotous, <sup>e</sup> shal come to pouerte, ȝ he that is geuen to moch slepe, shal go with a ragged cote. Geue eare vnto thy father that begat the, and despyse not thy mother whan she is olde. Labour to get ȝ treuth: sell not away wyszdome, nourtoure ȝ vnderstōdinge (for a righteous father is maruelous glad of a wyse sonne, ȝ delyteth in hī) so shal thy father be glad, and thy mother that bare the, shal reioyse. My sonne, geue me thine herte, and let thine eyes haue pleasure in my wayes. <sup>f</sup> For an whore is a depe graue, and an harlot is a narrow pytt. She lurketh like a thefe, and those that be not awarre she brighet vnto her. Where is wo? where is sorow? where is strife?

where is braulynge? where are woundes without cause? where be reed eyes? Euen amonge those that be euer at the wyne, and seke out where the best is. Loke not thou vpon the wyne, how reed it is, and what a colour it geueth in the glasse.

It goeth downe softly, but at the last it byteth like a serpet, and styngeth as an Adder.

So shal thine eyes loke vnto straunge women, ȝ thine herte shal muse vpon frowarde thinges. Yee thou shalt be as though thou slepte, in ȝ myddest of ȝ see, or vpō ȝ toppe of the mast. They wounded me (shalt thou saie) but it hath not hurte me, they smote me, but I felt it not. Whē I am wel wakened, I wil go to ȝ drynke agayne.

THESE also are Salomons prouerbes, which the men of Ezechias kinge of Iuda gathered together. It is the honour of God to kepe a thinge secrete, " but ŷ kinges honour is to search out a thinge. The heauen is hie, ŷ earth is depe, and ŷ kinges hert is vnsearcheable. Take ŷ drosse from ŷ syluer, & there shalbe a cleane vessell therof.

Take awaye vngodlinesse frō ŷ kyng, & his seate shalbe stablished with rightuousnes.

Put not forth thy self in ŷ presence of ŷ kyng, & prease not in to ŷ place of greates men.

Better it is ŷ it be sayde vnto ŷ: "come vp hither, then thou to be set downe in ŷ presence of ŷ prynce, whom thou seyst with thine eyes. " Be not haistie to go to the lawe, lest happlie thou ordre thy self so at ŷ last, ŷ thy neyghboure put ŷ to shame. Handle thy matter with thy neyghboure himself, & discouer not another mans secrete: lest whan men heare therof, it turne to thy dishonoure, & lest thine euell name do not cease. A worde spoken in due season, is like apples of golde in a syluer dyshe.

The correccion of the wyse is to an obedient eare, a golden cheyne and a Iewel of golde. Like as the wynter coole in the haruest, so is a faithfull messaunger to him that sent him, & refreszeth his masters mynde.

Who so maketh greates boasts & geueth nothinge, is like cloudes & wynde without rayne. " With pacience maye a prynce be pacified, & with a soft tongue maye rigorousnes be brokē. Yf thou findest hony, eate so much as is sufficiēt for ŷ: lest thou be ouerfull, & per breake it out againe. Withdrowe thy foote frō thy neyghbours house, lest he be weery of the, and so abhorre the. Who so beareth false wytnesse agaynst his neyghboure, he is a vyne speare, a swearde & a sharpe arowe. The hope of the vngodly in tyme of nede, is like a rotten toth and a slippery foote. Who so syngeth a songe to a wicked herte, clotheth hī with ragges in the colde, and poureth vyneger vpon chalke. Yf thine enemye hunger, fede him: " yf he thyrst, geue him drynke: for so shalt thou heape coales of fyre vpō his heade, and the LORDE shal rewarde the. The north wynde dryueth awaye the rayne, euen so doth an earnest sober countenance a back byters tonge. It is better to syt in a corner vnder the rose, " then with a braulyng woman in a wyde house. A good reporte out of a farre countre, is like colde water to a thyrstie soule. A righteous man fallynge downe before the vngodly, is like a troubled well and a sprynge ŷ is destroyed.

The xviij. Chapter.

LIKE as snowe is not mete in sommer, ner rayne in haruest: euen so is worshippe vnseemly for a foole. Like as  $\text{f}$  byrde and the swalowe take their flight and fle here and there, so the curse that is geuen in vayne, shal not light vpon a man.  $\text{v}$ nto the horse belongeth a whyppe, to the Asse a brydle, and a rodde to the fooles backe. Geue not the foole an answer after his foolishnesse, lest thou become like vnto him: but make  $\text{f}$  foole an answer to his foolishnesse, lest he be wyse in his owne cōceate. He is lame of his fete, yee droncken is he in vanite, that cōmitteth eny thinge to a foole. Like as it is an vnseemly thinge to haue legges  $\text{t}$  yet to halte, eue so is a parable in  $\text{f}$  fooles mouth.

He  $\text{f}$  setteth a foole in hye dignite,  $\text{f}$  is eue as yf a man dyd cast a precious stoue vpo  $\text{f}$  galous. A parable in a fooles mouth, is like a thorne  $\text{f}$  pricketh a droncken man in  $\text{f}$  bande. A man of experience discerneth all thinges well, but who so hyreth a foole, hyreth soch one as wyl take no hede. Like as the dogg turneth agayne to his vomite, euen so a foole begynneth his foolishnesse agayne afresh. Yf thou seyest a man  $\text{f}$  is wyse in his owne conceate, there is more hope in a foole then in hi.  $\text{d}$ The slouthfull sayeth: there is a leoparde in  $\text{f}$  waye, and a lyon in  $\text{f}$  myddest of the stretes. Like as the dore turneth aboute vpon the tresholde, euen so doth the slouthfull welter himself in his bedd.  $\text{e}$ The slouthfull body thrusteth his hōde in to his bosome, and it greueth him to put it agayne to his mouth. The slogarde thinketh him self wyser, then vij. men that sytt and teache.

Who so goeth by and medleth with other mens strife, he is like one  $\text{f}$  taketh a dogg by  $\text{f}$  eares. Like as one shuteth deadly arowes and dartes out of a preuy place, euen so doth a dyssembler with his neghboure. And then sayeth he: I dyd it but in sporte. Where no wodd is, there the fyre goeth out:  $\text{e}$  and where the bacbyter is taken awaye, there the strife ceaseth. Coles kyndle heate, and wodd  $\text{f}$

fyre: euen so doth a braulinge felowe sterve vp variance. A slaunders wordes are like flattery, but they pearse  $\text{f}$  inwarde partes of  $\text{f}$  body. Venymous lippes  $\text{t}$  a wicked herte, are like a potsherde couered with syluer drosse. An enemie dyssembleth with his lippes, and in the meane season he ynagineth myschefe: but whā he speaketh fayre, beleue him not, for there are seuen abhominaciōs in his herte. Who so kepeth euell will secretly to do hurte, his malyce shal be shewed before the whole congregacion.  $\text{d}$ Who so dyggeth vp a pytt, shal fal therin: and he  $\text{f}$  weltreth a stone, shal stombe vpon it hymselfe.

A dyssembleynge tonge hateth one that rebuketh him, and a flaterige mouth worketh myschefe.

The xviij. Chapter.

MAKE not thy boost of tomorow, for  $\text{t}$  thou knowest not what maye happen todaye. Let another mā prayse the,  $\text{t}$  not thine owne mouth: yee other folkes lippes, and not thyne.  $\text{d}$ The stone is heuy, and the sonde weightie: but a fooles wrath is heuyr then they both. Wrath is a cruell thige, and furiousnesse is a very tempest: yee who is able to abyde envye?  $\text{d}$ An open rebuke is better, than a secrete loue. Faithfull are the woundes of a louer, but  $\text{f}$  kysses of an enemie are disceatfull. He that is full, abhorreth an honycombe: but vnto him that is hōgrie, euery sower thinge is swete. He that oft tymes flytteth, is like a byrde  $\text{f}$  forsaketh hir nest. The herte is glad of a swete oyntment and sauoure, but a stomacke that cū geue good counsell, reioyseth a mans neghboure. Thyne owne frende and thy fathers frende se thou forsake not, but go not in to thy brothers house in tyme of thy trouble.

Better is a frende at hōde, then a brother farre of. My soune, be wyse, and thou shalt make me a glad herte: so that I shal make answer vnto my rebukers. A wyse man seynge the plage wyl hyde him self, as for fooles they go on still, and suffer harme. Take his garnett that is suertie for a straunger,  $\text{t}$  take a pledge of him for the vknowne mans sake. #### The xrbīij. Chapter.

A THE vngodly flyeth no man chasyng him,<sup>d</sup> but the rightuous stondesth stiff as a lyon. Because of synne ⁊ londe doth oft change hir prynce: but thorow men of vnderstondinge ⁊ wysdome a realme endureth longe. One poore man oppressinge another by violence, is like a contynuall rayne that destroyeth ⁊ frute. They that forsake the lawe, prayse ⁊ vngodly: but soch as kepe the lawe, abhorre them. <sup>e</sup>Wicked men discerne not the thinge ⁊ is right, but they that seke after the LORDE, discusse all thinges. <sup>f</sup>A poore man ledyng a godly life, is better then the riche that goeth in frowarde wayes. Who so kepeth the lawe, is a childe of vnderstondinge: but he ⁊ fedeth ryotous men, shameth his father. B Who so increaseth his riches by vauitage ⁊ wynnyng, let him gather them to helpe the poore withall. <sup>g</sup>He that turneth away his care from hearinge ⁊ lawe, his prayer shalbe abhorred. Who so ledeth ⁊ rightuous in to an euell waye, shal fall in to his owne pytt, but ⁊ iust shal haue the good in possession.

The rich man thynketh him self to be wyse, but the poore that hath vnderstondinge, cā perceauē him wel ynough. <sup>h</sup>When rightuous men are in prosperite, the doth honoure florish: but when the vngodly come vp, ⁊ state of men chaungeth. He that hydeth his synnes, shal not prospere: but who so knowlegeth them and forsaketh them, shal haue mercy. Well is him that stōdeth all waye in awe: as for him that hardeneth his herte, he shal fall in to mischefe. Like as a roaringe lyon and an hongrie beer, euen so is an vngodly prynce ouer the poore people.

Where the prynce is without vnderstondinge, there is greate oppression ⁊ wronge: but yf he be soch one as hateth couetousnesse, he shal longe raigne. <sup>i</sup>He that by violēce sheddeth eny mans bloude, shal be a renagate vnto his graue, and no man shal be able to scoure him. <sup>k</sup>Who so leadeth a godly and an innocēt life, shalbe safe: but he that goeth frowarde wayes, shal once haue a fall. He ⁊ tyllth his londe,<sup>l</sup> shal haue plenteuousnesse of bred: but he that foloweth ydilnesse, shal haue pouerte ynough. A faithfull man is greatly to be commēded, but he that maketh to moch haist for to be riche, <sup>m</sup>shal not be vngiltie. To haue respecte of personnes in iudgment is not good: And why? he will do wronge, yee euen for a pece of bred. D He that will be rich all to soone, hath an euell eye, and considereth not, that pouerte shall come vpon him. He that rebuketh a man, shall fynde more fauoure at ⁊ last, thē he that flatreth him. Who so robbeth his father and mother,<sup>n</sup> and sayeth it is no synne: the same is like vnto a motherer.

He that is of a proude stomacke, stereth vp strife: but he that putteth his trust in ⁊ LORDE, shalbe well fedd. He that trusteth in his owne hert, is a foole: but he that dealeth wisely, shalbe safe. <sup>o</sup>He that geueth vnto the poore, shal not wante: but he that turneth away his eyes from soch as be in necessite, shall suffre greate pouerte himself.

The rriij. Chapter.

A HE that is stiffnecked ⁊ will not be reformed, shal sodenly be destroyed with out eny helpe. <sup>a</sup> Where ⁊ rightuous haue the ouer hande, ⁊ people are in prosperite: but where the vngodly beareth rule, there ⁊ people mourne. Who so loueth wysdome, maketh his father a glad man: <sup>b</sup> but he ⁊ kepeth harlottes, spcedeth away ⁊ he hath. With true iudgment ⁊ kyngge setteth vp the londe, but yf he be a man ⁊ taketh giftes, he turneth it vpsyde downe. Who so flatreth his neighboure, layeth a nette for his fete. The synne of ⁊ wicked is his owne snare, but ⁊ righteous shal be glad and reioyse. The righteous considreth the cause of the poore, but the vngodly regardeth no vnderstandinge. Wicked people brynge a cite in decaye, but wyse men set it vp agayne. Yf a wyse man go to lawe with a foole (whether he deale with him frendly or roughly) he getteth no rest. The bloudesthyrstie hate the rightuous, but the iust seke his soule. A foole poureth out his sprete altogether, but a wyse man kepeth it in till afterwarde.

B Yf a pryncce delyte in lyes, all his seruauantes are vngodly. The poore and the lender mete together, the LORDE lighteneth both their eyes. <sup>c</sup> The seate of the kyngge ⁊ faithfully iudgeth the poore, shal continue sure for euermore. The rodde and correccion mynistris wysdome, but yf a childe be not loked vnto, be bryngeth his mother to shame. When the vngodly come vp, wickednesse increaseth: but the rightuous shall se their fall. Nurture thy sonne with correccion, and he shal comforte the, yee he shal do the good at thine hert. Where no prophet is, there the people perishe: but well is him that kepeth the lawe. A seruauit wil not be the better for wordes, for though he vnderstonde, yet will he not regarde them.

C Yf thou seyst a man that is haistie to speake vnaduysed, thou mayest trust a foole more then him. He that delicately bryngeth vp his seruauit from a childe, shal make him his master at length. An angrie man stereth vp strife, and he that beareth euell wyll in his mynde, doth moch euell. <sup>d</sup> After pryde cometh a fall, but a lowly sprete bryngeth greate worshippe. Who so kepeth company with a thefe, hateth his owne soule: he heareth blasphemies, ⁊ telleth it not forth.

He that feareth men, shal haue a fall: but

The rriij. Chapter.

THE prophecie of a true faithfull man, who God hath helped, whom God hath confortd ⁊ nourished. For though I am ⁊ leest of all, ⁊ haue no mas vnderstodige (for I neuer lerned wysdome) yet haue I vnderstodige ⁊ am well enfourmed in godly thinges. Who hath clymmed vp i to heauen? Who hath come downe from thence?

Who hath holden ⁊ wynde fast in his hāde? Who hath cōprehended ⁊ waters in a garment? Who hath set all the endes of ⁊ worlde? What is his name, or his sonnes name? Canst thou tell? <sup>a</sup> All the wordes of God are pure ⁊ cleane, for he is a shyld vnto all them, that put their trust in him. Put thou nothinge therefore vnto his wordes, lest he reprove the, and thou be founde a liar.

Two thinges I requyre of the, that thou wilt not denye me before I dye. Remove fro me vanite and lyes: geue me nether pouerte ner riches, only graunte me a necessary lyuyng. <sup>b</sup> Lest yf I be to full, I denye ⁊, ⁊ saye: what felowe is ⁊ LORDE? And lest I beinge constrained thorow pouerte, fall vnto stealinge, and forswear the name of my God.

Accuse not a seruauit vnto his master, lest he speake euell of the also, and thou be hurte. He that bryngeth vp an euell reporte vpō the generacion of his father and mother, is not worthy to be commended.

The generacion that thynke them selues cleane, shal not be clesned from their fylthynesse. There are people ⁊ haue a proude loke, and cast vp their eye lyddes. The peoples tethe are swerdes, and with their chaft bones they consume and deuoure the symple of the earth, and the poore from amonge mē.

This generacion (which is like an horsleche) hath two daughters: ⁊ one is called, fetch hither: the other, bryngie hither.

There be thre thinges that are neuer satisfied, and the fourth saith neuer hoo. <sup>c</sup> The hell, a womans wombe, and the earth hath neuer water ynough. As for fyre, it sayeth neuer: hoo. <sup>a</sup>Who so laugheth his father to scorne, and setteth his mothers commaundement at naught: the rauens pycke out his eyes in the valley, and deuoured be he of the yonge Aegles.

The waye of an Aegle in ſ ayre, ſ waye of a serpent ouer ſ stone, ſ waye of a shippe in ſ see, ſ ſ waye of a mā with a yonge womā. Soch is the waye also of a wyfe ſ breaketh wedlocke, which wypeth hir mouth like as whā she hath eatē, ſ sayeth: As for me, I haue done no harme. Thorow thre thinges the earth is disquieted, ſ the fourth maye it not beare: Thorow a seruauēt ſ beareth rule, thorow a foole ſ hath greate riches, thorow an ydle houswife, ſ thorow an handmayden ſ is heyre to hir mastres. There be foure thinges in the earth, the which are very litle: but in wysdome they excede the wyse. <sup>c</sup>The Eunettes are but a weake people, yet gather they their meate together in ſ haruest.

The conyes are but a feble folke, yet make they their couches amonge the rockes. The greshoppers haue not a gyde, yet go they forth together by heapes. The spyder laboureth with hir hādes, ſ ſ in ſ kynges palace.

There be thre thinges ſ go stiffly, but the goinge of the fourth is the goodliest of all. A Lyon which is kyng of beastes, ſ geueth place to no man: A cock ready to fight: A rāne: And a kyng ſ goeth forth with his people.

Yf thou be so foolish to magnifie thy self, or medlest with eny soch thinge, thē laye thine hāde vpon thy mouth. Who so chyrneth mylck, maketh butter: he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede, and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife.

The xxxi. Chapter.

<sup>a</sup>THESE are the wordes of Kyng Lamuel. ſ ſ lesson ſ his mother taught him. My sonne, thou sonne of my body: O my deare beloued sonne, geue not ouer thy substaunce ſ mynde vnto women, which are the destrucciō euē of kynges. O Lamuel, geue kynges no wyne, geue kynges ſ pryces no stronge drynke: lest they beinge dronken forget the lawe, ſ regarde not ſ cause of the

poore, ſ of all soch as be in aduersite. Geue stronge drynke vnto soch as are condemned to death, ſ wyne vnto those ſ mourne: that they maye drynke it, ſ forget their misery ſ aduersite. Be thou an aduocate ſ stonde in iudgment thyself, to speake for all soch as be dōme ſ succoures. With thy mouth defende ſ thinge ſ is lauffull and right, and ſ cause of ſ poore and helplesse.

Who so fyndeth an honest faithful womā, she is moche more worth thē perles. The herte of hir husbāde maye safely trust in her, so that he shal haue no nede of spoyle.

She wil do him good ſ not euel all ſ dayes of hir life. She occupieth woll ſ flax, ſ laboureth gladly with hir handes. She is like a marchauntes shippe, that bryngeth hir vytayles from farre. She is vp in ſ night season, to prouyde meate for hir housholde, ſ foode for hir maydens. She considreth lōde, ſ byeth it, and with the frute of hir handes she planteth a vynyarde. She gyrdeh hir loynes with strength, and courageth hir armes. And yf she perceaue that hir houswifrie doth good, hir candle goeth not out by night. She layeth hir fyngers to the spyndle, ſ hir hande taketh holde of ſ rocke.

She openeth hir hande to ſ poore, yee she stretcheth forth hir hādes to soch as haue nede. She feareth not ſ the colde of wynter shal hurte hir house, for all hir housholde folkes are duple clothed. She maketh hir self fayre ornamētes, hir clothēge is whyte sylke ſ purple. Hir huszbāde is moche set by in ſ gates, whē he sytteth amonge ſ rulers of ſ londe. She maketh cloth of sylke ſ selleth it, and deluyeth a gyrdle vnto ſ marchaūt.

Strēghth and honoure is hir clothinge, ſ in the latter daye she shal reioyse. She openeth hir mouth with wysdome, ſ in hir tōge is the lawe of grace. She loketh wel to the wayes of hir housholde, ſ eateth not hir bred with ydilnes. Hir children arise ſ call hir blessed, ſ hir huszbande maketh moche of her. Many daughters there be ſ gather riches together, but thou goest about thē all. As for fauoure, it is disceatfull, and beutie is a vayne thinge: but a woman that feareth the LORDE, she is worthy to be prayسد. Geue her of the frute of hir handes, and let hir owne workes prayse her in the gates.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

All thinges (yf a mā wyl cōsidre them wel) are but vanite. Neuertheles amōge them all there is nothige weaker and more vnstedfast, then man him self.

Chap. II.

In this chapter (and in the other also) he maketh oft tymes mēšion of the wordes and cōuersaciō of the vngodly: that by this meanes he maye the better cause men to despyse all creatures, in respecte of the only euerlastinge God.

Chap. III.

Every thinge hath a tyme. There is no thige, but God hath put tedyousnesse and trauayle in it, to exercise men withall. What so euer a man enioyeth of his laboure, the same is a gift of God, geuen to the intent that men shulde feare him.

Chap. IIII.

A cōsideracion of diuerse thinges. There is nothinge so excellent and hye, but yf it do not the deuty and office where vnto it is ordered, it shalbe brought lowe.

Chap. V.

Agaynst foolish and temerarious vowes. Let no man maruayle that so moch euell is done, for the wicked are many. Agaynst the riche and agaynst riches.

Chap. VI.

Agaynst those riche mē that darre not enioye their riches: how mad and foolish they be.

Chap. VII.

No man knoweth what is for to come. How worthy a thige it is to haue a good name. The profit of wysdome.

Chap. VIII.

Of the obediēce which men owe vnto God and to their heades. The lōge sufferance of God is not to be despised. It is not possible for eny mā, to cōprehende the workes that be in the worlde.

Chap. IX.

Like thinges happen vnto all men: therfore with myrth and thankfulnessse shulde men enioye the giftes of God. Wysdome passeth all thinges.

Chap. X. XI.

In these two chapters are many wyse and profitable sentences, wel worthy to be considered of enery man.

Chap. XII.

In this chapter the preacher sheweth his whole meanynge, as though he wolde saye: As for all the thinges that be vnder the Sonne (wher of I haue spoken) I haue cōsidered them, and proued them metely wel by experience. And this is the conclusion, that there is nothyng stedfast and durable but God himself, who men ought to feare, and to haue his cōmaundementes before their eyes euen from their youth vp.

The first Chapter.

These are the wordes of the Preacher, the sonne of Dauid, kyng of Ierusalem.

hath a mā, of all the laboure y<sup>e</sup> he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generaciō passeth awaye, another commeth, but the earth abyedeth still. The Sōne aryseth, the Sonne goeth downe, & returneth to his place, y<sup>e</sup> he maye there ryse vp agayne. The wynde goeth towarde ſouth, & fetcheth his cōpase aboute vnto the North, & so turneth in to himselfe agayne. <sup>a</sup>All floudes runne in to the see, & yet the see is not fylled: for loke vnto what place the waters runne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harde, ſo no mā can expresse them. <sup>b</sup>The eye is not satisfied with sight, the eare is not fylled with hearinge.

B The thinge ſo hath bene, cōmeth to passe agayne: & ſo thinge ſo hath bene done, is done agayne. There is no new thinge vnder the Sonne. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: lo, this is new? For it was lōge agoo in the tymes ſo haue bene before vs. The thinge ſo is past, is out of remēbraunce: Euē so be the thiges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vpon amōge thē that come after. I myself ſo Preacher, beyngē kynge of Israel & Ierusalē, applyed my mynde to seke out & search for the knowlege of all thiges ſo are done vnder heauē. Soch trauayle & labourē hath God geuē vnto ſo childrē of mē, to exerceyse thē selues therē.

C Thus I haue considered all the thinges that come to passe vnder the Sōne, & lo, they are all but vanite & vexacion of mynde. The croked can not be mayde straight, & the fautes cā not be nobred. I cōmoned with myne owne herte, sayēge: lo, I am come to a greate estate, & haue gottē more wyszdome, thē all they ſo haue bene before me in Ierusalem. Yee my hert had greate experiēce of wyszdome & knowlege, for there vnto I applyed my mynde: ſo I might knowe what were wyszdome & vnderstōdinge, what were erroure & foolishnes. And I perceaued ſo this also was but a vexacion of mynde: for where moche wyszdome is, there is also greate trauayle & disquietnes: & ſo more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

The ij. Chapter.

A THĒ sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so moche that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art madd, and to myrth: what doest thou?

So I thought in my herte, to withdrawe my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wyszdome, and to comprēhēde foolishnes, vntill the tyme that (amonge all ſo thinges which are vnder ſo Sonne) I might se what were best for men to do, so longe as they lyue vnder heauen.

<sup>d</sup>I made gorgious fayre workes, I buylded me houses, and planted vynyardes: I made me orchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. <sup>e</sup>I made poles of water, to water ſo grene and frutefull trees withall. I bought seruauntes and maydēs, and had a greate housholde. As for catell and shepe, I had more substance of them, then all they ſo were before me in Ierusalem. I gathered syluer & golde together, euen a treasure of kynges & londes.

I prouided me syngers and womē which coude playe of instrumentes, to make men myrth and pastime. I gat me drynkyngē cuppes also and glasses. (Shortly) I was greater & in more worshippe, then all my predecessours in Ierusalē. For wyszdome remayned with me: & loke what so euer myne eyes desyred, I let them haue it: & wherin so euer my herte delyted or had eny pleasure, I withhelde it not frō it. Thus my hert reioysed in all ſo I dyd, and this I toke for the porcion of all my trauayle. But whan I considered all the workes ſo my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken therein: lo, all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde, & nothinge of eny value vnder ſo Sonne. Then turned I me to considre wyszdome, erreure and foolishnesse (for what is he amonge men, that might be compared to me ſo kynge in soch workes?) and I sawe, that wyszdome excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse. For a wyse man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole goeth in the darknesse. I perceaued also that they both had one ende.

C Then thought I in my mynde: Yf it happen vnto the foole as it doth vnto me, what nedeth me then to labourē eny more for wyszdome? So I confessed within my herte, that this also was but vanite. For the wyse are euer as litle in remembraunce as the foolish, and all the dayes for to come shalbe forgotten, yee the wyse man dyeth as well as ſo foole. Thus begāne I to be weery of my life, in so moche that I coude awaye with nothinge that is done vnder the Sonne, for all was but vanite & vexacion of mynde: Yee I was weery of all my labourē, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, because I shulde be fayne to leaue them vnto another man, that cometh after me: for who knoweth, whether he shalbe a wyse mā or a foole? And yet shal he be lorde of all my labours, which I with soch wysdome haue taken vnder the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge?

So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all soch traunyle, as I toke vnder the Sonne: for so much as a man shulde weery him self with wysdome, with vnderstandinge and opportunitie, and yet be fayne to leaue his labours vnto another, y<sup>e</sup> neuer swett for them. This is also a vayne thinge and a greate misery. For what getteth a mā of all y<sup>e</sup> labour & traunyle of his mynde, y<sup>e</sup> he taketh vnder the Sonne, but heynesse, sorowe & disquietnes all y<sup>e</sup> dayes of his life? In so much that his herte can not rest in the night. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Is it not better then for a mā to eate and drynke, and his soule to be mery in his labour? Yee I sawe that this also was a gifte of God: "For who maye eate, drynke, or brynge eny thinge to passe without him? And why? he geueth vnto mā, what it pleaseth him: whether it be wysdome, vnderstandinge, or gladnesse. But vnto the synner he geueth weerynesse and sorow, that he maye gather and heape together y<sup>e</sup> thinge, y<sup>e</sup> afterwarde shalbe geuen vnto him whom it pleaseth God. This is now a vayne thinge, yee a very disquietnesse and vexaciō of mynde.

The iij. Chapter.

EVERY thinge hath a tyme, yee all that is vnder the heauen, hath is conuenient season. There is a tyme to be borne, and a tyme to dye. <sup>b</sup> There is a tyme to plāte, and a tyme to plucke vp the thinge, y<sup>e</sup> is planted: A tyme to slaye, and a tyme to make whole: A tyme to breake downe, and a tyme to buylde vp: A tyme to wepe, and a tyme to laugh: A tyme to mourne, and a tyme to daunce: A tyme to cast away stones, and a tyme to gather stones together: A tyme to embrace, & a tyme to refrayne from embracing: A tyme to wyne, and a tyme to lese: A tyme to spare, and a tyme to spende: A tyme to cutt in peces, and a tyme to sowe together: <sup>c</sup> A tyme to kepe sylce, and a tyme to speake: A tyme to loue, & a tyme to hate: A tyme of warre, and a tyme of peace.

What hath a mā els (that doth eny thinge) but weerynesse and labour? For as touching the traunyle and carefulnesse which God hath geuen vnto mē, I se that he hath geuen it them, to be exercised in it. All this hath he ordered maruelous goodly, to eury thinge his due tyme. He hath plāted ignorance also in the hertes of men, y<sup>e</sup> they shulde not fynde out y<sup>e</sup> grounde of his workes, which he doth from y<sup>e</sup> beginninge to y<sup>e</sup> ende. So I perceaued, y<sup>e</sup> in these thinges there is nothinge better for a man, thē to be mery & to do well so longe as he lyueth. For all y<sup>e</sup> a man eateth & drynkeh, yee what so euer a mā enioyeth of all his labour, y<sup>e</sup> same is a gift of God. I considered also y<sup>e</sup> what so euer God doth, it cōtinueth for euer, & y<sup>e</sup> nothinge can be put vnto it ner takē from it: & y<sup>e</sup> God doth it to y<sup>e</sup> intent, y<sup>e</sup> men shulde feare him. "The thinge y<sup>e</sup> hath bene, is now: & the thinge y<sup>e</sup> is for to come, hath bene afore tyme, for God restoreth agayne the thinge that was past. Morouer, I sawe vnder y<sup>e</sup> Sonne, rugodlynesse in the steade of iudgment, & iniquite in steade of rightuousnesse.

Then thought I in my mynde: God shal separate the rightuous from the vngodly, & then shal be the tyme & iudgmēt of all counceils & workes. I cōmoned with myne owne herte also cōcernynge the childrē of men: how God hath chosen them, and yet letteth thē apeare, as though they were beastes: for it happeneth vnto men as it doth vnto beastes, & as the one dyeth, so dyeth y<sup>e</sup> other: yee they haue both one maner of breth, so y<sup>e</sup> (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beest, but all are subdued vnto vanite. They go all vnto one place, for as they be all of dust, so shal they all turne vnto dust againe.

"Who knoweth the sprete of man y<sup>e</sup> goeth vpwarde, and the breth of the beest y<sup>e</sup> goeth downe in to the earth? Wherefore I perceaued, y<sup>e</sup> there is nothinge better for a man, then to be ioyfull in his labour, for that is his porcion. But who wil brynge him to se the thinge, that shal come after him?"

The iiii. Chapter.

SO I turned me, and considered all the violent wronge that is done vnder the Sonne: and beholde, the teares of such as were oppressed, and there was no man to comforte them, or that wolde delyuer and defende them from the violence of their oppressours. Wherefore I iudged those that are deed, to be more happie then such as be alyue: yee him that is yet vnborne to be better at ease thē they both, because he seith not the miserable workes that are done vnder the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all trauayle and diligence of labour was hated of euery man. This is also a vaine thinge, and a vexacion of mynde. The foole foldeth his handes together, & eateth vp his owne flesh. One handfull (saith he) is better with rest, thē both y<sup>e</sup> handes full with labour and trauayle. B Morouer, I turned me, and beholde yet another vanite vnder the Sonne. There is one man, no mo but himself alone, hauynge nether childe ner brother: yet is there no ende of his careful trauayle, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, & saye:) For whom do I take soch trauayle? For whose pleasure do I thus consume away my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therefore two are better then one, for they may well enioye the profit of their labour. Yf one of them fall, his companyon helpeth him vp againe: But wo is him that is alone, for yf he fall, he hath not another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be ouercome, but two maye make resistance: A threefolde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beyng wyse, is better then an olde kinge, that doteth, and can not bewarre in tyme to come. "Some one commeth out of prison, & is made a kynge: & another which is borne in the kyngdome, commeth vnto pouerte. And I perceaued, y<sup>e</sup> all men lyuynge vnder the Sonne, go with the seconde childe, that commeth vp in the steade of the other. As for the people that haue bene before him, and that come after him, they are innumerable: yet is not their ioye the greater thorow him. This is also a vayne thinge and a vexacion of mynde. When thou comest in to the house of God, kepe thy fote, and drawe nye, that thou mayest heare: <sup>4</sup>that is better then the offeringes of fooles, for they knowe not what euell they do.

The v. Chapter.

BE not hastie with thy mouth, & let not thine hert speake eny thinge rashly before God. For God is in heauen, & thou vpon earth, therefore let thy wordes be fewe. For where moch carefulnesse is, there are many dreames: & where many wordes are, there men maye heare fooles. Yf thou make a vowe vnto God, be not slacke to performe it. As for foolish vowes, he hath no pleasure in them. Yf thou promyse eny thinge, paye it: for better it is that thou make no vowe, then that thou shuldest promise, and not paye. Vse not thy mouth to cause thy flesh for to synne, y<sup>e</sup> thou saye not before the angell: my foolishnesse is in y<sup>e</sup> faute.

And why? where as are many dreames & many wordes, there are also dyuerse vanities: "but loke y<sup>e</sup> thou feare God. Yf thou seyst the poore to be oppressed and wrongeously dealt withall, so y<sup>e</sup> equite & the right of the lawe is wraisted in the londe: maruell not thou at soch iudgmēt, for one greate mā kepeth touch with another, and the mightie helpe thē selues together. The whole londe also with the feldes and all that is therein, is in subieccion and bondage vnto y<sup>e</sup> kinge.

He that loueth money, wil neuer be satisfied with money: and who so delyteth in riches, shal haue no profit therof. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Where as many riches are, there are many also that spende them awaye. And what pleasure mory hath he that possesseth them, sauynge that he maye loke vpon them with his eyes? A labouringe man slepeth swetely, whether it be litle or moch that he eateth: but the abundaunce of the riche wil not suffre him to slepe.

Yet is there a sore plage, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne (namely) riches kepte to the hurte of him y<sup>e</sup> hath them in possession.

helpeth it him then, y he hath labored in the wynde? All the daies of his life also must he eate in the darcke, with greate carefulnesse, sicknesse & sorow.

“Therefore me thinke it a better and a fayrer thinge, a man to eate and drynke, and to be refreshed of all his labour, y he taketh vnder the Sonne all the dayes of his life which God geueth him, for this is his porcion. For vnto whom so euer God geueth riches, goodes and power, he geueth it him to enioye it, to take it for his porcion, and to be refreshed of his labour: this is now the gifte of God. For he thinketh not moch how longe he shal lyue, for so moch as God fylleth his hert with gladnesse.

The vi. Chapter.

THERE is yet a plage vnder y Sonne, & it is a generall thinge amonge mē: when God geueth a man riches, goodes & honour, so that he wanteth nothinge of all that his herte can desyre: and yet God geueth him not leue to enioye the same, but another man spēdeth them. This is a vayne thinge & a miserable plage. Yf a man begett an hundred children, and lyue many yeares, so that his dayes are many in nombre, and yet can not enioye his good, nether be buried: as for him I saye, that an vntymely byrth is better then he. For he cometh to naught, & goeth his waye in to darcknes, and his name is forgotten. Morouer, he seyth not the Sonne, and knoweth of no rest nether here ner there: Yee though he lyued two thousande yeares, yet hath he no good life. Come not all to one place? All the labour that a man taketh, is for himself, and yet his desyre is neuer fylled after his mynde. For what hath the wyse more then the foole? What helpeth it the poore, that he knoweth to walke before the luyng? The sight of the eyes is better, then that the soule shulde so departe awaye. Howbeit this is also a vayne thinge and a disquietnesse of mynde. What is more excellent then man? yet can he not in the lawe get the victory of him that is mightier thē he: A vayne thinge is it to cast out many wordes, but what hath a man els?

The vij. Chapter.

FOR who knoweth what is good for man luyng, in y dayes of his vayne life, which is but a shadowe? Or, who wil tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Sonne? <sup>a</sup>A good name is more worth then a precious oyntment, and the daye of death is better thē y daye of byrth.

It is better to go in to an house of mournynge, then in to a banquet house. For there is the ende of all men, and he that is luyng, taketh it to herte. It is better to be sory then to laugh, for whē the countenance is heuy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of y wyse is in the mournynge house, but the hert of the foolish is in the house of myrth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, <sup>c</sup>then to heare the songe of fooles. For the laughinge of fooles is like y crackynge of thornes vnder a pott. And y is but a vayne thinge.

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth a gentle hert. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnyng. The pacient of sprete is better then the hie mynded. Be not haistely angrie in thy mynde, for wrath resteth in the bosome of a foole. Saye not thou: What is the cause that y dayes of y olde tyme were better, then they y be now? for that were no wyse question. Wysdome is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wysdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowlege and wysdome geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Consider the worke of God, how that no man can make the thinge straight, which he maketh croked. Vse well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of mysfortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothinge els.

These ij. thiges also haue I cōsidered in y tyme of vanite: y the iust man perisheth for his rightuousnes sake, & the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therefore be thou nether to rightuous ner ouer wyse, <sup>d</sup>y thou perish not: be nether to vnrightuous also ner to foolish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, & not to let y go out of thy hande. For he y feareth God shal escape them all.

worde  $\hat{y}$  is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruuaunt curse the: for thine owne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spokē euell by other men. All these thinges haue
I proued because of wyszdome: "for I thought to be wyse, but she wente farther from me then she was before, yee  $\tau$  so depe that I might not reach vnto her. I applied my mynde also vnto knowlege, and to seke out sciēce, wisdomē and vnderstondinge: to knowe the foolishnesse of the vngodly, and the erreure of dotinge fooles. And I founde,<sup>d</sup> that a woman is bytterer then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir handes are cheynes.
Who so pleaseth God shal escape from her,
but the synner will be taken with her.

Beholde (sayeth  $\hat{y}$  preacher) this haue I diligently searched out  $\tau$  proued,  $\hat{y}$  I might come by knowlege: which as yet I seke, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousande men I haue founde one, but not one woman amonge
all. "Lo, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust  $\tau$  right, but they seke dyuerse sotylties, where as no man hath wyszdome  $\tau$ vnderstōdinge, to geue answeere there vnto.

The viij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME maketh a mā face to shyne,<sup>d</sup> but malice putteth it out of fauoure. Kepe the kynges commaundemēt
(I warne the)  $\tau$  the oath  $\hat{y}$  thou hast made vnto God. Be not haistie to go out of his sight,  $\tau$  se thou cōtynue in no euell thinge:
for what so euer it pleaseth him,  $\hat{y}$  doeth he.
Like as when a kyngē geueth a charge, his commaundement is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vnto him: what doest thou? "Who so kepeth the commaundement, shall fele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discerneth tyme and maner: For euery thinge wil haue opportunitie and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of carefulness  $\tau$ sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyl tell him? Nether is there eny mā  $\hat{y}$  hath power ouer  $\hat{y}$  sprete, to kepe stil  $\hat{y}$  sprete, ner to haue eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that can make an ende of the batayll, nether maye vngodlynes deluyuer him  $\hat{y}$  medleth withall.

B All these thinges haue I considered, and applied my mynde vnto euery worke that is vnder the Sonne: how one man hath lordshipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene  $\hat{y}$  vngodly<sup>d</sup> brought to their graues, and fallen downe from the hye and glorious place: in so moch  $\hat{y}$  they were forgotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye  $\tau$  greate reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistely punyshed, the hert of man geueth him self ouer vnto wickednesse: But though an euell personne offende an hundred tymes, and haue a longe life: yet am I sure, that it shal go well with thē that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. Agayne, as for the vngodly, it shall not be well with him, nether shal he prologe his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shall he be that feareth not God.

Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngodly:
Agayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth
as though they had the workes of  $\hat{y}$  rightuous.
This me thinke also a vaine thinge. Therefore I commende gladnesse, because a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his labour all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne.
When I applied my mynde to lerne wyszdome, and to knowe the traualle that is in the worlde (and that of such a fashion,  $\hat{y}$  I suffred not myne eyes to slepe nether daye ner night) I vnderstode of all  $\hat{y}$  workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto  $\hat{y}$  workes that are done vnder  $\hat{y}$  Sonne: and though he bestowe his labour to seke them out, yet can he not reach vnto thē: yee though a wyse man wolde vndertake to knowe them, yet might he not fynde them.

The ix. Chapter.

FOR all these thinges purposed I in my mynde to seke out. The righteys and wyse yee and their workes also are in the hande of God: and there is no man that knoweth ether the loue or hate of the thinge that he hath before him. It happeneth vnto one as vnto another: It goeth with the right-uous as with the vngodly:<sup>d</sup> with the good  $\tau$ cleane as with the vncleane: with him that offereth as with him that offereth not: like as it goeth with the vertuous, so goeth it also with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is afayed to be man sworne. Amonge all thinges  $\hat{y}$  come to passe vnder the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vnto all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse,  $\tau$  madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as longe as they lyue, vntill they dye.

B And why? As longe as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quyeck dogg (saye they) is better th $\bar{n}$  a deed lion: for they that be lyuynge, knowe  $\hat{y}$  they shall dye: but they  $\hat{y}$  be deed, knowe nothinge, nether deserue they eny more. For their memoriall is forgottē, so  $\hat{y}$  they be nether loued, hated ner envyed: nether haue they eny more parte in  $\hat{y}$  worlde, in all  $\hat{y}$  is done vnder the Sonne. Go thou thy waye then, eate thy bred with ioye,  $\tau$  drynke thy wyne with gladnesse, for thy workes please God. Let thy garnētes be all waye whyte,<sup>a</sup>  $\tau$  let thy heade want no oyntmēt.<sup>b</sup> Use thy self to lyue ioyfully with thy wife whom thou louest, all  $\hat{y}$  daies of thy life (which is but vayne)  $\hat{y}$  God hath geuē the vnder the Sonne, all  $\hat{y}$  dayes of thy vanite: for  $\hat{y}$  is thy porcion in this life, of all thy labour  $\tau$  trauayle  $\hat{y}$  thou takest vnder the Sonne. What so euer thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for amōge the deed (where as thou goest vnto) there is nether worke, counsell, knowlege ner wysdome.

So I turned me vnto other thinges vnder  $\hat{y}$  Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swift: in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge: to fedyng, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sutyll: to be had in fauoure, it helpeth not to be conynge: but that all lyeth in tyme  $\tau$  fortune. For a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fyshe are takē with the angle, and as the byrdes are catched with the snare: Euē so are men taken in the perilous tyme, when it commeth sodenly vpon them.

D This wysdome haue I sene also vnder  $\hat{y}$  Sōne,  $\tau$  me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite,  $\tau$  a few mē within it: so there came a greate kynge  $\tau$  beseged it,  $\tau$  made greate bulworkes agaynst it. And in the cite there was founde a poore man (but he was wyse) which with his wysdome deliuered the cite: yet was there no body,  $\hat{y}$  had eny respecte vnto soch a symple man. Then sayde I: wysdome is better then strength. Neuertheles, a symple mans wysdome is despyed,  $\tau$  his wordes are not herde. A wise mans counsell that is folowed in sylence, is farre above the crienge of a captaine amōge fooles. For wysdome is better then harness: but one vthrifft alone destroyeth moch good.

The i. Chapter.

DEED flies  $\hat{y}$  corruppe swete oyntment  $\tau$  A make it to styncke, are somthinge more worth then the wysdome  $\tau$  honoure of a foole. A wise mans hert is vpon the right hande, but a fooles hert is vpon the left. A dotinge foole thinketh,  $\hat{y}$  euery mā doth as foolishly as himself. Yf a principall sprete be geuē the to beare rule, be not negligēt thē in thine office: for so shal greate wickednesse be put downe, as it were with a medecyne. Another place is there, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne: namely,  $\hat{y}$  ignoraunce  $\hat{y}$  is comonly amonge prynces: in  $\hat{y}$  a foole sytteth in greate dignite,  $\tau$  the rich are sett downe beneth: I se seruantes ryde vpon horses,  $\tau$  prynces goinge vpon their fete as it were seruantes. But he  $\hat{y}$  dyggeeth vp a pytt, shall fall therin himself:  $\tau$  who so breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shal bite him. Who so remoueth stones, shall haue trauayle withall: and he that heweth wod, shalbe hurt therwith.

When an yron is blont, and  $\hat{y}$  poynt not sharpened, it must be whett againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wysdome folowe diligence. A babbler of his tonge is no better, then a serpent that styngeth without hyssynge. The wordes out of a wyse mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnyng of his talkynge is foolishnes, and the last worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyl then warne him to make a conclusion? The labour of  $\hat{y}$  foolish is greuous vnto thē, while they knowe not how to go in to the cite.

Wo be vnto the (O thou realme and londe) C whose kynge is but a childe, and whose prynces are early at their banckettes. But well is the (O thou realme and londe) whose kinge is come of nobles, and whose prynces eate in due season, for strength and not for lust. Thorow slouthfulnesse the balkes fall downe, and thorow ydle hādes it rayneth in at the house. Meate maketh men to laugh,<sup>a</sup> and wyne maketh them mery: but vnto money are all thinges obedient. Wysh the kynge no euell in thy thought, and speake no hurte of ŷ ryche in thy preuy chambre: for a byrde of the ayre shal betraye thy voyce, and with hir fethers shal she bewraye thy wordes.

The xi. Chapter.

SENDE thy vytayles ouer the waters, and so shalt thou fynde thē after many yeares. Geue it awaye amonge seuen or eight, for thou knowest not what misery shal come vpon earth. Whē the cloudes are full, they poure out rayne vpon the earth. And whē ŷ tre falleth, (whether it be towarde the south or north) in what place so euer it fall, there it lyeth. He that regardeth ŷ wynde, shal not sowe: and he that hath respecte vnto the cloudes, shal not reape. Now like as thou knowest not the waye of the wynde, ner how ŷ bones are fylled in a mothers wombe: Euen so thou knowest not the workes of God, which is the workemaster of all.

Cease not thou therfore with thy handes to sowe thy sede, whether it be in ŷ mornynge or in the euenynge: for thou knowest not whether this or that shall prospere, ¶ yf they both take, it is the better. The light is swete, ¶ a pleasaunt thinge is it for the eyes to loke vpon the Sonne. Yf a man lyue many yeares, and be glad in them all, let him remembre the dayes of darcknesse, which shal be many: ¶ when they come, all thinges shal be but vanite. Be glad then (O thou yonge man) in thy youth, and lat thine hert be mery in thy yonge dayes: folowe the wayes of thine owne hert, and the lust of thine eyes: but be thou sure, that God shal bringe the in to iudgment for all these thinges.

The xij. Chapter.

PUT awaye displeasure out of thy hert, ¶ remoue euell from thy body: for childe-

hode and youth is but vanite. Remembre thy maker in thy youth, or euer the dayes of aduersite come, and or the yeares drawe nye, when thou shalt saye: I haue no pleasure in them: before the Sonne, ŷ light, ŷ Moone and the starres be darkened, and or the cloudes turne agayne after the rayne: when the keepers of the house shal tremble, and when the stronge men shal bowe them selues: when the Myllers stonde still because they be so fewe, and when the sight of the wyndowes shal waxe dymme: when the dores in the stretes shal be shutt, and whan ŷ voyce of the Myller shal be layed downe: whan men shall ryse vp at the voyce of the byrde, and whan all ŷ daughters of musyck shalbe brought lowe: whan men shal feare in hie places, and be afayed in the stretes: whan the Almonde tre shalbe despyed, the greshopper borne out, and whan greate pouerte shall breake in: when man goeth to his longe home, and the mourners go aboute the stretes. Or euer the syluer lace be taken awaye, and or the golden bende be broken: Or the pott be broken at the well, ¶ the whele vpon the Cisterne: Or <sup>d</sup> dust be turned againe vnto earth from whence it came, and or the sprete returne vnto God, which gaue it. <sup>e</sup> All is but vanite (sayeth the preacher) all is but playne vanite.

The same preacher was not wyse alone, but taught the people knowlege also: he gaue good hede, sought out the grounde and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of trueth. <sup>d</sup> For the wordes of ŷ wyse are like prickes and nales that go thorow, wherewith men are kepte together: for they are geuen of one shepherde onely. Therfore bewarre (my sonne) that aboute these thou make the not many ¶ innumerable bokes, nor take dyuerse doctrynes in hande, to weery thy body withall.

Lat vs heare the conclusion of all thinges: Feare God, and kepe his comaundementes, for that toucheth all men: For God shall iudge all workes and secrete thinges, whether they be good or euell.

The first Chapter.

A O THAT thy mouth wolde geue me a kysse, for thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, & that because of the good and pleasaunt sauoure. "Thy name is a swete smellynge oyntment, therfore do the maydens loue the: yee that same moueth me also to renne after the.

The kyng hath brought me in to his preuy chambre. We wil be glad & reioyce in the, we thynte more of thy brestes then of wyne: well is them that loue the.

B I am black (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes,<sup>a</sup> and as the hangings of Salomon: but yet am I faire & wellfaoured withal. Maruell not at me & I am so black, & why? & Sonne hath shyned vpō me. For whan my mothers childrē had euell wil at me, they made me & keper of the vynyarde. Thus was I fayne to kepe a vynyarde, which was not myne owne.

Tell me (o thou whom my soule loueth) where thou fdest, where thou restest at the noone daye: lest I go wronge, and come vnto the flockes of thy companions.

Yf thou knowe not thy self (o thou fayrest amōge women) thā go thy waye forth after & fotesteppes of the shepe, as though thou woldest fede thy goates besyde & shepherdes tentes. There wil I tary for the (my loue) with myne hoost & with my charettes, which shal be no fewer then Pharaos.<sup>c</sup>

C Then shal thy chekes & thy neck be made fayre, & hanged with spāges & goodly iewels: a neck bande of golde wil we make & with syluer bottons. When the kyng sytteth at the table, he shal smell my Nardus: for a bōdell of Myrre (o my beloued) lyeth betwixte my brestes. A cluster of grapes of Cypers, or of the vynyardes of Engaddi, art thou vnto me, O my beloued.

"O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes. O how fayre art thou (my beloued) how well faoured art thou? Oure bed is decte with floures, & sylinges of oure house are of Cedre tre, & oure balkes of Cypresse.

The ij. Chapter.

I AM the floure of the felde, and lylie of the valleys: as the rose amonge the thornes, so is my loue amonge the daughters. A

Like as the aple tre amonge the trees of the wodd, so is my beloued amonge the sonnes. My delite is to sitt vnder his shadowe, for his frute is swete vnto my throte. He bryngeth me in to his wyne seller, and loueth me specially well. Refresh me with grapes, cōforte me with apples, for I am sick of loue. His left hāde lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) B by the Roes & hyndes of the felde, & ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

Me thynke I heare the voyce of my beloued: lo, there commeth he hoppinge vpon & mountaynes, and leapinge ouer the litle hilles. My beloued is like a Roo or a yonge hart. Beholde, he stouedeth behynde oure wall, he loketh in at the wyndowe, & pepeth thorow the grate.

The floures are come vp in the felde, the twystringe tyme is come, the voyce of the turtle doue is herde in oure londe. The fyge tre bryngeth forth hir fyges, the vynes beare blossoms, and haue a good smell.

C O stōde vp my loue, my beutyfull, and come (my doue) out of the caues of the rockes, out of the holes of the wyall: O let me se thy countenance and heare thy voyce, for swete is thy voyce and fayre is thy face. ### The iij. Chapter.

A BY night in my bedd, I sought him, whom my soule loueth: yee diligently sought I him, but I founde him not. I wil get vp (thought I) and go aboute the cite: vpon the market and in all fy stretes will I seke him whom my soule loueth, but when I sought him, I founde him not. The watchmen that go aboute fy cite, founde me. Sawe ye not him, whom my soule loueth?

So when I was a litle past them, I fōude him whom my soule loueth. I haue gotten holde vpon him, and wyl not let him go. vntill I brynge him in to my mothers house, and in to hir chambre that bare me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) by the Roes and hyndes of the felde, that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

B Who is this, that commeth out of fy wyl-dernesse like pilers of smoke, as it were a smell of Myrre, frankencense and all maner spyes of the Apotecary?

Beholde, aboute Salomōs bedsteade there stonde LX. valeaunt men of the mightie in Israel. They holde swerdes euery one, & are experte in warre. Euery man hath his swerde vpō his thee, because of feare in the night.

Kynge Salomon hath made himself a bed-steade of the wodd of Libanus, the pilers are of syluer, the coueringe of golde, fy seate of purple, fy grounde pleasantly paved for the daughters of Ierusalem.

Go forth (o ye daughters of Sion) and beholde kynge Salomon in the crowne, wherwith his mother crowned him in the daye of his mariage, and in the daye of the gladnesse of his hert.

The iij. Chapter.

O HOW fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes besyde that which lyeth hid within. Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of shepe that be clypped, which go first vp from the washinge place: where euery one beareth two twyns, and not one vnfrutefull amōge them. Thy lippes are like a rose coloured rybende, thy wordes are louely: thy chekes are like a peece of a pomgranate, besydes that which lyed hyd within. Thy neck is like the tower of Dauid buylded with bulworkes, wher vpon there hāge a thousande sheldes, yee all the weapēs of the gĩautes. Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes, which fede amōge the lilies. O that I might go to the mountayne of Myrre, and to the hyll of frankynsense: till the daye breake, and till the shadowes be past awaye. Thou art all fayre (o my loue) & no spott is there in the.

Come to me from Libanus (o my spouse) come to me from Libanus: come soone the next waye from the toppes of Amana, from the toppes of Sanir and Hermon, from the Lyons dennes and from the mountaynes of fy leopardes. Thou hast wōded my hert (o my sister, my spouse) thou hast wounded my hert, with one of thine eyes, and with one cheyne of thy neck. O how fayre and louely are thy brestes, my sister, my spouse? Thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, and the smell of thy oyntmentes passeth all spices. Thy lippes (o my spouse) droppe as the hony combe, yee mylck and hony is vnder thy tonge, and the smell of thy garments is like the smell of frankynsense.

Thou art a well kepte garden (o my sister, my spouse) thou art a well kepte water springe, a sealed well. The frutes that sproute in the, are like a very paradise of pōgranates with swete frutes: as Cypresse, Nardus, Saffron,

The b. Chapter.

A COME in to my garden o my sister, my spouse: I haue gathered my Myrre with my spye, I wil eate my hony and my hony cōbe, I wil drynke my wyne & my mylk. Eate (o ye frendes) drynke and be mery, o ye beloued.

As I was a slepe, & my hert wakyng, I herde the voyce of my beloued, whā he knocked. Open to me (sayde he) o my sister, my loue, my doue, my derlinge: for my heade is full of dew, and y lockes of my hayre are full of the night droppes.

B I haue put off my cote, how cā I do it on agayne? I haue washed my fete, how shal I fyle them agayne? But whan my loue put in his hande at the hole, my hert was moued towarde him: so that I stode vp to open vnto my beloued. My hādes dropped with Myrre, & the Myrre ranne downe my fyngers vpon y lock. Neuerthelesse whā I had opened vnto my beloued, he was departed, and gone his waye.

C Now like as afore tyme whan he spake, my hert coude no longer refrayne: Euen so now I sought hī, but I coude not fynde him: I cried vpon him, neuerthelesse he gaue me no answere. So the watchmen that wente aboute the cite, foude me, smote me, and wounded me: Yee they that kepte the walles, toke awaye my garmēt fro me. I charge you therfore (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) yf ye fynde my beloued, that ye tell him, how that I am sick for loue.

Who is thy loue aboute other louers, O thou fayrest amonge wemen? Or, what can thy loue do, more then other louers, that thou chargest vs so straitly?

As for my loue, he is whyte and reade coloured, a synguler personne amonge many thousandes: his heade is the most fyne golde, the lockes of his hayre are busshed, browne as the euenynge: His eyes are as the eyes of doues by the water brokes, washen with mylck, and remaynyng in a plenteous place: His chekes are like a garden bedd, where in the Apotecaries plāte all maner of swete thinges: His lippes droppe as the floures of the most princypall Myrre, his hādes are full of golde rynges and precious stones. His body is as the pure yuery, dete ouer with Saphyres: His legges are as the pilers of Marbell, sett vpon sokettes of golde: His face is as Libanus, and as the bewty of the Cedre trees: His throte is swete, yee he is altogetheer louely. Soch one is my loue (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) soch one is my loue.

Whither is thy loue gone thē (o thou fayrest amonge wemē) whither is thy loue departed, that we maye seke him with the?

The vi. Chapter.

MY loue is gone downe in to his garden, vnto y swete smellinge beddes, that he maye refresh himself in the garden, and gather floures. My loue is myne, and I am his, which fedeth amonge the lilies.

Thou art pleasaunt (o my loue) euen as louelynesse itself, thou art fayre as Ierusalem, glorious as an armye of men with their bāners. (Turne awaye thine eyes fro me, for they make me to proude.) Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of goates vpon y mount of Galaad. Thy teth are like a flock of shepe y be clypped, which go out of the washinge place: where euery one beareth two twyns, & not one vfrutefull amōge them. Thy chekes are like a peece of a pomgranate, besydes y which lyeth hid within. There are thre score quenes, foure score concubynes, and yonge wemē without nombre. But one is my doue, my derlyng. She is the only beloued of hir mother, & deare vnto her that bare her. Whā the daughters sawe her, they sayde she was blessed: Yee the quenes and concubines prayed her. What is she this, that pepeth out as the mornynge? fayre as the Moone, excellent as the Sonne, glorious as an armye of men with their bāners?

I wente downe in to the nutt garden, to se what grew by the brokes, to loke yf the vynyarde florished, and yf the pomgranates were shot forth. Then the charettes of the prynee of my people made me sodenly afraied. Turne again, turne againe (O thou Sulamite) turne agayne, turne agayne, that we maye loke vpon the.

The viij. Chapter.

WHAT pleasure haue ye more in y<sup>e</sup> Sulamite, than when she daunseth amonge the men of warre? O how pleasaunt are thy treadinges with thy shues, thou prynces daughter? Thy thees are like a fayre iewell, which is wrought by a connyng workmaster: Thy nauell is like a rounde goblett, which is neuer without drynke: Thy wombe is like an heape of wheate, sett aboute with lilies: Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes: Thy neck is as it were a tower of yuery: Thyne eyes are like y<sup>e</sup> water poles in Hesebon, besyde the porte of Bathrabbim: Thy nose is like the tower of Libanus, which loketh toward Damascus: That heade that stondesth vpon the is like Carmel: The hayre of thy heade is like the kynges purple folden vp in plates.

O how fayre and louely art thou (my derlyng) in pleasures? Thy stature is like a date tre, and thy brestes like the grapes. I sayde: I wil clymme vp in to the date tre, and take holde of his braunches. Thy brestes also shalbe as the vyne grapes, the smell of thy nostrels like the smell of apples, and thy throte like the best wyne.

This shalbe pure & cleare for my loue, his lippes and teth shal haue their pleasure. There wil I turne me vnto my loue, and he shal turne him vnto me. O come on my loue, let vs go forth in to the felde, and take oure lodginge in the vyllages. In the mornynge wil we ryse by tymes, and go se the vynyarde: yf it be spronge forth, yf the grapes be growne, & yf the pomgranates be shott out. There wil I geue the my brestes: There shal the Mandragoras geue their smell besyde oure dores: There (o my loue) haue I kepte vnto the all maner of frutes, both new and olde.

The viij. Chapter.

O THAT I might fynde the without & kysse y<sup>e</sup>, whom I loue as my brother which suckte my mothers brestes: & that thou woldest not be offended, yf I toke the and brought the in to my mothers house: that thou mightest teach me, and that I might geue the drynke of spiced wyne and of the swete sappe of my pomgranates. His lefte hande lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, tyll she be content herself. What is she this, that cometh vp from the wildernes, and leaneth vpon hir loue? I am the same that waked the vp amonge the aples trees, where thy mother beare y<sup>e</sup>, where thy mother brought the in to the worlde.

O set me as a seale vpō thine hert, and as a seale vpon thine arme: for loue is mightie as the death, & gelously as the hell. Hir coales are of fyre, and a very flamme of the LORDE: so y<sup>e</sup> many waters are not able to quench loue, nether maye y<sup>e</sup> streames drowne it. Yee yf a man wolde geue all the good of his house for loue, he shulde counte it nothinge.

When oure loue is tolde oure yonge sister, whose brestes are not yet growne, what shal we do vnto her? Yf she be a wall, we shal buyde a syluer bollworke there vpon: Yf she be a tower, we shal festen her with bordes of Cedre tre.

Yf I be a wall, & my brestes like towres, then am I as one that hath founde fauoure in his sight.

Salomon had a vynyarde at Baal Hamon, this vynyarde deluyered he vnto the keepers: y<sup>e</sup> euery one for the frute therof shulde geue him a thousande peces of syluer. But my vynyarde (o Salomon) geueth the a thousande, and two hundredth to y<sup>e</sup> keepers of the frute.

Thon that dwellest in the gardens, O let me heare thy voyce, that my companions maye herken to the same. O get the awaye (my loue) as a roo or a yonge hert vnto the swete smellinge mountaynes.

THIS is the prophecy of Esay the sonne of Amos, which he shewed vpon Iuda and Jerusalem: In the tyme of Osias, Ioathan, Ahas, and Ezechias kynges of Iuda.

The first Chapter.

HEARE o heauen, hearken o earth,<sup>a</sup> for the LORDE speaketh: I haue no-rished ⁊ brought vp children, and they are fallen away fro me. An ox knoweth his lorde, and an Asse which his masters stall, but Israel knoweth nothinge, my people hath no vnderstandinge. Alas for this synful people, which are experte in blasphemies, a frawerde generacion, vnnatural children. <sup>b</sup>They haue forsaken the LORDE, they haue prouoked the holy one of Israel vnto anger, and are gone backward. Wherefore shulde ye be plagued eny more? For ye are euer fallinge awaye.
 The whole heade is sick, and the herte is very heuy. <sup>c</sup>From the sole of the foote vnto
 the heade, there is no whole parte in all youre body: but all are woundes, botches, sores and strypes, which can nether be helped, bounde vp, molified, ner eased with eny oyntment.

 brent vp, youre enemies denoure youre londe, and ye must be fayne to stonde, and loke vpon it: and it is desolate, as it were with enemies in a batell. Morouer <sup>e</sup>ye daughter of Syon is left alone like a cotage in a vnyearde, like a watchouse in tyme of warre, like a besieged citie. And excepte the LORDE of
 haue bene as Sodoma, ⁊ like vnto Gomorra.

 rautes of Sodoma: and herken vnto the lawe of oure God, thou people of Gomorra.
 Why offere ye so many sacrifices vnto me?
 I am discontent for the brentoffringes of wethers, and with <sup>h</sup>fatnesse of fedbeastes. I haue no pleasure in the bloude of bullockes, lambes and gootes. When ye apere before me, who requyreth you to treade within my porches? Offre me no mo oblations, for it is but lost labour. <sup>i</sup>I abhorre youre incense.

I maye not awaye with youre newmoones, youre Sabbathes and solempne dayes. <sup>a</sup>Youre fastinges are also in vayne. I hate youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen for my very harte. They make me weery, I can not abyde them. Though ye holde out youre hondes, <sup>b</sup>yet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of bloude.

C Wash you, make you cleane, <sup>c</sup>put awaye youre euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, deliuer the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complainye come before you. Now go to (saith the LORDE) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though youre synnes be as read as scarlet, shal they not be whyter then snowe? And though they were like purple, shall they not be like whyte woll? Is it not so? Yf ye be louynge <sup>d</sup> obedient, ye shal enioye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. <sup>e</sup>But yf ye be obstinate and rebellious, ye shalbe deuoured with the swerde: for thus the LORDE hath promised with his owne mouth.

How happeneth it then that the righteous cite (which was full of equite) is become vnfaithfull as an whore? righteousness dwelt in it, but now murthur. <sup>f</sup>Thy Siluer is turned to drosse, and thy wyne myxte with water. Thy prynces are traytours and companions of theues. <sup>g</sup>They loue giftes altogether, and folowe rewardes. As for the fatherles, they helpe him not to his right, nether wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. D Therefore speaketh the LORDE God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Al I must ease me of myne enemies, and a venge me vpon the. And therefore shal I laye my honde vpon the, and burne out thy drosse from the fynest and purest, and put out all thy leade, <sup>h</sup>and set thy iudges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senatours as they were from <sup>i</sup> begynnynge. <sup>j</sup>Then shalt thou be called the righteous cite, the faithful cite. But Sion shalbe redeemed with equyte, and hyr captiuyte with righteousness. For the transgressours and vngodly, and such as are become vnfaithfull vnto the

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oketrees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardes that ye haue chosen: ye shalbe as an oke whose leaues are fallen awaye, <sup>k</sup>and as a garden that hath no moystnesse. And as for the glory of these thinges, it shalbe turned to drie strawe, <sup>l</sup>and he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

The ij. Chapter.

MOROUER this is the worde that was A opened vnto Esaye the sonne of Amos, vpon Iuda and Ierusalem. It wil be also in processe of tyme: <sup>m</sup>That the hill where the house of the LORDE is buylded, shalbe <sup>n</sup> chefte amonge hilles, and exalted aboue al litle hilles. <sup>o</sup>And al heithē shal prease vnto him and the multitude of people shal go vnto him, speakinge thus one to another: <sup>p</sup>vp, let us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of <sup>q</sup> God of Iacob: <sup>r</sup>he maye shewe us his waye, <sup>s</sup>and <sup>t</sup>he maye walke in his pathes. For <sup>u</sup>he lawe shal come out of Syon, and the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swerdes and speares, to make sythes, cycles <sup>v</sup>and sawes therof.

<sup>w</sup>From that tyme forth shal not one people lift vp wapen agaynst another, nether shal they lerne to fight from thensforth. It is to the that I erie (o house of Iacob) vp, let us walke in the light of the LORDE. But thou art scatred abrode with thy people (o house of Iacob) for ye go farre beyonde youre fathers, whether it be in Sorcerers (whom ye haue as the phylistynes had) or in calkers of mens byrthes, wherof ye haue to many. <sup>x</sup>As soone as youre londe was ful of syluer and golde, and no ende of youre treasure: so soone as youre londe was ful of stronge horses and no ende of youre charettes: <sup>y</sup>Immediately was it ful of Idols also, euen workes of youre owne hondes, which ye youre selues haue facioned, and youre fingers haue made. And therefore get ŷ soone in to some rock, <sup>a</sup>and hyde the in the grounde from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from ŷ glory of his Magestie. Which casteth downe ŷ high lokes of presumptuous personnes, <sup>a</sup>and bryngeth lowe the pryde of mā, and he only shall be exalted in ŷ daye. For the daye of ŷ LORDE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde ⁊ presumpciō, vpon all thē that exalte thē selues, and shal bringe them all downe: vpō all high ⁊ stoute Cedre trees of Libanus, and vpon all the okes of Basan, vpon all high hilles, and vpon all stoute mountaynes, vpon all costly towres, and vpon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon euery thinge ŷ is glorious and pleasaunt to lōke vpon.

And it shall bringe downe the pryde of man, <sup>a</sup>and laye mans presumptuousnesse full lowe, and the LORDE shal only haue the victory in that daye. But the Idols shal utterly be roted out. Men shal crepe in to holes of stone, <sup>a</sup>and in to caues of the earth, from the sight of the fearfull iudge, and from the glory of his magesty: <sup>a</sup>what tyme as he shal make him vp to shake the earth. Then, thē shal mā cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (which he neuertheles had made to honourē thē) vnto Molles and Backes: that he maye the better crepe in to the caues and rockes, and in to the cliffes of hard stones, from ŷ sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magesty.

The iij. Chapter.

EVERY man can eschue a persone moued in anger, for what doth he wysely? Euen so shal ŷ LORDE of hostes take awaye frō Ierusalē ⁊ Iuda, all possessiōs ⁊ power, all meat and drinke, ŷ captayne and the soudyare, ŷ iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of fiftie yeare olde, and the honorable: the Senatours, and men of vnderstandinge: the masters of craftes and oratours. And I shal geue you children to be youre prynces (saith the LORDE) and babes shall haue the rule of you. <sup>a</sup>One shall euer be doinge violence and wronge to another. The boye shal presume agaynst the elder, and the vyle persone agaynst the honorable. Yee one shal take a frende of his owne kynred by ŷ bosome, and saye: thou hast clothinge, thou shalt be oure heade, for thou mayest kepe us from this fall and parell.

Then shall he sweare and saye: I can not helpe you. Morouer, there is nether meate ner clothinge in my house, make me no rueler of the people. For Ierusalem and Iuda must decaye, because that both their wordes and counceils are agaynst the LORDE, they prouoke the presence of his magesty vnto anger. The chaunginge of their countenance bewrayeth them, yee they declare their owne synnes thesē selues, as the Sodomites, ⁊ hyde thē not. Wo be vnto their soules, for they shalbe heuely rewarded. Then shal they saye: O happie are the godly, for they maye enioye the frutes of their studies. But wo be to ŷ vngodly and vnrightuous for they shalbe rewarded after their workes. O my people, rybaudes oppresse ŷ, and women haue rule of the.

O my people, thy leders deceane the, and <sup>a</sup>treade out the waye of thy footsteppes. The LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stondesth to geue iudgment with the people. The LORDE shal come forth to reason with the Senatours and prynces of his people, <sup>a</sup>and shal saye thus vnto them: It is ye that haue burnt vp my vnyearde, the robbery of the poore is in youre house. Wherefore do ye oppresse my people, and marre ŷ faces of the innocentes? thus shal the God of hostes reuyle them.

Morouer thus saith ŷ LORDE: Seinge the daughters of Sion are become so proude, and come in with stretched out neckes, and with wayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in trippinge so nycely with their fete: Therefore shal the LORDE shaue the heades of the daughters of Sion, and make their bewtie bare in that daye. In that daye shal the LORDE take awaye the gorgiousnes of their apparel, and spanges, cheynes, partlettes, and colares, bracelettes and houoes, ŷ goodly floured, wyde and broderd raymēt, brussches and headbandes, rynges and garlades, holy daye clothes and vales, kerchues and pynnes, glasses and smockes, bonettes and taches.

And in steade of good smell there shalbe styuck amoung them. And for their gyrdles there shalbe lowse bondes. And for welset hayre there shalbe baldnesse. In steade of a stomacher, a sack cloth. and for their bewty wythrednesse and sonneburnynge. Their husbondes and their mightie men shall perish with the swerde in batell.

The iiii. Chapter.

AT that tyme shall their gates mourne and complayne, and they shal syt as desolate folck vpon the earth. Then shal seuen wyues take holde of one man, and saye: we will laye all oure meat and clothinge together in comon, only that we maye be called thy wyues, and that this shamefull reprofē maye be takē from us. <sup>a</sup>After that tyme shal the braunch of <sup>g</sup> LORDE be beautiful and mightie, and <sup>h</sup> <sup>g</sup> frute of the earth shalbe fayre and pleasaunt <sup>b</sup> for those Israelites that shall sprynge therof. Then shall the remnaunt in Sion and the remnaunt at Ierusalem be called holy: namely al soch as are written amonge the luyunge at Ierusalem: what tyme as the LORDE shall wash awaye the desolacion of the daughters of Siō, and poure the bloude out from Ierusalem, with <sup>g</sup> wynde of his smoke and fyre.

Morouer vpon all the dwellinges of the hill of Sion and vpon their whole congregacion, shal the LORDE prouyde a cloude and smoke by daye, and the shynghe of a flammynge fyre by night, for all their glory shalbe preserued. And Ierusalem shall be a tabernacle for a shadowe because of hete in the daye tyme, a place and refuge where a man maye kepe him for wether and rayne.

The v. Chapter.

NOW well than, I will synge my beloued frende a songe of his vynyarde. <sup>c</sup> My beloued frende hath a vynyarde in a very frutefull plenteous ground. This he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylded he a towre, and made a wyne presse therin. And afterwarde when he lokēd <sup>g</sup> it it shulde bringe him grapes, it brought forth thornes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Citysens of Ierusalem and whole Iuda:) Iudge I praye you betwixte me: and my wynegardingē. <sup>d</sup> What more coude haue bene done for it, that I haue not done? Therefore then hath it geuen thornes, where I lokēd to haue had grapes of it.

Well, I shall tell you how I will do with my vynyarde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perish, and breake downe <sup>g</sup> wall, that it maye be troden vnder fote. I will laye it waist, that it shall nether be twysted nor cut, but beare thornes and breares. I wil also forbyd <sup>g</sup> cloudes, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vynyarde of the LORDE of hoostes it is the house of Israel, and whole Iuda his fayre plantinge. Of these he lokēd for equitye, but se there is wronge: for rightuousnesse, lo, It is but misery.

Wo to you that ioynē one house to another, and bringe one londe so nigh vnto another, till ye can get no more ground. <sup>e</sup> Wil ye dwell vpon the earth alone? The LORDE of hoostes rowneth me thus: i myne eare: shal not many greater and more gorgious houses be so waist, that no man shall dwell in thē? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of sede shal geue but thre.

Wo be vnto them that ryse vp early to vse them selues in dronkynnes, and yet at night are more superfluous with wyne. In whose companie are harpes and lutes, <sup>f</sup> tabrettes and pipes, and wyne. But they regarde not the worke of the LORDE, <sup>g</sup> and cōsidre not the operaciō of his bondes. Therefore cometh my folck also in captiuyte, <sup>h</sup> because they haue no vnderstondynge. Their glory shalbe myxte with hūger, and their pryde shalbe marred for thurst. Therefore gapeth hel, and openeth hyr mouth marvelous wyde: that pryde, boasting and wisdom, with soch as reioyse therin, maye descende in to it.

Thus shal man haue a fall, he shalbe brought lowe, and the high lokes of the proude layde downe. But the LORDE of hoostes, <sup>g</sup> holy God: shalbe exalted and vntouched, when he shal declare his equitye and rightuousnesse after this maner. Then shal <sup>g</sup> lames eate their apoynted foder, and shal fede plenteously in the mountaynes. Wo vnto vayne persones, that drawe wickednes vnto thē, as it were with a coorde: and synne, as it were with a cart rope. Which vse to speake on this maner: let him make haist now, and go forth with his worke, that we maye se it.

¶ Therefore, like as fyre licketh vp the strawe, and as the flame cōsumeth the stubble: Euen so (when their root is ful) their blossome shal vanish awaye like dust or smoke, for they despyse the lawe of the LORDE of hostes, and blaspheme the worde of the holy maker of Israel.

¶ Therfore is the wrath of the LORDE kyn- dled also agaynst his people, and he shaketh his honde at them: yee he shal smyte so, that the hilles shal tremble. And their carcases shal lye in the opē stretes, like myre. ¶ After all this, the wrath of God shal not cease, but he shal stretch his hōde wyder. And he shal gyue a tokē vnto a straunge people, and call vnto them in a farre countre: and be- holde, they shal come hastily with spede. There is not one faynt nor feble amonge them, no not a slogish nor sleperry parson.

¶ There shal not one of them put of the gyrdle from his loynes, ner lowse the lachet of his shue. Their arrowes are sharpe, and their bowes bent. Their horse hoofes are like flynt, and their cart wheles like a stormy wynde. Their crie is as it were of a lyon, and the roaringe of them like lyons whelpes. They shal roare, and hātch vp the praye, and no man shal recouer it or get it from thē. In that daye they shalbe so feare vpon them, as the see. And yf we loke vnto the londe, beholde, it shalbe all darcknesse and sorowe. Yf we loke to heauen: beholde, it shalbe darck with careful desperacion.

The vi. Chapter.

and glorious seate, and his trayne fylled y<sup>e</sup> palace. From aboue flakred the Seraphins, wherof euery one had sex wynges. With twayne ech couered his face, with twayne his fete, and with twayne dyd he flye. They cried also ech one to other on this maner: holy, holy, holy is the LORDE of hostes.<sup>b</sup> The whole worlde is ful of his glory. Yee the geastes and dorechekes moued at their crienge, and the house was ful of smoke. Then I sayde: O wo is me. For I was astonished: that I (which am a man of vn- clene lippes, and dwell amonge people y<sup>e</sup> hath vnclene lippes also:) Shulde se y<sup>e</sup> Kynge and LORDE of hostes with myne eyes.

¶ Then flewe one of the Seraphins vnto me, hauinge a bote cole in his honde, which he had taken from the aluter with the tonges, and touched my mouth, and sayde: lo, this hath touched thy mouth, and thy vnrightousnes is taken awaye, and thy synne forgiven. After this I herde the voyce of the LORDE takinge advysement on this maner: Whom shal I sende, and who wilbe oure messaunger? Thē I sayde: here am I, sende me. And so he sayde: go, and tel this people: ye shal heare in dede, but ye shal not vnderstonde, y<sup>e</sup> shal planely se, and not perceaue. Harden the harte of this people, stoppe their eares, and shut their eyes, that they se not with their eyes, heare not with their eares, and vnder- stonde not with their hartes, and conuerte and be healed.

¶ Then spake I: LORDE, how longe? he answered: vntil the cities be vtterly without inhabitours, and y<sup>e</sup> houses without men, till the lōde be also desolate, and lye vnbuylded. For the LORDE shal take the men farre awaye, so that the londe shal lye waist. Ne- uertheles, the tenth parte shal remayne therin, for it shal conuerte and be fruitful. And likewise as the Terebyntes and Oketrees bringe forth their frutes, so shal the holy sede haue frute.<sup>c</sup>

Israel: wente vp toward Ierusalem to besege it (but wanne it not.) Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, <sup>ŷ</sup> Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his herte quaked (ye and <sup>ŷ</sup> hertes also of his people) like as a tre in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mete Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Iasub) at the heade of <sup>ŷ</sup> ouer pole, in the fote path by the fullers gronde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thy self and be still, but feare not, nether be faynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokyng fyre brandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Rezin the Sirian and Romelies sonne: because that the Kyng of Siria Ephraim and Romelies sonne haue wekely conspyred agaynst the, sayenge: We will go downe in to Iuda, vexe thē, and bryng them vnder vs, and set a Kyng there, euen the sonne of Taball. For thus saith the LORDE God ther to, It shall not so go forth, nether come so to passe: for the head cite of <sup>ŷ</sup> Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Damascus is Rezin. And after fyue and threscore yere, shal Ephraim be nomore a people. And the chefe cite of Ephraim is Samaria, but the head of Samaria is Romelies sonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you.<sup>a</sup>

Morouer, God spake vnto Ahas, sayenge: requyre a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depth beneth or towarde <sup>ŷ</sup> hight aboue. The sayde Ahas: <sup>ŷ</sup> I will requyre none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then heare to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not ynough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therefore the LORDE shal geue you a token of him self: <sup>b</sup> Beholde, a virgin shal cōceau and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emanuel. Butter and hony shal he eate, <sup>ŷ</sup> he maye knowe the euel, and chose <sup>ŷ</sup> good. But or euer that childe come to knowlege, to eschue the euel and chose the good: The loude (that thou art so afraide for) shalbe desolate of both hir kynges.

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vpō thy fathers house (soch as neuer came sence the tyme <sup>ŷ</sup> Ephraim departed from Iuda) thorow <sup>ŷ</sup> kyng of the Assirians. For at the same tyme shal the LORDE whistle for the flyes <sup>ŷ</sup> are aboute the water of Egipte, and for <sup>ŷ</sup> Beyes in the Assirians londe. These shall come, and shal light all in the valeyes, in <sup>ŷ</sup> vowtes of stone, vpon all grene thynges, and in all corners.

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shaue the hayre of the heade and the fete and the beard clene of, with the rasoure that he shall paye them withall beyonde the water: namely, with <sup>ŷ</sup> kyng of the Assirians. At the same tyme shall a man lyue with a cowe, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundaunce of mylek, <sup>c</sup> he shal make butter and eat it. So that every one which remaineth in the londe, shal eate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyards (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand silverlinges) shalbe turned to brears and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with arowes and bowes, so shal all the londe become brears and thornes. And as for all hilles that now are hewen downe, thou shalt not come vpō them, for feare of brears and thornes. But the eatel shal be dryuen thither, and the shepe shal fede there.

The viij. Chapter.

MOROUER the LORDE sayde vnto me: <sup>d</sup> Take the a greate leaf, and wryte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Immediately I called vnto me faithful wytnesses: <sup>e</sup> Vrias the prest, and Zacharias <sup>ŷ</sup> sonne of Barachias. After that went I vnto the prophetisse, that now had conceaued and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LORDE to me: geue him this name: Maherschall haschbas, that is. a spedie robber, an hastie spoyler. For why, or euer the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Im, <sup>ŷ</sup> is father, and mother: shal <sup>ŷ</sup> riches of Damascus and <sup>ŷ</sup> substance of Samaria be takē awaye, <sup>f</sup> thorow the kyng of <sup>ŷ</sup> Assirians.

The LORDE spake also vnto me, sayenge: <sup>g</sup> for so much as the people refuseth the stillrenninge water of Silo, and put their delite in Rezin and Romelies sonne: Beholde, the LORDE shal bringe nightie and great floudes of water vpon them: namely, <sup>h</sup> <sup>ŷ</sup> kyng of the Assirians with all his power. Which shall poure out his furyousnes vpo euery man, and renne ouer all their bankes. And shal breake in vpon Iuda, increasinge in power, till he get him by the throte. He shal fyl also the wydenesse of thy londe with his brode wynges,

C O Emanuel. Go together ye people, and gather you, herken to all ye of farre countrees. Mustre you, and gather you: mustre you and gather you, take youre counsel together, yet must youre counsel come to nought: go in honde withal, yet shal it not prospere. Excepte Emanuel: (that is God) be with us. For the LORDE chastised me, and toke me by  $\hat{y}$  honde, and warned me, sayenge vnto me: that I shulde not walcke in the waye of this people. He sayde morouer: rounde with none of the, who so euer saye: yonder people are bounde together. Neuertheles feare them not, nether be afrayde of them, but sanctifie the LORDE of hoostes, let him be youre feare and drede. For he is the sanctifyinge, and stone to stomble at,  $\hat{y}$  rock to fall vpon, a snare and net to both the houses: to Israel, and the inhabitours of Ierusalem. And many shal stomble, fall, and be brokē vpon him: yee they shalbe snared and taken.

D Now laye the witness together (sayde the LORDE) and seale the lawe with my disciples. Thus I waite vpon the LORDE, that hath turned his face from the house of Iacob, and I loke vnto him. But lo, as for me, and the children which the LORDE hath geuen me: we are a token and a wondre in Israel, for the LORDE of hoostes sake, which dwelleth vpon the hill of Syon.

And therefore yf they saye vnto you: aske counsel at the soysayers, witches, charmers and coniurers, then make them this answer: Is there a people anywhere, that axeth not counsel at his God: whether it be concerninge the dead, or the lyuynge? Yf eny man want light, let him loke vpon the lawe and the testimony, whether they speake not after this meanyng. Yf he do not this, he stombleth and suffreth hūger. And yf he suffre hunger, he is out of patience, and blasphemeth his kynge and his God. Then loketh he vwarde, and downe warde to the earth, and holde, there is trouble and darcknesse, vexacion is rounde aboute him, and the cloude of erreure. And out of soch aduersite, shall he not escape.

The ii. Chapter.

EUEN like as in tyme past it hath bene well sene, that  $\hat{y}$  londe of Zabulon and the londe of Nephthali (where thorow the see waye goeth ouer Iordane in to the londe of Galilee) was at the first in litle trouble, but afterward sore vexed.

Neuertheles  $\hat{y}$  people that haue dwelt in darcknesse, shal se a greate light. As for them that dwell in the londe of the shadowe of death, vpon them shal the light shyne. Shalt thou multiplie the people, and not increase the ioye also? They shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in haruest, and as men that haue gotten the victory, when they deale the spoyle. For thou shalt breake the yocke of the peoples burthen: the staff of hys shulder, and the rod of his oppressoure, as in  $\hat{y}$  daye at Madiā.

Morouer all temerarious and sedicious power (yee where there is but a cote fylled with bloude) shalbe burnt, and fede the fyre. For vnto us a childe shalbe borne, and vnto us a sonne shalbe geuē. Vpo his shulder shal the kyngdome lye, and he shalbe called with his owne name: The wōderous geuer of counsel, the mightie God, the euerlastinge father the pryncce of peace, he shal make no ende to encrease the kyngdome and peace, and shal syt vpon the seate of Dauid and in his kyngdome, to set vp the same, to stablish it with equitye and rightuousnesse, from thence forth for euermore. This shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe.

E The LORDE sent a worde in to Iacob, the same is come in to Israel. All the people also of Ephraim, and they that dwell in Samaria, can saye with pryde and hie stomackes, on this maner: The tyle worcke is fallen downe, but we will buyle it with harder stones. The Molbery tymbre ys broken, but we shal set it vp agayne with Cedre. Neuertheles, the LORDE shal prepare Rezin the enemie agaynst the, and so ordre their aduersaries, that  $\hat{y}$  Sirians shal laye holde vpon them before, and the Philistynes behynde, and so deuoure Israel with open mouth.

After all this, the <sup>a</sup>wrath of the LORDE shal not cease, but yet his hande shalbe stretched out still. For the people turneth not vnto him, that chastiseth them, nether do they seke the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore the LORDE shal rote out of Israel both heade and tale, braunch and twygge in one daye. By the heade, is vnderstonde the Senatoure and honorable man, and by <sup>y</sup> tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right case, soch be disceauers. Soch as men thinke also to be perfecte amonge these, are but cast awaye.

<sup>b</sup> Therefore shal the LORDE haue no pleasure in their yonge mē, nether fauoure their fatherlesse and wydowes. For thei are altogether ypoerites and wicked, and all their mouthes speake foly. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath cease, but yet his honde shalbe stretched out still. For the vngodly burne, as a fyre in the bryers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wod or a redebush, so ascendeth the smoke of their pryde.

For this cause shal <sup>y</sup> wrath of the LORDE of hoostes fall vpon the londe, and the people shalbe consumed, as it were with fyre, no man shal spare his brother. Yf a man do turne him to the right honde, he shal famesh, or to the lefte hande to eat, he shal not haue ynough. Euery man shal eate the flesh of his owne arme: Manasses shal eate Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasses, and they both shal eate Iuda. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

The r. Chapter.

to whom will ye geue youre honoure, that he maye kepe it? that ye come not amonge the presoners, or lye amonge the deed? After all this shal not the wrath of the LORDE cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

<sup>c</sup> Wo be also vnto Assur, which is a staff of my wrath, in whose honde is the rod of my punyishment. For I shal sende him amonge those ypoeritish people, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfaoure shal I send him: that he maye utterly robbe them, spoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the strete. Howbeit his meanyng is not so, nether thinketh his harte of this fashion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and destroye moch people, for he saith: are not my princes all kynges? Is not Calno as easie to wyne, as Charchamis? Is it harder to conquire Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to ouercome Damascus the Samaria? As who say: I were able to wyne the kingdome of the Idolaters and their goddes, but not Ierusalem and Samaria. Shal I not do vnto Ierusalem and their ymages, as I dyd vnto Samaria and their ymages?

Wherfore the LORDE saith: As soone as I haue performed my whole worcke vpon the Hyl of Syon and Ierusalem: the will I also vyset the noble and stoute kyng of Assiria, with his wysdome and pryde. For he stondesth thus in his owne cōceate: This do I, thorow the power of myne owne honde, and thorow my wisdome: For I am wyse, I am he that remoue the londes of the people, I robbe their prynces: and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie seates. My honde hath founde out the hoostes of the people, as it were a nest. And like as egges, that were layde here and there, are gathered together: So do I gather all countrees. And there is no man, <sup>y</sup> darre be so bolde, as to touch a fether, that darre open his mouth, or once whispe.

<sup>c</sup> But doth the axe boost itself, agaynst him <sup>y</sup> heweth therewith, or doth the sawe make eny krakinge, agaynst him that ruleth it? That were euen like, as yf the rod dyd exalte it self agaynst him, that beareth it: or as though <sup>y</sup> staff shulde magnifie it self, as who saye: it were no wodd. Therefore shal the LORDE of hoostes sende him pouerte in his riches, and burne vp his power, as it were with a fyre. <sup>a</sup> But the light of Israel shalbe  $\hat{y}$  fyre, and his Sanctuary shalbe the flame, and it shal kyndle, and burne vp his thornes and breyers in one daye, yee all the glory of his woddess and feldes shalbe consumed with body and soule. As for him self, he shalbe as one chased awaye. The trees also of his felde shalbe of soch a nombre, that a childe maye tell them.

D After  $\hat{y}$  daye shal the remnaunt of Israel, and soch as are escaped out of the house of Iacob, seke no more coforte at him that smote them, but shal conforte them selues with faithfulness and treuth in the LORDE, the holy, one of Israel. <sup>b</sup> The remnaunt, yee and the Posteryte of Iacob, shal couerte vnto God the mighty one. For though thy people (o Israel) be as the sonde of the see, yet shal but the remnaunt of them only conuerte vnto him. Perfecte is the iudgmēt of him that floweth in rightuousnesse: and therefore  $\hat{y}$  LORDE of hoostes shal perfectly fulfil the thinge, that he hath determyned in the myddest of the whole worlde. Therefore thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: Thou my people, that dwellest in Sion, be not afrayde for the kinge of the Assirians: He shal wagg his staff at the, yee and beate the with the rodd, as the Egiptiās dyd sometyme: But soone after, shal my wrath and my indignacion be fulfilled agaynst their blasphemies.

E Morouer the LORDE of hoostes shal prepare a scourge for him, <sup>c</sup> like as was the punyshment of Madiā vpō  $\hat{y}$  mount of Oreb. <sup>d</sup> And he shal lift vp his rod ouer the see, as he dyd sometyme ouer the Egiptians. Then shal his burthen be taken from thy shuldres, and his yock from thy neck, yee the same yock shal corrupte for very fatnesse. He shal come to Aiath, and go thorow toward Migron. But at Machmas shal he muster his hooste, and go ouer  $\hat{y}$  foorde. Gaba shal be their resting place, Rhama shalbe afrayde, Gabea Saul shal fle awaye. The voyce of  $\hat{y}$  noyse of thy horses (o doughter Gallim) shalbe herde vnto lais and to Anathoth, which also shalbe in trouble. Madnena shal tremble for feare, but the citesyns of Gabim are māly, yet shal he remayne at Nob that daye. After that, shal he lift vp his honde agaynst the mount Sion, and agaynst the hill of Ierusalem. But se, the LORDE God of hoostes shal take awaye the proude from thence, with feare. He shal hew downe the proude, and fel the hie mynded. The thornes of the wod shal be rooted out with yron, and Libanus shal haue a mightie fal.

The xi. Chapter.

AFTER this there shal come a rod forth A of  $\hat{y}$  Kynrede of Iesse, and a blossome out of his rote. The sprete of the LORDE shal light vpon it: the sprete of wysdome, and vnderstandinge: the sprete of counceyl, and strength:  $\hat{y}$  sprete of knowlege, and of the feare of God: and shal make him feruent in the feare of God. For he shal not geue sentēce, after the thinge  $\hat{y}$  shal be brought before his eies, nether reprove a matter at the first hearinge: but with rightuousnesse shal he iudge the poore, and with holynes shal he refourne the symple of the worlde.

Then shal the Gentiles enquire after the rote of Iesse (which shalbe set vp for a token vnto the Gentiles) for his dwellinge shalbe glorious. <sup>k</sup> At the same tyme shal the LORDE take in honde agayne, to conquere  $\hat{y}$  remnaunt of his people (which are left alyue) From the Assiriās, Egyp̄tians, Arabians, Morians, Elamites, Caldeyes, Antiochiās and Ilōdes of the see. <sup>a</sup> And he shal set vp a tokē amonge the Gentiles, and gather together <sup>ŷ</sup> dispersed of Israel, yee and the outcastes of Iuda from the foure corners of <sup>ŷ</sup> worlde. The hatred of Ephraim, and <sup>ŷ</sup> enmyte of Iuda shalbe cleue rooted out. Ephraim shal beare no euell wil to Iuda, and Iuda shal not hate Ephraim: but they both together shal flye vpō the shulders of the Philistynes toward the West, and spoyle them together that dwell toward the East. The Idumytes and the Moabites shal let their hōdes fall, and the Ammonites shalbe obedient vnto them.

The LORDE also shal cleue the tunges of the Egipeiās see, and with a mightie wynde shal he lift vp his honde ouer Nilus, and shal smyte his seuē streames and make men go ouer drye shod. And thus shal he make a waye for his people, <sup>ŷ</sup> remayneth from the Assirians, <sup>a</sup> like as it happened to <sup>ŷ</sup> Israelites, what tyme they departed out of the londe of Egypte.

The xij. Chapter.

SO that then thou shalt saye: O LORDE, I thanke the, for thou wast displeased at me, but thou hast refrayned thy wrath, and hast mercy vpon me. <sup>c</sup> Beholde, God is my health, in whom I trust, and am not afrayde. For the LORDE God is my strength, and my prayse, he also shalbe my refuge. Therefore with ioye shal ye drawe water out of the welles of the Sauoure, and then shal ye saye: <sup>d</sup> Let vs geue thanks vnto the LORDE, and call vpon his name, and declare his counceles amonge the people, and kepe them in remembrance, for his name is excellēt. O synge praises vnto the LORDE, for he doth greate thinges, as it is knowne in all the worlde. Crie out, and be glad, thou that dwellest in Sion, for greate is thy prince: the holy one of Israel.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THIS is <sup>ŷ</sup> heuy burthē of Babilō, which Esaye the sonne of Amos dyd se. Make some tokēs to the hie hilles, <sup>e</sup> call vnto them, holde vp youre hōde, that the prynces maye go in at the dore. For I will sende for my debites and my gyañtes (sayeth the LORDE) and in my wrath I will call for soch, as tryumphe in my glory.

With that, me thought I herde in the mōntaynes, a noyse, like as it had bene of a greate people: and a ruszhinge, as though the kyngdomes of all nacions had come together. (And the LORDE of hostes was the captayne of the whole armye.) As they had come not only out of farre countrees, but also from the endes of the heauē: Euē the LORDE himself with the ministers of his wrath, to destroye the whole lōde. Mourn therefore, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroye from <sup>ŷ</sup> allmighty. Then shall all hondes be letten downe, and all mens hertes shal melt awaie, they shal stonde in feare, carefulnesse and sorowe shal come vpō them, and they shal haue payne, as a woman that traueleth with childe. <sup>a</sup> One shall euer be abaszshed of another, † their faces shal burne, like <sup>ŷ</sup> flāme.

For lo, the daye of the LORDE shall come, terrible, full of indignacion and wrath: to make the londe waist, and to root out the synne therof. For the starres and planetes of heauen shal not geue their light, the Sonne shalbe quenched in the rysinge, <sup>a</sup> and the Mone shal not shyne with his light. And I wil punysh the wickednesse of the worlde, † the synnes of the vngodly, sayeth the LORDE. The hie stomackes of the proude will I take awaye, and will laye downe the boostinge of tyrantes. I will make a man deare to his fyne golde, and a man to be more worth, thē a golden wedge of Ophir. Morouer, I will so shake the heauē, that the earth shall remoue out of hir place.

Thus shall it go with Babilon, in the wrath of the LORDE of hostes in <sup>ŷ</sup> daye of his fearfull indignaciō. And Babilon shalbe as an hunted or chased doo, and as a flocke without a shepherde. Euery mā shal turne to his owne people, † fle echone in to his owne londe. Who so is founde alone, shalbe shot thorow: And who so gather together, shalbe destroyed with the swerde. Their children shalbe slayne before their eyes, their houses spoyle, † their wyues rauynshed. For lo, I shall bringe vp <sup>ŷ</sup> Medes agaynst thē, which

And Babilō (ŷ glory of kigdomes and bewtie of the Caldees honoure) shalbe destroyed, enū as God destroyed Sodom ⁊ Gomorra.* It shal neuer be more inhabited, nether shal there be eny more dwellinge there, from generacion to generacion.

The Arabians shal make no mo tentes there, nether shall the shepardes make their foldes there eny more: but wylde beastes shal lie there, ⁊ ŷ houses shalbe full of greate Oules. Estriches shal dwell there, ⁊ Apes shal daunce there: The litle Oules shall crie in the palaces, one after another, ⁊ Dragōs shalbe in the pleasaut perlours. And as for Babilons tyme, it is at honde, ⁊ hir dayes maye not be longe absent.

The xiiiij. Chapter.

BUT ŷ LORDE wilbe mercyfull vnto Iacob, ⁊ wyll take vp Israel agayne, ⁊ set thē in their owne lōde. Straūgers shal cleue vnto thē, ⁊ get thē to ŷ house of Iacob. <sup>b</sup> They shal take ŷ people, ⁊ cary thē home with thē. And ŷ house of Israel shal haue thē in possession, for seruantes ⁊ maydēs in ŷ lōde of ŷ LORDE. They shal take those prisoners, whose captyues they had bene afore: ⁊ rule those, ŷ had oppressed thē. When ŷ LORDE now shal bringe ŷ to rest, frō ŷ traunayle, feare, ⁊ harde bondage ŷ thou wast laden with all: then shalt thou vse this mockage vpon ŷ kinge of Babilon, ⁊ saye: How happeneth it ŷ ŷ oppressour leaueth of? Is ŷ golden tribute come to an ende? Doutles the LORDE hath broken the staff of the vngodly, ⁊ the cepter of ŷ lordly. Which whē he is wroth, smytheth ŷ people with durable strokes, ⁊ in his wōders he persecuteth thē, ⁊ tameth thē cōtinually. And therefore ŷ whole worlde is now at rest and quyetnesse, ⁊ men synge for ioye.

B Yee euen the Fyrre trees and Cedres of Libanus reioyse at thy fall, sayenge: Now ŷ thou art layde downe, there come no mo vp to destroye vs. Hell also trembleth at thy commynge. All mightie men and prynces of the earth, steppe forth before the. All kynges of the earth stonde vp frō their seates, that they maye all (one after another) synge and speake vnto the. Art thou wounded also as we? art thou become like vnto vs? Thy pompe and thy pryde is gone downe to hell: Mothes shalbe layde vnder the, ⁊ wormes shalbe thy coueringe.

How art thou fallen from heauen <sup>c</sup> (o Lucifer) thou faire mornīge childe? hast thou gotten a fall euen to the grounde, thou that (notwithstondinge) dyddest subdue the people? And yet thou thoughtest in thine harte: I will clymme vp in to heauen, and make my seate above the starres of God, I wyll syt vpon the glorious mount toward the North, I wyll clymme vp aboute the cloudes, ⁊ wilbe like the highest of all. Yet darre I laye, ŷ thou shalt be brought downe to the depe of hell. <sup>d</sup> They that se the, shal narrowly loke vpō the, and thinke in them selues, sayenge: Is this the man, that brought all londes in feare, and made ŷ kingdomes afraide: Is this he that made the worlde in a maner waist, ⁊ layde the cities to the grounde, which let not his prisoners go home?

How happeneth it, that the kynges of all people lie, euery one at home in his owne palace, with worshipe, and thou art cast out of thy graue like a wilde braunch: like as dead mens rayment that are shott thorow with the swerde: as they that go downe to the stones of the depe: as a dead coarse that is troden vnder fete: and art not buried with them? Euen because that thou hast waisted thy lōde, and destroyed thy people. For the generacion of the wicked shalbe without honoure, for euer. There shal a waye be sought to destroye their childrē, for their fathers wickednes: they shal not come vp agayne to possesse the londe, and fylle the worlde ful of castels and townes.

I wil stonde vp agaynst them (sayeth the LORDE of hostes) and root out ŷ name and generacion of Babilon (saieth the LORDE) ⁊ wil geue it to the Otters, and wil make water poddels of it. And I wil swepe them out with the besome of destruccion, sayeth the LORDE of hostes. The LORDE of hostes hath sworne an ooth, sayēge: It shal come to passe as I haue determined: ⁊ shalbe fulfilled as I haue denyed. <sup>e</sup> The Assirians shalbe destroyed in my londe, and vpon my mountaynes wyll I treade them vnder fote.

For yf the LORDE of hoostes determe a thinge, who wyl dysanulle it? And yf he stretch forth his honde, who wil holde it in agayne?

¶ The same yere that kynge Achas dyed, God threatned by Esay on this maner: <sup>a</sup> Reioyse not (thou whole Palestina) as though y rod of him y beateth the were broken: For out of y serpentines rote, there shal waxe a kockatrice, & the frute shalbe a fyrie worme. But the poore shall fede of the best thinges, and the symple shal dwell in safetie. <sup>b</sup> Thy rotes wil I destroye with honger, and it shal slaye thy remnaunt. Mourn ye portes, wepe ye Cities. And feare thou (o whole Palestina) for there shal come fro the North a smoke, whose power no man maye abyde. Who shall then maynteyne the messages of the Gentyles? But the LORDE stablisheth Syon, & the poore of my people shall put their trust in him.

The xv. Chapter.

¶ THIS is y heuy burthē vpō Moab: Ar of Moab was destroyed (as me thought) in the night season: <sup>c</sup> The walles of Moab perished in the night, & vanished awaye: They wēte to Baith and Dibon in the lie places, for to wepe: Moab did mourne frō Nebo to Medba: All their heades were colled, and al their beardes shauen. <sup>d</sup> In their stretes were they gyrded aboute with sack cloth. In all the toppes of their houses & stretes was there nothinge, but mournynge and wepinge. Hesebon and Eleale cried, that their voyce was herde vnto Iahaz. The worthies also of Moab bleared and cried for very sorow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moabs sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a fayre fruteful bullock, they went vp to Lubith, wepinge. The waye toward Horonaim was ful of lamentacion for y hurte. The waters of Nimrim were dried vp, the grasse was wythred, the herbes destroyed, & what necessary grene thinge there was besyde. In like maner the thinge y was left them of their substaunce, they caried it by water to Araby.

The cry went ouer the whole londe of Moab: from Eglaim vnto Beer, was there nothinge but mournynge. The waters of Dimon were full of bloude, for y enemye had sent thither a bonde of men, which as a lyon, layde waite for the remnaunt of the londe, and for them y were escaped.

The xvi. Chapter.

¶ THEN sent the lordes of the lōde a mā of warre, from the rocke that lieth toward the deserte, vnto the hill of the daughter Sion (For as for the daughters of Moab, they were as it had bene a trymblinge byrde, y is put out of hir nest, by the fery of Arnon) which messaunger sayde: gather youre counceyl, come together, couer vs with youre shadowe in the myddaye, as the night doth: hyde the chased, & bewraye not thē that are fled, let the persecuted Moabites dwel amōge you, be oure open refuge agaynst the destroyer: for the aduersary oppreseth vs, the robber vndoeth vs, & the tyrante dryueth vs out of oure londe. But y Trone of youre kingdome is ful of grace, therefore he that syteth vpon it with faithfulness & treuth in the house of Dauid, knowe the thinge & do his diligence to helpe shortly, accordinge to Equite and rightuousnes. As for Moabs pride (shal they answere) it is wel knowne. And all though they be excellent, proude, arrogant, & hie mynded: yet is their strength nothinge like. And therefore Moab complayneth vnto Moab, wher thorow they come all to mourne: & now y they be smytten, they take their deuyce beneth by the bryckwall, and make their cōplaynte.

The suburbes also of Hesebon were made waist, & the princes of the Gentyles hewed downe y vynyardes of Sibma, which were planted with noble grapes, and spred vnto Iazer, and went vnto the ende of the deserte, whose branches stretched their selues forth beyonde the see. Therefore I mourned for Iazer, & for y vynyardes of Sibma with greate sorow. I poured my teares vpon Hesebon & Eleale, for all their songes were layde downe, in their haruest & gatheringe of their grapes: Myrth and chere was gone out of y felde & vynyardes, in so moch, that no man was glad ner sunge. For it happened thus also: whē Moab sawe that she was turned vp syde downe: "she went vp an hie in to hir sanctuary, to make hir prayer there, but she might not be helped. This is the deuyce, which the LORDE toke in honde at that tyme agaynst Moab. But now the LORDE sayeth thus: In three yere shal ŷ power of Moab with their pōpe (which is greate) be minished, like as ŷ burthē of an hyred seruauante: And as for ŷ remnaunt of them, they shalbe lesse then a fewe, and not rekened moch worth.

The xviij. Chapter.

THIS is the heuy burthē vpō Damascus: <sup>a</sup>Beholde, Damascus shal be nomore a cite, but an heape of broken stones. The cities of Aroer shalbe waist, The catel shal lie there, & nomā shal fraye thē awaye. Ephraim shal no more be strōge, & Damascus shal no more be a kyngdome. And as for ŷ glory of ŷ remnaunt of ŷ Sirians, it shalbe as the glory of the childrē of Israel, saieŷ ŷ LORDE of hoostes. At that tyme also shal ŷ glory of Iacob be very poore, & his fatnes leane. It shal happē to thē, as when one sheareth in haruest, which cutteth his handful with the sickle, & when one gathreth ŷ sheaues together in the valley, of Rephaim, there remaineth yet some ears ouer. Or as whē one shaketh an olyue tre, <sup>c</sup>which fyndeth but two or three olyue beries aboue in the toppe, and foure or fyue in the braunches. Thus the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken.

Then shal man cōuerte agayne vnto his maker, & turne his eyes to the holy one of Israël. And shal not turne to the autlers that are ŷ worke of his owne hōdes, nether shal he loke vpon groaues & ymages, which his fyngers haue wrought. At the same tyme shal their stronge cities be desolate, like as were once ŷ forsakē plowes & corne, which they forsoke, <sup>d</sup>for feare of ŷ children of Israel.

So shalt thou (o Damascus) be desolate, because thou hast forgottē God thy Sauoure, & hast not called to remēbraunce ŷ rock of thy strēgh, Wherefore thou hast also set a layre plāte, & grafted a straunge braunch. In the daye when thou diddest plante it, it was greate, and gaue soone the frute of thi sēde: But in the daye of haruest, thou shalt reape an heape of sorowes & miseries.

Wo be to the multitude of moch people, that russ in like the see, and to the heape of folke, that renne ouer all like greate waters. For though so many people increase as the flowing waters, and though they be armed, yet they fle farre of, and vanish awaye like the dust with the wynde vpon an hill, and as the whyrle wynde thorow a storme. Though they be fearful at night, yet in the morninge it is gone with thē, This is their porcion, that do vs harme, and heretage of them, that robbe vs.

The xviij. Chapter.

WO be to the londe of sience shippes, which is of this syde ŷ floude of Ethiopia: which sendeth hir message ouer the see in shippes of redes vpō ŷ water, and sayeth: go soone, and do youre message vnto a straunge and harde folke: to a fearful people, & to a people ŷ is further then this: to a desperate and pylled folke, whose londe is deuyded from vs with ryuers of water. Yee all ye ŷ syt in the compasse of the worlde, and dwell vpon the earth: when the token shalbe geuen vpō the mountaynes, then loke vp: and when the horne bloweth, then herken to, for thus hath ŷ LORDE sayde vnto me. I layde me downe, and pondred the matter in my house, at the noone daye when it was hote: and there fel a myslinge shower, like a dew, as it happeneth in haruest. But the frutes, were not yet ripe cut of, and the grapes were but yonge and grence. Then one smote of the grapes with an hoke, yee he hewed downe also the buwes and the braunches, & dyd cast thē awaye. And thus they were layde waist, for the foules of the mountaynes, and for ŷ beastes of the earth together. So ŷ the foules sat ther vpon, and the beastes of the earth wyntered there. Then shal there be a present brought vnto the LORDE of hoostes: euen that harde folke, that fearful folke, and that further is thē this: ŷ desperate and pylled folke (whose londe is deuyded from vs with floudes of water) vnto the place of the name of the LORDE of hoostes: euen vnto the hill of Sion.

The ix. Chapter.

A THIS is the heuy burthen vpon Egipte:
 "Beholde, the LORDE wil ryde vpon a swifte cloude, and come in to Egipte. And the goddes of Egipte shal trymble at his cōmyunge, and the hert of Egipte shal quake within her. For thus saith the LORDE:
 I wil stere vp the Egyptians one agaynst another amonge them selues, <sup>a</sup>so that one shalbe euer agaynst his brother and neigh-boure, yee one cite agaynst another, and one kyngdome agaynst another. And Egipte shalbe choked in hir self. Whē they axe counsel at their goddes, at their Prophetes, at their soysayers and witches: then will I bringe their counsel to naught.

B I wil delyuer Egipte also in to the hondes of greuous rulers, and a cruel kinge shal haue the rule of them. The water of the see shalbe drawē out, Nilus shal synke awaye, & be dronke vp. The ryuers also shalbe drawen out, the welles shal decreace and drie awaye.
 Rede and rush shal fayle, the grasse by the waters syde or vpon ſ ryuers bancke, yee and what so euer is sowed by the waters, shalbe wythered, destroyed, & brought to naught.
 The fyshers shall mourne, all such as cast angles in the water, shal complayne, & they that sprede their nettes in the water, shalbe faynt harted. Such as laboure vpon flax & syleke, shal come to pouerte, & they also that weeue fyne workes. All the poundes of Egipte, all the policie of their Moates & diches shal come to naught.<sup>c</sup>

C Yee the vndiscrete prynces of Zoan, the "council of the wyse Senatours of Pharaο, shal turne to foolishnesse: Those that darre boast & saye of Pharaοs behalfe: I am come of wyse people. I am come of ſ olde regall Progeny. But where are now thy wyse mē?
 Let them tel the & shewe the, what the LORDE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egipte. Fooles are those prynces of Zoan, & proude are the prynces of Noph: yee they dysceauē Egipte with the nobilite of their stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egipte dronckē with the sprete of erreure, and they shal vse it in all matters: euc like as a dronkē mā goeth spewing aboute. For Egipte shal lacke good counsel, so ſ they shal not knowe what to do, nether beginnyng nor ende, nether vpon the lōde nor water.

 Thē shal ſ Egiptias be like vnto womē, afrayde & astōied, at the lifyinge vp of the hōde, which ſ LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp ouer them.

The londe of Iuda also shal make the Egiptians afrayde, who so doth but speake vpon it, shal put them in feare: And that because of the council, which ſ LORDE of hoostes hath deuyed agaynst them. Then shal the ryue cities of Egipte speake with the Canaanites tunge, ande sweare by the LORDE of hoostes, & Heliopolis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes haue an altur in the myddest of the londe of Egipte, with this title ther by: Vnto the LORDE. This shalbe a token or testimony vnto the LORDE of hoostes in the londe of Egipte, when they shal crie vnto him, because of those that oppresse them: that he shal sende them a captayne and a Sauoure to delyuer them.

Morouer, Egipte shalbe bought vnto the LORDE, and the Egiptians also shal knowe the LORDE at the same tyme: they shal do him reuerence with peace offringes, and with meat offringes: they shal promyse him of-fringes, yee & paye him also. Thus the LORDE shal smyte Egipte, & heale it agayne:
 & so shal they turne to ſ LORDE, and he also shal haue mercy vpo them, and saue them. Then shal there be a comon waye out of Egipte in to Assiria. The Assirians shal come in to Egipte, and the Egiptians in to Assiria. The Egiptians also and the Assirians shal both haue one Gods seruyce. Then shal Israel with honoure be the thirde to Egipte and Assur. And the LORDE of hoostes shal blesse them, sayenge: Blissed is my people of the Egiptians, Assur is the worke of my hōdes, but Israel is myne enheritaunce.

Then sayde the LORDE: where as my seruauent Esaye goeth naked and barefote, it is a token and signefieng of the thinge, that after three yere shal come vpon Egipte and Ethiopia. For euen thus shal the kinge of the Assirians driue both yonge and olde, as prisoners naked and barefote, out of Egipte and Ethiopia.

3 And shal dyscouer y<sup>e</sup> shame of Egipte. They shalbe also at their wittes ende, and ashamed one of another: the Egipcians of the Moryans, and the Morians of the Egipcians, at the sight of their glory.

Moreover they that dwell in y<sup>e</sup> Iles shal saye euen the same daye: beholde, this is oure hope, to whom we fled to seke helpe, that we might be deluyered from the kinge of y<sup>e</sup> Assirians. How will we escape?

The xxi. Chapter.

12 THIS is the heuy burthē of the waist see: A greuous visiō was shewed vnto me, like as when a storme of wynde and rayne russeth in from the wyldernes, that terrible londe. Who so maye disceaue (sayde the voyce) let him disceaue: Who so maye destroye, let him destroye. Vp Elam, besege it o Madai, for I will still all their gronynges. With this, the raynes of my backe were ful of payne: <sup>a</sup> Panges came vpon me, as vpon a woman in hir trauayle. When I herde it, I was abashed: and whē I looked vp, I was afraide. Myne herte paunted, I trembled for feare. The darcknesse made me fearfull in my mynde.

13 Yee soone make redy the table (sayde this voyce) kepe the watch, eate and drynke: Vp ye captaynes, take you to youre shyldes, for thus the LORDE hath charged me: go thy waye, and set a watchmā, that he maye tell what he seyth. And whē he had wayted diligently, he sawe two horsmen: the one rydinge vpon an Asse, the other vpon a camel. And the lyon cried: LORDE, I haue stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepte my watch all the night. With y<sup>e</sup> came there one rydinge vpon a charet, which answered, and sayde: <sup>b</sup> Babilon is fallen, she is turned vpsyde downe, and all y<sup>e</sup> ymages of hir goddes are smytten to y<sup>e</sup> grounde. This (o my felowe throsshers and fanners) haue I herde of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel, to shewe it vnto you.

The heuy burthen of Duma.

One of Seir cried vnto me: watchman, what hast thou espied by night? Watchman, what hast thou espied by night? The watchman answered: The daye breaketh on, and the night is cōmyng: Yf youre request be earnest, then axe, and come agayne.

The heuy burthen vpon Arabia.

14 At euen ye shal abyde in the wod, in the waye toward Dedanim. Mete the thirstie with water, (o ye citisens of Hema) mete those with bred that are fled. For thei shal runne awaye from the weapen, from the drawe swerde, from the bēt bowe, and from the greate batell. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: ouer a yere shal all the power of Cedar be gone, like as when the office of an hyred seruauente goeth out: And the remnaunt of the good Archers of Cedar, shalbe very few: For the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken it.

The xxij. Chapter.

The heuy burthen, upon the valley of Visions.

15 WHAT hast thou there to do, that thou clymnest vp in to the house toppes, o thou cite of miracles, sedicious and wilfull? seinge, thy slayne mē are nether killed with swerde, ner deed in batel? For all thy captaynes gat them to their horses from the ordinance, yee they are altogether rydden awaye, and fled farre of. When I perceaued y<sup>e</sup>, I sayde: awaye fro me, y<sup>e</sup> I maye wepe bitterly. Take no laboure for to cōforte me, as touching the destruction of my people. For this is y<sup>e</sup> daye of the LORDE of hoostes, wherein he will plage, treade downe, and wede out the valley of Visiōs, and breake downe the walles, with such a crack, that it shal geue a sownde in the mountaynes.

I sawe the Elanites take the quyuers to carte and to horse, and that the walles were bare from harnesse. Thy goodly valleys were ful of Charettes, the horse men made them soone to besege the gates. Then was the coueringe of Iuda put from thence, and then was sene the sege of the tymbre house. There shal ye se the riftes in the walles of the cite of David,<sup>a</sup> wherof there shalbe many. Ye shal gather together the waters of the lower pole, and tel the houses of Ierusalē, and break of some of thē to kepe ſ̄ walles. And ye shal make a pyt betwyxe ſ̄ twayne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothing regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tyme shal ſ̄ LORDE of hoostes cal mē to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and puttinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulnes, slaughter oxē, they kyll shepe, they eate costly meate, & drynke wyne: <sup>b</sup> let vs eate and drinke, to morow we shal die. Neuertheles whē the LORDE of hoostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shalbe remitted, ye must die for it. This hath ſ̄ LORDE God of hoostes spoken.

<sup>c</sup> Thus sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes: Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? & from whence comest thou? that thou hast made the a graue here? For he had caused a costly tombe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORDE shal cast the out by violence, he will deck the of another fashion, and put vpon the a straunge clothe. He shal carie ſ̄ in to a farre cōtre, like a ball with his hondes. There shalt thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charettes haue an ende: thou vylleyn of the house of thy LORDE: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

<sup>d</sup> After this wil I cal my seruaut Eliakim, ſ̄ sonne of Helkia, and araye him with thy cote, and gyrdle him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shalbe a father of the citisens of Ierusalem,<sup>e</sup> and of the Kynred of Iuda. I will also laye the keye of Dauids house vpon his sholders, and yf he open, no man shal shit, and yf he do shyte, no man shal open. I wil fasten him to a nale in the place of the most hie faithfulnessse,<sup>f</sup> and he shalbe vpon the glorious trone of his fathers house. They shal hāge vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childrē, all apparel small and great, all instrumentes of measure & musike. This shal come to passe (saith the LORDE of hoostes) when the nale, ſ̄ is fastened to the place of the highest faithfulnessse: shalbe plucked of, And whē the weight that hangeth vpon it, shal fall, be broken, and hewen in peces. For the LORDE himself hath sayde it.

The xiii. Chapter.

<sup>a</sup> A N heuy burthen vpon Tirus. Mourne ye shippes of Tharsis, <sup>b</sup> for she is throwne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The Indwellers of the floudes, the marchautes of Sidon, and they that occupied the see (of whom thou wast ful somtyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vnto the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon market of al people. Sidō is sory for it, yee and all ſ̄ power of the see cōplaneth, and saith: O ſ̄ I had neuer traueled with childe, that I had neuer borne eny, ſ̄ I had nether norished boye, ner brought vp doughter. As soone as Egipte perceaneth it, she wilbe as sory as Tirus it self. Go ouer the see, Mourne ye ſ̄ dwell in the flēs. Is not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite? whose natyues dwellinge farre of, commendeth her so greatly? Who hath deuyed soch thinges vpon Tirus the crowne of al cities, whose marchautes and captaynes were the highest and principal of the worlde? <sup>c</sup> Euē the LORDE of hoostes hath denyed it, that he maye put downe al pompe, and minish all the glory of the worlde. Go thorow thy londe (<sup>d</sup>o thou doughter of the see) as men go ouer the water, and there is not a gyrdle more.

<sup>e</sup> Thus the LORDE (that renoueth the kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out:) hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrth (o thou doughter Sidon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethēs. Stonde vp therfore, and go where the enemy wil carie the, where thou shalt also haue no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample:) The Caldees were soch a people, that no man was like them. Assur buylded them: he set vp his castels & palaces, and broke them downe agayne. And therfore mourne (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shalbe throwne downe.

After that, shal the lxx. yeares of Tirus (euen as longe as their kinges life was) be forgotten. And after lxx. yeares, it shal happē to Tirus as with an harlot that playeth vpon a lute. Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the cite, thou art yet an vnknowne wensche, make pastyme with dyuerse balettes, wherby thou mayest come in to acquaintance. Thus shal it happen after lxx. yeares. "The LORDE shal usiet the cite of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hyr Marchaundyse, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiēge and wynnyng, shalbe halowed vnto the LORDE.<sup>a</sup> For then shal they laye vp nothinge behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaūdisie of Tirus shal belōge vnto the citisens of the LORDE, to the fedinge and susteninge of the hūgrie, and to the clothinge of the aged.

The xxiij. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, y LORDE shal waiste and plage the worlde, he shal make the face of the earth desolate, ⁊ scatere abroad y inhabitants therof. Then shal the prest be as the people, the master as the seruaunt, the dame like the mayde, the seller like the byer, he that lēdeth vpon vsury, like him y boroweth vpō vsury, the creditoure, as the detter. Yee miserably shal y worlde be waysted ⁊ clene destroyed. For y LORDE hath so determind in himself. The earth shalbe heuye and decaye: The face of y earth shal perish ⁊ fal awaye, the proude people of y worlde shal come to naught, For y earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

For why? they haue offended y lawe, chaunged the ordinaūces, and made the euerlastinge testamēt of none effecte. And therefore shal the curse deuoure the earth: for they y dwell therō, haue synned, wherfore they shalbe brent also, and those that remayne, shalbe very few. The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shalbe weake, and all y haue bene mery in barte, shal sighe. "The myrth of tabrettes shalbe layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal cease, and the pleasure of lutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrth, the beer shal be bytter to thē that drinke it, the wicked cities shalbe broken downe, all houses shalbe shut, that no man maye come in.

because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanish awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remayne in the cities, and the gates shalbe smytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smytheth downe y olyues, y are left vpon the tre: "or seketh after grapes, when the wyne gatheringe is out. And those same (that remayne) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, ⁊ shal magnifie the glory of the LORDE, euen from the see, ⁊ prayse the name of the LORDE God of Israel, in the valeis and Hōdes. We heare songes sung to the prayse of the rightuous, frō al the endes of the worlde. Therefore I must speake: O my vnfruitfulness, o my pouerte, Wo is me, all is ful of synneres, which offende of purpose and malice. And therefore, (o thou that dwellest vpon the earth) there is at hōde for the, feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt. And yf he come out of the pyt, he shalbe takē with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shalbe opened, and the foundation of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greate crack, it shal haue a sore ruyne, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stacker like a dronken man, and be takē awaye like a tent. Hir misdedes shal lie so heuye vpō her, y she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORDE mustre together the lie hooste aboue, and y kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shalbe coupled together as prisoners be, and shalbe shut in one warde and punished innumerable daies. "The Moone and the Sonne shalbe ashamed, when the LORDE of hostes shal rule them at Ierusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent council.

The xxiij. Chapter.

OLORDE, thou art my God, I wil prayse the, and magnifie thy name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, accordinge to thiine olde counceils, truly and stedfastly. "Thou makest of townes, heapes of stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyed thou out of the cite, that they shal neuer be buylded againe. Therefore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the cities of the cruel heithen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a strēgth for the needful in his necessite. Thou art a defence agaynst euēl wether, a schadowe agaynst the hete. But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a strōge whyrle wynde, that casteth downe the boostinge of the vngodly, thou kepest men from heate with the shadow of the cloudes, thou cuttest of the braunches of tyrauntes.

B Morouer the LORDE of hoostes shal once prepare a feast for all people vpō the hill: "A plenteous, costly, pleasaunt wether, of fat and welfed beastes, of swete and most pure thinges. Vpon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale ŷ hūgeth before ŷ face of al people, and the coueringe wherwith all Gentiles are couered. "As for death, he shal ytterly cōsume it, The LORDE God shal wipe awaye the teares from all faces, and take awaye the confusō of his people thorow ŷ whole worlde. For ŷ LORDE himself hath sayde it.

At the same tyme shal it be sayde: lo, this is oure God in whō we put oure trust, and he hath healed vs. This is the LORDE that we haue wayted for: Let vs reioyse ⁊ delyte in his health. For the hōde of ŷ LORDE ceaseth vpō this hill. But Moab shalbe throsshē downe vnder him, like as the straw is trodē vnder fete in a dōge hill. For he shal stretch out his hōdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swymme. And with the power of his hondes shal he cast downe his hie pompe. As for his strōge holdes ⁊ hie wallēs: he shal buwe them, cast thē downe, and fell thē to the grounde in to dust.

The xxi. Chapter.

A THEN shal this songe be sunge in the londe of Iuda: "We haue a strōge citie, the wallēs ⁊ the ordinaūce shal kepe vs. Opē ŷ gates, ŷ the good people maye go in, which laboureth for the treuth. And thou, which art the doer and hast the matter in honde: shalt prouyde for peace, "euē the peace ŷ mē hope for in the. Hope stil in the LORDE, for in the LORDE God is euēlastinge strēgth. For why, it is he, ŷ bringeth lowe the hie mynded cītesyns, ⁊ casteth downe the proude cīties. He casteth thē to the grōūde, yee euē in to ŷ myre, ŷ they maye be trodē vnder the fete of the synple, ⁊ with the steppes of the poore. "Thou (LORDE) cōsidrest the path of ŷ rightuous, whether it be right, whether the waye of ŷ rightuous be right. Therefore (LORDE) we haue a respecte vnto the waye of thy iudgmentes, thy name and thy remēbraunce reioyse the soule. "My soule lusteth after the all the night lōge, ⁊ my mynde haisteth frely to the. For as soone as thy iudgment is knowne to the worlde, thē the inhabitours of the earth lerne rightuousnesse. But the vngodly (though he haue receaued grace) yet lerneth he not rightuousnesse, but in that place where he is punished, he offendeth, ⁊ feareth not the glory of the LORDE.

LORDE, they wil not se thine lie honde, but they shal se it, and be confounded: whē thou shalt deuoure them with the wrath of the people, and with the fyre of thine enemies. But vnto vs (LORDE) prouyde for peace: "for thou werkest in vs all oure workes. O LORDE oure God, though soch lordes haue dominacion vpon vs as knowe not the: yet graūte, that we maye only hope in the, and kepe thy name in remēbraunce. "The malicious Tyrauntes whē they die, are nether in life nor in the resurrectiō, for thou visitest thē and rootest thē out, and destroyest all the memoryall of them. Agayne, thou increcest the people (o LORDE), thou increcest the people, thou shalt be prayed and magnified in all ŷ endes of the worlde. The people that seke vnto the in trouble, that same aduersite which they complaine of, is vnto thē a chastenynge before the. Like as a wife with childe (whē hir trauayle cōmeth vpō her) "is ashamed, crieth and suffreth the payne: Euē so are we (o LORDE) in thy sight. The xxvij. Chapter.

A THEN the LORDE with his heuye, great and lōge swearde shal vyset Leuiathā, that invincible serpēt: eue<sup>b</sup> Leuiathā ſcroked serpent, and shal slaye the Wallfish in ſee. Who will compell me, that I greatly forgettinge all faithfulness, shulde burne it vp at once with thornes ⁊ bushes? Or who will enforce me to kepe or make peace? It wil come to this poynte, ſ<sup>c</sup> Iacob shalbe rooted againe, and Israel shalbe grene ⁊ beare floures, ⁊ they shal fyll ſ<sup>d</sup> whole worlde with their frute. And therefore shal the iniquite of Iacob be thus reconciled. And so shal he take awaye all ſ<sup>h</sup> frute of his synnes.

<sup>a</sup>As for aluter stones, he shal make them all as stones beaten to poulder: the Groues and Idols shal not stonde. The stronge cities shalbe desolate, and ſ<sup>i</sup> fayre cities shalbe left like a wildernes. The catel shal fede and lie there, and the shepe shal eate it vp. Their haruest shal be brent,<sup>e</sup> their wyues which were their bewtie when they came forth: shalbe defyled. In ſ<sup>l</sup> tyme shal ſ<sup>m</sup> LORDE shute from ſ<sup>n</sup> swifte water of Euphrates, vnto ſ<sup>o</sup> ryuer of Egypte. And there shal the children be chosen out one by one. Then shal the greate trompet be blown, so that those which haue bene destroyed in the Assirians londe, and those that be scatred abrode in Egypte: shal come ⁊ worshipec the LORDE at Ierusalem, vpō the holy mount.

Beholde, the strength and power of the LORDE shal breake in to the londe on euery syde, like a tempest of hale, that beareth downe stronge holdes, and like an horrible, mightie and ouer flowinge water. And the proude crowne of the dronken Ephraemites, shal be troden vnder foote. And as for the faydinge floure,<sup>e</sup> the glory of his pompe, which is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: it shal happen vnto him, as to an vntymely frute before the haruest come. And then shal the LORDE of hoostes be a ioyful crowne, and a glorious garlande vnto the remmaunt of his people. For ye cōforte youre selues thus: Tush, death ſhal not becomme a poynte, ſo as for hell, we haue made a cōdicion with it: that though there breake out eny ſore plage, it ſhal not come vpon vs. <sup>a</sup>For with diſceate wil we eſcape, and with nymbles we wil defende oure ſelues. <sup>b</sup>Therefore thus ſaieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil laye a ſtone in Sion, a greate ſtone, a coſtly corner ſtone for a ſure foundation: ſo who ſo putteth his truſt in him, ſhal not be confounded. Rightuouſnes wil I ſet vp agayne in ſe balance, and iudgment in the weightes. <sup>c</sup>The tēpeſt of hale ſhal take awaye youre refuge, that ye haue to diſceane withal, and ſo ouerflowinge waters ſhal breake downe youre ſtrōge holdes of diſſimulaciō. <sup>d</sup>Thus the appoyntmēt that ye haue made with death, ſhalbe done awaye, and the cōdicion that ye made with hell, ſhal not ſtōde. When the greate deſtructiō goeth thorow, it ſhal all to treade you, It ſhal take you quyte awaye before it. For it ſhal go forth early in the mornynge, and contynue only ſe daye and ſe night. And the very feare only ſhal teach you, when ye heare it. For ſe bedde ſhal be ſo narrowe that a mā cā not lye vpon it. And the coueringe to ſmall, that a mā maye not wynde him ſelf therein. <sup>e</sup>For the LORDE ſhal ſteppe forth as he dyd vpon the mount Perazim, and ſhal take on as he dyd vpon the dale of Gabaon: that he maye bringe forth his deuyce, his ſtraunge deuyce: and fulfil his worke, his wonderful worke. And therefore make no mockes at it, that youre captiuyte increaſe not: for I haue herde the LORDE of hoostes ſaye, that there ſhal come a ſoden deſtruction and plage vpon the whole earth. Take hede, and heare my voyce, pondre and merck my wordes wel. Goeth not the huſbonde man euer in due ſeaſon earneſtly to his londe? he moweth ſe ploweth his grounde to ſowe. And whē he hath made it playne, he ſoweth it with fitches or comyn. He ſoweth ſe wheate and Barlye in their place, Milium and Rye alſo in their place. And ſe he maye do it right, his God teacheth him and ſheweth him. For he treadeth not the fitches out with a wayne, nether bringeth he the cart here and there ouer the comyn, but he thrōſſeth ſe fitches out with a flale, and the comyn with a rod. As for the wheate, he gryndeth it to make bred thereof, In as moch as he can not bringe it to paſſe with treadinge out. For nether the brūſſinge that the cart wheles make, ner his beaſtes can grynde it. This and ſoch like thinges come of the LORDE of hoſtes which is maruelous in counſel, and greate in rightuouſneſſe.

The xxij. Chapter.

WO vnto the o Ariel Ariel, thou cite that David wāne. Take yet ſome yeares, and let ſome feaſtes yet paſſe ouer: then ſhal Ariel be beſeged, ſo that ſhe ſhal be heuy and ſorowful, and ſhal be vnto me euen as a lyon. For I wil laye ſege to the rounde aboute, and kepe ſe in with towers, and graue vp dykes agaynſt ſe. And thou ſhalt be brought lowe, and ſpeake out of the earth, and thy wordes ſhal go humbly out of ſe grounde. Thy voyce ſhal come out of the earth, like the voyce of a witch, and thy talkinge ſhal groane out of the myre. For the multitude of thine enemies ſhalbe like mealduſt. <sup>a</sup>And the nombre of Tyrauntes ſhalbe as ſe duſt that the wynde taketh awaye ſodenly.

Thou ſhalt be viſited of the LORDE of hoostes with thondre, earth quake, and with a greate crack, with the whyrle wynde, tempeſt, and with the flame of a conſumynge fyre. But now the multitude of all the people, that went out agaynſt Ariel: the whole hooste, the ſtronge holdes, and ſege: is like a dreame which apeareth in the night. <sup>b</sup>It is like as when an hungrie man dreameth that he is eatynge, and when he awaketh, he hath nothinge: like as when a thurſtie man dreameth that he is drinkinge, and when he awaketh, he is faynt, and his ſoule vnpacient.

So is the multitude of all people, that muſtre them ſelues agaynſt the hill of Sion. But ye ſhalbe at youre wittes ende, ye ſhalbe abashed: ye ſhal ſtackre, and rele to and fro. Ye ſhalbe drunken, but not of wyne. Ye ſhal fall, but not thorow drunkenes: For the LORDE ſhal geue you an hard ſlepinge ſprete, and holde downe youre eyes: namelye youre prophetes and heades which ſhulde ſe, them ſhal he couer. <sup>c</sup>And all viſions ſhalbe altogether be destroyed. For thus hath the LORDE spokē vnto me: <sup>a</sup>Like as the Lyon or lyōs whelpē roareth vpon the pray that he hath gotten, and is not afrayde, though <sup>ȝ</sup> multitude of shepardes crie out vpon him, nether abashed for all the heape of them: So shal the LORDE of hoostes come dōwne from the mount Sion, and defende his hill. Like as byrdes flote aboute their nestes, so <sup>b</sup>shal the LORDE of hoostes kepe, saue, defende and deliuer Ierusalem. Therefore (o ye childrē of Israel) turne agayne, like as ye haue exceded in youre goinge back. For in <sup>ȝ</sup> daye euery man shal cast out his Idols of syluer and golde, <sup>c</sup>which ye haue made with youre synful hondes. Assur also shalbe slayne with the swerde, not with a mans swerde. A swerde shal deuoure him, <sup>d</sup>but not a mans swerde. And he shal fle from the slaughter, and his seruantes shalbe taken prisoners. He shal go for feare to his stronge holdes, and his prynces shal fle from his badge. This hath <sup>ȝ</sup> LORDE spokē, whose light burneth in Sion, and his fyre in Ierusalem.

The xxxij. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, the kinge shal gouerne after <sup>ȝ</sup> rule of rightuousnes, and <sup>ȝ</sup> princes shal rule accordinge to the balauce of equite. He shalbe vnto mē, as a defence for the wynde, and as a refuge for the tempest, like as a ryuer of water in a thurstie place, and <sup>ȝ</sup> schadowe of a greate rock in a drie lōde. The eyes of the seinge shall not be dymme, and the eares of them that heare, shal take diligēt hede. The hert of the vnwise, shal attayne to knowlege, and the vnparite tūge shal speake planely and distinctly. Then shal the nygarde be no more called gentle, ner the churle lyberall. But the churle wil be churlishly mynded, and his hert wil worke euell and playe the ypocrite, and ymagyn abhominaciōs agaynst God, to make the hungrie leane, and to withholdē drinke from the thurstie: These are the perlous weapons of the cuvetous, these be his shameful counceils: that he maye begyle the poore with disceatful workes, yee euen there as he shulde geue sentence with the poore. <sup>e</sup>But the liberrall person ymagineth honest thinges, and commeth vp with honesty.

Vp (ye rich and ydle cities), harken vnto

my voyce. Ye careles cities, marcke my wordes. After yeaeres and dayes shal ye be brought in feare, o ye carelesse cities. For Haruest shalbe out, and the grape gatheringe shal not come. O ye rich ydle cities, ye that feare no parell, ye shalbe abashed and remoued: when ye se the barenesse, the nakednesse and preparinge to warre. Ye shal knock vpō youre brestes, because of the pleasaunt felde, and because of the fruteful vynyarde. My peoples felde shal bringe thornes and thistels, for in euery house is voluptuousnes <sup>ȝ</sup> in the cities, wilfulnes. The palaces also shalbe broken, and the greatly occupide cities desolate. The towers and bulwerkes shal become dennes for euermore, the pleasure of Mules shalbe turned to pasture for shepe: Vnto the tyme that <sup>ȝ</sup> sprete be poured vpon vs from aboue.

Then shal the wilderness be a fruteful felde <sup>ȝ</sup> the plenteous felde shalbe rekened for a wodde. Then shal equyte dwell in the deserte, and rightuousnesse in a fruteful londe. <sup>f</sup>And the rewarde of rightuousnesse shalbe peace, and hir frute rest and quietnesse for euer. <sup>g</sup>And my people shal dwell in the ynnnes of peace, in my tabernacle and pleasure, where there is ynough in thē all. And whē the hale falleth, it shal fall in the wodde and in the citie. O how happy shal ye be, whē ye shal safely sowe your sēde besyde all waters <sup>ȝ</sup> dryue thither the fete of youre oxē <sup>ȝ</sup> asses.

THEREFORE wo vnto the (o robber) <sup>a</sup>shalt not thou be robbed also? <sup>b</sup>and vnto the that laiest wait, as who saye there shulde no waite be layde for the? <sup>c</sup>Wo vnto the which doest hurte, euen so shalt thou be hurt also. And as thou layest wait, so shal wait be layde for the also.

LORDE be merciful vnto vs, we wait for the. <sup>d</sup>Thine arme is at a poynte to vyset vs, but be thou oure health in the tyme of trouble. Graūte that the people maye fle at the anger of thy voyce, <sup>e</sup>that at thy vpstondinge the Gentiles maye be scatred abroad, and that their spoyle maye be gathered, as the gres-hoppers are comonly gathered together in to the pyt. and rightousnesse. Let treuth and faithfulness be in hir tyme: power, health, wisdom, knowlege ⁊ the feare of God are hir treasure. Beholde, their angels crie with out, the messangers of peace wepe bytterly. The stretes are waist, there walketh no man therin, the appoyntment is broken, the cities are despised, they are not regarded, the desolate earth is in heuynes. Libanus taketh it but for a sporte, that it is hewen downe: Saron is like a wyldernes: Basā ⁊ Charnel are turned B vpside downe. And therefore saith ⁊ LORDE: I wil vp, now wil I get vp, now wil I aryse.
 * Ye shal conceaue stubble, and beare strawe, ⁊ youre sprete shal be the fyre, that it maye consume you: ⁊ the people shalbe burnt like lyme, ⁊ as thornes burne that are hewen of, ⁊ cast in the fyre.

Now herken to (ye that are farre of) how I do with them, ⁊ cōsidre my glory, ye that be at honde. The synners at Sion are afraide, a sodane fearfulness is come vpon the ypo-crytes. What is he amonge us (saye they) that will dwell by that consumyng fyre? which of vs maye abyde that euerlasting heate? <sup>a</sup> He that ledeth a godly life (saye I) ⁊ speaketh the treuth: He that abhorreth to do violence and disceate: he that kepeth his hōde that he touch no rewarde: which stoppeth his eares, that he heare no counceel agaynst the innocent: which holdeth downe his eyes, that he se no euil. He it is, that shal dwel on hie, whose sauegarde shalbe in the true rocke, to him shalbe geuen the right true meat ⁊ drynke. His eyes shal se the kynge in his glory: ⁊ in the wyde worlde, and his herte shal delite in the feare of God.
 C What shal then become of the scribe? <sup>c</sup> of the Senatoure? what of him that teacheth childrē? There shalt thou not se a people of a straunge tūge, to haue so diffused a lāguage, that it maye not be vnderstonde: nether so straunge a speache, but it shal be perceaued.

There shal Sion be sene, the head cite of oure solempne feastes. There shal thine eyes se Ierusalem that glorious habitation: the tabernacle that neuer shal remoue, <sup>d</sup> whose nales shal neuer be taken out worlde without ende, whose coardes euerychone shal neuer corruppe: for the glorious Magesty of the LORDE shal there be present amōge vs. In that place (where fayre broade ryuers ⁊ streames a) shal nether Gallye rowe, ner greate shippe sale. For the LORDE shalbe oure capteyne, the LORDE shalbe oure lawe geuer, The LORDE shalbe oure kinge, ⁊ he himself shalbe oure Sauoure. There are the coardes so layd abrode, that they cā not be better: The mast set vp of such a fashion, that no bāner ner sale hāgeth therō: but there is dealed greate spoyle, yee lame men runne after the pray. There lieth no mā that saietli: I am sick, but all euil is taken awaye from the people, that dwel there.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

COME ye Heithen ⁊ heare, take hede ye people. Herk thou earth ⁊ all that is therein: thou rounde cōpasse ⁊ al that groweth thervpon: for the LORDE is angrie with al people, ⁊ his displeasure is kindled agaynst all the multitude of them, to curse them, ⁊ to slaye them. So that their slayne shalbe cast out, ⁊ their bodies stincke: that euē the very hillis shalbe wet with the bloude of them. All the starres of heauen shalbe consumed, ⁊ the heauen shal folde together like a roll, <sup>1</sup> ⁊ all the starres therof shall fall, like as the leaues fall from the vynes and fygetrees. For my swearde (saith he) shalbe bathed in heauen, ⁊ shal immediatly come downe vpon Idumea, and vpon the people which I haue cursed for my vengeance.

And the LORDES swearde shalbe full of bloude, ⁊ be rustie with the fatnesse ⁊ bloude of lambes and gootes, with the fatnesse of neeres of the wethers. For the LORDE shal kyl a great offringe in Bosra, and in the londe of Idumea. There shal the Vnicornes fall
 B with the Bulles, (that is with the gĩautes) and their londe shalbe washed with bloude, ⁊ their grounde corrupte with fatnesse. Vnto the also (o Sion) shal come the daye of the vengeance of God, <sup>2</sup> and the yere when as thyne owne iudgmentes shalbe recompensed. Thy floudes shalbe turned to pyth, and thine earth to brymstone, ⁊ therewith shal the londe be kyndled, so that it shal not be quenched daye ner night: But smoke euermore, ⁊ so forth to lie waist. And no man shal go thorow thy londe for euer: <sup>3</sup> But Pellicanes, Storkes, great Oules, and Rauens shall haue it in possession, ⁊ dwell there in.

desolacion vpon it, & weye it with the stones of emptynes. When kinges are called vpo, there shalbe none, and all princes shalbe awaye. Thornes shal growe in their palaces, nettels & thistles in their stronge holdes, & the dragons maye haue their pleasure therein, & that they maye be a courte for Estriches. <sup>a</sup>There shal straunge viures and monstrous beastes mete one another, & the wyld kepe company together. There shal the lamia lye, & haue hir lodginge. There shall the hedghogge buylde, digge, be there at home, and bringe forth his yonge ones. There shal the kytes come together, ech one to his like.

<sup>b</sup>Seke thorow the scripture of the LORDE & rede it. There shal none of these thinges be left out, there shal not one (ner soch like) fayle. For what his mouth commaundeth, that same doth his sprete gather together (or fulfilleth). Vpon whom so ener & lot falleth, or to whom he dealeth it with the line: those shal possesse the enheritaunce from generacion to generacion, and dwel therein.

The rrrb. Chapter.

<sup>a</sup>BUT the deserte & wilderness shal reioyse, & & waiste grounde shal be glad, and flourish as the lilly. She shal flourish pleasantly, and be ioyful, and euer be geuyng of thanks more and more. For & glory of libanus, the bewty of Charnel & Sarō shalbe geuen her. These shal knowe the honoure of the LORDE, and the magesty of oure God. And therefore strength & weake hōdes, and conforte the feble knees. <sup>c</sup>Saye vnto them that are of a fearful hert: Be of good chere, and feare not. Beholde: youre God cometh, to take vengeance & to rewarde, God cometh his owne self, and wil delyuer you. <sup>d</sup>Then shal the eyes of the blinde be lightned, and the eares of the deaff opened. Then shal the lame man leape as an herte, & the domme māns geue shal geue thanks.

<sup>e</sup>In the wilderness also there shal welles springe, and floudes of water in the deserte. The drie grounde shal turne to ryuers, and the thurstie to springes of water. Where as dragons dwelt afore, there shal growe swete floures and grene russions. There shalbe footpathes & comon stretes, this shalbe called the holy waye. No vclene person shal go thorow it, for the LORDE himself shal go with the that waye, and the ignoraūt shal not erre. There shalbe no lyon, and no rauysching beast shall come therein nor be there, but men shal go there fre and safe. <sup>f</sup>And the redemed of the LORDE shal conuerte, and come to Sion with thankesgeuinge. Euerlastinge ioye shal they haue, pleasure & gladnesse shalbe amonge them, And as for all sorow and heuynes, it shal vanish awaye.

The rrrbi. Chapter.

IN the xiiij. yere of kinge Ezechias, <sup>g</sup>came Semacherib kinge of the Assirians downe, to laye sege vnto all the stronge cities of Iuda. And the kinge of the Assiriā sent Rabsaches from Lachis toward Ierusalem, agaynst kinge Ezechias, with a greuouse hooste, which set him by the condite of the ouerpole, in the waye that goeth thorow & fullers lōde. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim <sup>h</sup>Helchias sonne the presyident, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary.

And Rabsaches sayde vnto them: Tel Ezechias, that the greate kinge of Assiria sayeth thus vnto him: What presumption is this, that thou trustest vnto? Thou thinkest (peraduecture) that thou hast counsel & power ynough, to mayntene this warre: or els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest thy self of fro me? lo, Thou putttest thy trust in a broken staff of rede <sup>i</sup>(I meane Egipte) which he that leaneth vpon, it goeth in to his honde & shuteth him thorow. Euen so is Pharaο the kinge of Egipte, vnto all the that trust in him. But yf thou woldest saye to me: We trust in & LORDE oure God: A goodly god, in dede: whose hie places & alteres Ezechias toke downe, and commaunded Iuda and Ierusalem, to worshipe only before the alter. Abyde the, thou hast made a condicion with my lorde the kinge of the Assiriā, that he shulde geue the two thousande horses: Art thou able to set mē there vp? Seinge now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest prynce that my lorde hath, how darrest thou trust in & charettes and horse men of Egipte? will? The LORDE sayde vnto me: go downe in to that londe, that thou mayest destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna ⁊ Iohah vnto Rabsaches: Speake to vs thy seruantes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstonde it well: And speake not to vs in the lewes tunge, lest the folcke heare, which lieth vpon the wall. Then answered Rabsaches: Thinke ye, y the kinge sent me to speake this only vnto you? Hath he not sent me to the also, that lie vpō the wall? that they be not cōpelled to eate their owne donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

And Rabsaches stode stiff, ⁊ cried with a loude voyce in the lewes tige, and sayde: Now take hede, how the greate kinge of the Assiriās geueth you warnynge. Thus saith the kinge: Let not Ezechias disceau you, for he shal not be able to delyuer you. Morouer, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORDE, when he saith: The LORDE with out doute shal defende vs, ⁊ shal not geue ouer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of the Assiriās, beleue him not. But thus saith the kinge of Assiria: opteyne my fauoure, encline to me: So maye euery mā enioye his vyuyardes and fygetrees, and drinke the water of his cisterne: vnto the tyme that I come myself, ⁊ bringe you in to a londe, y is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both sown with sede, and planted with vynyardes. Let not Ezechias disceau you, when he sayeth vnto you: the LORDE shal delyuer us.

“Might the goddesses of the Gentiles kepe euerymans londe, from the power of the kinge of the Assirians? Wher is the God of hemath ⁊ Arphad? Where is the God of Sepharnaim? And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde? Or which of all the goddesses of the lōdes, hath deliuered their countre out of my power, so that the LORDE shulde delyuer Ierusalem from my honde? Vnto this, Ezechias messaungers helde their tungen, and answered not one worde: for the kinge had charged them, that they shulde geue him none answer. So came Eliachim Elchias sonne the presidēt, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, ⁊ tolde him the wordes of Rabsaches.

The rrrvñj. Chapter.

WHEN Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes,<sup>a</sup> ⁊ put on a sack cloth, ⁊ went in to the temple of the LORDE. But he sent Eliachim the Presidēt, Sobna the scribe with the eldest prestes clothed in sack,<sup>b</sup> vnto the Prophet Esay the sonne of Amos, ⁊ they sayde vnto him: Thus saith Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of plage ⁊ of wrath: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bringe it forth. The LORDE thy God (no doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabsaches, whom his lorde y kinge of the Assirians hath sent, to defie ⁊ blaspheme the Iyunge God: with soch wordes, as the LORDE thy God hath herde right well. And therefore lift vp thy prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruantes of kinge Ezechias came to Esay.

And Esay gaue them this answer: Saie thus vnto youre lorde: thus saith the LORDE: Be not afrayde of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherwith the kinge of Assiriās seruantes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him,<sup>c</sup> as soone as he heareth it, he shal go agayne in to his countre, there will I destroye him with the swerde. Now when Rabsaches returned, he founde y kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vnderstonde, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came a rumoure, y Taracha kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

And when the kinge of Assiria herde y, he sent other messaungers to kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thus to Ezechias kinge of Iuda: Let not thy God disceau the, in whom thou hopest, ⁊ sayest: Ierusalē shal not be geuē in to the hondes of the kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subuerted, ⁊ hoped thou to escape? Were the people of the Gētiles (whom my progenitours coquered) deliuered at any tyme thorow their goddesses? As namely, Gozan, Haran, Rezech,<sup>d</sup> ⁊ the childrē of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the kinge of Hemath, ⁊ the kinge of Arphad, ⁊ the kinge of the citie Sepharnaim, Eua and Aua? Now when Ezechias had receaued y lettre of the messaungers, ⁊ red it, he went vp in to the house of the LORDE, ⁊ opened the lettre before y LORDE. And Ezechias prayed before the LORDE on this maner: O LORDE of hoostes, thou God of Israel, which dwellest

D Esay the sonne of Amos sent vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus saith & LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me, as touchinge Sennacherib, this is the answer, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge him: Despised art thou, & mocked (o daughter of Sion) he hath shaken his heade at the, o daughter of Ierusalem.<sup>c</sup> But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blasphemed? <sup>d</sup>And agaynst whō hast thou lifted vp thy voyce, & exalted thy proude lokes? euen agaynst the holy one of Israel. And there wil I cut downe the hie Cedre trees & the fayrest Fyrre trees. I wil vp in to the heyth of it & in to the chefest of his timbre woddēs. Yf there be no water, I wil graue & drynke. And as for waters of defence, I shal drie them vp with the fete of myne hooste. Yee (saist thou) hast thou not herde, what I haue taken in honde, & brought to passe of olde tyme? That same wil I do now also: waist, destroye, & bringe the stronge cities vnto heapes of stones. For their inhabitants shalbe like lame men, brought in feare & confounded. They shalbe like the grasse & grene herbes in the felde, like the hay vpō house toppes, that wythereth, afore it be growne vp.

E I knowe thy wayes, thy goinge forth & thy cōmyng home, yee & thy madnesse agaynst me. Therefore thy furiousnesse agaynst me, & thy pryde is come before me. I wil put a

I wil geue the also this token (o Ezechias) this yere shalt thou eate that is kepte in stoare, & the next yere soch as groweth of himself, and in the thirde yere ye shal sowe and reape, yee ye shal plante vynyards, and enioye the frutes therof.

And soch of the house of Iuda as are escaped, shal come together, and the remnaunt shal take rote beneth, & bringe forth frute aboue. For the escaped shal go out of Ierusalē, & the remnaunt from the mount Sion. And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe. Therefore thus saith the LORDE, cōcernynge the kinge of the Assirians: He shall not come in to the cite, and shal shute no arowe in to it, there shall no shilde hurte it, nether shal they graue aboute it. The same waye that he came, shal he returne, and not come at this cite, saith the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the cite (saith he) for myne owne, & for my seruante Dauid's sake.

Thus the angel went forth,<sup>e</sup> and slewe of the Assirians hooste, an clxxxv. thousande.<sup>f</sup> And when men arose vp early (at Ierusalē:) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. So Sennacherib the kinge of the Assirians brake vp, and dwelt at Ninieue. Afterwarde it chaunced, as he prayed in the Tēple of Nesrah his god, that Adramalech and Sarazer his owne sonnes slewe him with the swearde, and fled in to the londe of Ararat. And Esarhadon his sonne reigned after him.

NOT longe afore this, was Ezechias dead-sick: <sup>g</sup>And the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos came vnto him, and sayde: Thus commaundeth the LORDE: Set thyne house in ordre, for thou must dye, and shalt not escape. Then Ezechias turned his face towarde the wall, & prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (o LORDE) that I haue walked before the in treuth and a sted-fast hert, and haue done the thinge that is pleasaunt to the. And Ezechias wepte sore. Thē sayde God vnto Esay: Go and speake vnto Ezechias: The LORDE God of Dauid thy father sendeth & this worde: <sup>h</sup>I haue herde thy prayer, and considred thy teares: beholde, I will put xv yeares mo vnto thy life, and delyuer the and the cite also, from the honde of the kinge of Assiria, for I will defende the cite. "And take the this token of the LORDE, y he will do it, as he hath spoken: Beholde, I will returne the shadowe of Ahas Diall, y now is layed out with the Sonne, and bringe it ten degrees backward. So the Sonne turned ten degrees backward, the which he was descended afore.

A thankesgeuyng, which Ezechias kinge of Iuda wrote, when he had bene sicke, & was recovered.

C I thought I shulde haue gone to the gates of hell in my best age, and haue wanted the residue of my yeares.

I spake within my self: I shal neuer viset the LORDE God in this life: I shal neuer se man, amonge the dwellers of the worlde.

Myne age is folden vp together and taken awaye fro me, like a sheperdes cottage: my lyfe is hewen of, like as a weeuier cutteth of his webb.

Whyl I was yet takinge my rest, he hewed me of, & made an ende of me in one daie.

"I thought I wolde haue lyued vnto the morow, but he brussed my bones like a lyon, and made an ende of me in one daie.

Then chatred I like a swalowe, and like a Crane, and mourned as a doue.

I lift vp myne eyes in to y hight: O LORDE, (sayde I) violence is done vnto me, be thou surtief for me.

D What shal I speake or saye, that he maye this doo? y I maye lyue out all my yeares, yee in the bytternesse of my life?

Verely (LORDE,) men must lyue in bytternesse, & all my life must I passe ouer therin: For thou raysest me vp, and wakest me. But lo, I wilbe wel content with this bytternes.

Neuertheles my cōuersacion hath so pleased y, that thou woldest not make an ende of my life, so that thou hast cast all my synnes behynde thy backe.

For hell prayseth not the, death doth not magnifie the.

They that go downe in to the graue, prayset not thy treuth: but the lyuynge, yee the lyuynge acknowledge the, like as I do this daie.

The father telleth his children of thy faithfulness.

Delyuer vs (o LORDE) and we wil synge prayses in thy house, all the dayes of oure life.

And Esay sayde: take a playster of fyges, and laye it vpon the sore, so shal it be whole. Then saide Ezechias: O what a greate thinge is this, that I shal go vp in to the house of the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

A T the same tyme Merodach Baladā,<sup>a</sup> Baladās sonne kinge of Babilon, sent lettres and presentes to Ezechias. For he vnderstode, how that he had bene sick, & was recovered agayne. "And Ezechias was glad therof, & shewed them the cōmodities of his treasure: of syluer, of golde, of spyes & rootes, of precious oyles, all that was in his cubboordes and treasure houses. There was not one thinge in Ezechias house, & so thorow out all his kingdome, but he let them se it.

Thē came Esay the prophet to kinge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue y men sayde, and from whence came they vnto the? Ezechias answered: They came out of a farre cōuntre vnto me: out of Babilon. Esay sayde: what haue they looked vpon in thyne house? Ezechias answerde: All that is in myne house, haue they seue: and there is nothinge in my treasure, but I shewed it them.

Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: "Vnderstode the worde of the LORDE of hoostes, Beholde, the tyme wil come, that euery thinge which is in thine house, and all that thy progenitours haue layde vp in stoare vnto this daie, shalbe caried to Babilon, and nothinge left behinde. This sayeth the LORDE. Yee and parte of thy sonnes that shal come of the, and whom thou shalt get, shalbe caried hence, and become gelded chamberlaines in the kinge of Babilons courte: Then sayde Ezechias to Esay: Now God prospere his owne counsell, which thou hast tolde me. He sayde morouer: So that there be peace, and faithfulness in my tyme.

A BE still (ye floudes) and herken vnto me. Be stronge ye people, Come hither, and shew youre cause, we will go to the lawe together. Who rayseth vp  $\hat{y}$  iuste from the rysinge of the Sonne, and calleth him to go forth? Who casteth downe the people, and subdueth the kinges before him: that he maye throwe them all to the grounde with his swearde, and scatere them like stuble with his bowe? He foloweth vpon them, and goeth safely himself, and cometh in no footpath with his fete. Who hath made, created, and called the generacions from the begynnyng? Euen I the LORDE, " which am the first, and with the last.

Beholde ye fles, that ye maye feare, and ye endes of the earth, that ye maye be abashed, draw nye, and come hither. Euery man hath exorted his neyghboure, and brother, and bydden him be stronge. The Smyth comforted the moulder,  $\tau$  the Ironsmyth the hammerman, sayenge: It shalbe good, that we fasten this cast worke: and then they fastened it with nailes, that it shulde not be moued. And thou Israel my seruau: Iacob my electe sede of Abrahā my beloued, whom I led from the endes of the earth by the honde: For I called the from farre,  $\tau$  saide vnto the: Thou shalt be my seruau: <sup>a</sup> I haue chosen the,  $\tau$  will not cast  $\hat{y}$  awaye: be not a frayde, for I wil be with  $\hat{y}$ . Loke not behinde  $\hat{y}$ , for I wil be thy God, to strēgth  $\hat{y}$ , helpe  $\hat{y}$ ,  $\tau$  to kepe  $\hat{y}$  with this right hōde of myne. Beholde, all they that resist the, shal come to confucion and shame: and thine aduersaries shalbe destroyed  $\tau$  brought to naught. So that who so seketh after them, shal not fynde them. Thy destroyers shal perish,  $\tau$  so shall they that vndertake to make battell agaynst the. For I thy LORDE  $\tau$  God, wil strength thy right honde. Euen I that saye vnto the: Feare not, I wil helpe the. Be not a frayde thou litle worne Iacob, and thou despyed Israel: For I wil helpe the, saith the LORDE,  $\tau$  the holyone of Israel thine avenger. Beholde, I wil make the a treadinge cart  $\tau$  a new flale,  $\hat{y}$  thou mayest throsshe  $\tau$  grynde the moun-

When the thurstie and poore seke water  $\tau$  C fynde none, <sup>c</sup>  $\tau$  when their tunge is drie of thirst: <sup>e</sup> I geue it them, saith the LORDE. I the God of Israel forsake them not. I bringe forth floudes in the hilles,  $\tau$  welles in the playne feldes. I turne  $\hat{y}$  wildernes to ryuers, and the drie loude to condytes of water. I plante in the wayst grounde trees of Cedre, Boxe, Myrre and olyues. And in the drie, I set Fyrre trees, elmes and hawthornes together. All this do I,  $\hat{y}$  they altogether maye se and marcke, perceaue with their hertes,  $\tau$  conside: that the honde of the LORDE maketh these thinges, and that the holyone of Israel bringeth them to passe. Stonde at youre cause (saith the LORDE) and bringe forth youre strōgest grounde, counceleth the kinge of Iacob. Let the goddes come forth them selues, and shewe vs the thinges  $\hat{y}$  are past, what they be: let thē declare thē vnto vs,  $\hat{y}$  we maye take them to herte, and knowe them hereafter. Ether, let thē shewe vs thinges for to come, and tel vs what shalbe done hereafter: so shal we knowe, that they be goddes. Shewe somthinge, ether good or bad, so wil we both knowlege  $\hat{y}$  same,  $\tau$  tel it out.

Beholde, ye goddes are of naught,  $\tau$  youre D makinge is of naught, but abhominacion hath chosen you. Neuertheles I haue waked vp one from the North,  $\tau$  he shal come. A BEHOLDE now therefore, this is my seruau<sup>t</sup> whom I will kepe to my self: <sup>a</sup>my electe, In whom my soule shalbe pacified. I will geue him my sprete, that he maye shewe forth iudgment & equyte amonge the Gentiles. He shal not be an outcryer, ner an hie mynded person. His voyce shall not be herde in <sup>y</sup> stretes. A brussed rede shal he not breake, & the smoking flax shal he not quench: but faithfully & truly shal he geue iudgmēt. He shal nether be ouersene ner haistie, that he maye restore rightuousnesse vnto the earth: & the Gētiles also shal kepe his lawes. <sup>b</sup>For thus saie<sup>t</sup>h God the LORDE vnto him (Euen he that made the heauens, and spred them abrode, & set forth the earth with hir increase: which geueth breath vnto the people that is in it, & to them that dwel therin) I the LORDE haue called <sup>y</sup> in rightuousnesse, & led the by the honde. Therefore wil I also defende the, & geue the for a couenaunt of the people, & to be the light of the Gētiles. <sup>c</sup>That thou mayest open the eyes of the blinde, let out the prysoners, & them that syt in darknesse, out of the dongeon house. I myself, whose name is the LORDE, which geue my power to none other, nether myne honoure to the goddes: shewe you these new tidinges, and tel you them or they come, for olde thinges also are come to passe.

<sup>d</sup>Synge therefore vnto the LORDE, a new songe of thākes geuyng, blow out his prayse vnto the ende of the worlde. They that be vpon the see, & all that is therin, prayse him, the Iles & they that dwel in them. Let the wilderness with hir cities lift vp hir voyce, the townes also that be in Cedar. Let them be glad that syt vpon rockes of stone, and let them crie downe from the hie mountaynes: ascribinge almightynes vnto the LORDE, & magnifieng him amonge the Gētiles. The LORDE shal come forth as a gyaunte, and take a stomacke to him like a fresh man of warre. He shal roare and crie, and overcome his enemies.

I haue longe holden my peace (saie<sup>t</sup>h the LORDE) shulde I therefore be still, and kepe sylence for euer? I will crie like a traueling woman, and once wil I destroye, and deuoure. I wil make waist both mountayne & hill, & drie vp euery grene thinge, that groweth thereon. I wil drie vp the floudes of water, & drinke vp the ryuers. I wil bringe the blinde in to a strete, that they knowe not: and lede them in to a fote<sup>h</sup>path, that they are ignoraunt in. I shal make darknesse light before thē, & the thinge <sup>y</sup> is croked, to be straight. These thinges will I do, & not forget them. <sup>e</sup>And therefore let them conuer<sup>t</sup>e, and be ashamed earnestly, that hope in Idols, & saye to fashioned ymages: ye are oure godes.

Heare, o ye deaf men, and sharpen youre sightes to se (o ye blinde.) <sup>f</sup>But who is blynder, thē my seruau<sup>t</sup>? Or so deaf, as my messaungers, whom I sent vnto them? For who is so blynde as my people, & they <sup>y</sup> haue the rule of them? They are like, as yf thou vnderstodest moch, and kepest nothing: or yf one herde well, but were not obedient. The LORDE be merciful vnto them for his rightuousnesse sake, that his worde might be magnified & prayed. But it is a myscheuous & wiked people. Their yonge men belonge all to the snare, & shal be shut in to preson houses. <sup>g</sup>They shal be caried awaye captiue and no man shal lowse them. They shal be trodē vnder fote, <sup>h</sup>& no man shal labour to bringe thē agayne. But who is he amonge you, <sup>y</sup> pondreth this in his mynde, <sup>y</sup> considreth it, & taketh it for a warnyng in tyme to come?

<sup>i</sup>Who suffred Iacob to be trodden vnder fote, and Israel to be spoyled? dyd not the LORDE? Now haue we synned agaynst him, and haue had no delite to walke in his wayes, nether bene obedient vnto his lawe. Therefore hath he poured vpon vs his wroothful displeasure, and strōge batell, which maketh vs haue to do on euery syde, yet will we not vnderstōde: He burneth vs vp, yet syncketh it not in to oure hartes.

water, I was by the, that the strōge floudes shulde not pluck ꝑ awaye: When thou walkest in the fyre, it shal not burne ꝑ, and the flame shal not kinde vpon the. For I am the LORDE thy God, the holyone of Israel, thy Sauoure. I gaue Egipte for thy delyuerance, the Moryas and the Sabees for the: because thou wast deare in my sight, and because I set by the, and loued the. <sup>a</sup> I pilled all men for the, and delyuered vp all people for thy sake, <sup>b</sup> that thou shuldest not feare, for I was with the. B Bringe forth that people, whether they haue eyes or be blynde, <sup>c</sup> deaf or haue eares. All nacions shal come in one, and be gathered in one people. But which amonge yonder goddes shal declare soch thinges, <sup>d</sup> and tell vs what is to come? Let them bringe their witnesss, so shal they be fre: for thē men shal heare it, and saye: it is truth. But I bringe you witnesss (saith the LORDE) euen those that are my seruantes, whom I haue chosen: to the intent that ye might be certified, and geue me faithful credence: yee and to cōsidre, that I am he, before whom there was neuer eny God, and that there shalbe none after me. <sup>e</sup> I am only the LORDE, and without me is there no Sauoure. I geue warnynge, I make whole, I teach you, that there shulde be no straunge God amonge you. And this recorde must ye beare me youre selues (saith the LORDE) that I am God. And euen he am I from the begynnynge, and there is none, <sup>f</sup> that can take eny thinge out of my honde. And what I do, can no man change.

C Thus saith the LORDE the holy one of Israel youre redeemer: For youre sake I will sende to Babilon, and bringe all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that boost them of their shippes: Euen I the LORDE youre holy one which haue made Israel, and am youre kinge. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE (Euen he that maketh a waye in the see, <sup>g</sup> and a footpath in the mightie waters: which bringeth forth the charettes and horses, the hooste and the power, that they maye fall a slepe and neuer ryse, and be extincte, like as tow is quenched.

<sup>h</sup> Ye remembre not thinges of olde, and regarde nothinge that is past. Therefore beholde, I shal make a new thinge, and shortly shall it appeare: Ye shall well knowe it, I tolde it you afore, but I will tell it you agaane.

I will make stretes in the deserte, and ryuers of water in the wilderness. The wilde beastes shal worshippe me: the dragon, and the Estrich. For I shall geue water in ꝑ wilderness, and streames in the deserte: that I maye geue drinke to my people, whom I chose. This people haue I made for my self, and they shal shewe forth my prayse. For thou (Iacob) woldest not call vpon me, but thou haddest an vulust towarde me, o Israel. Thou gauest me not thy yonge beastes for burntofferings, nether didest honoure me with thy sacrifices. Thou boughtest me no deare spice with thy money, nether pourested the fat of thy sacrifices vpon me. <sup>i</sup> Howbeit I haue not bene chargeable vnto the in offrings, nether greuous in Incense.

<sup>j</sup> But thou hast ladē me with thy synnes, and weered me with thy vngodlynnes: Where as I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne selves sake do awaye thine offences, and forget thy synnes: so that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. Put me now in remembrance (for we will reason together) <sup>k</sup> and shewe what thou hast for the, to make the quyte. <sup>l</sup> Thy first father offended sore, and thy rulers haue synned agaynst me. poure my sprete vpon thi sede, and myue encrease vpō thy stocke. They shal growe together, like as the grasse, and as the Willies by the waters side. One will saye: I am the LORDES. Another wil call vnder the name of Iacob. The thirde shal subscriue with his honde vnto ſ LORDE, and geue him self vnder the name of Israel.

B Morouer, thus hath the LORDE spokē: <sup>a</sup>euē the kinge of Israel, and his avenger, ſ LORDE of hoostes: I am the first, and the last, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that euer was like me, which am from euerlastinge? Let him shewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be lickened vnto me. Let him tell you forth planely thiges, that are past and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or stoppe. For haue not I euer tolde you hyther to, & warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre selues. Is there eny God excepte me? or eny maker, that I shulde not knowe him?

Wherefore all caruers of Idols are but wayne, and their labour lost. They must beare recorde them selues, that (seinge they can nether se ner vnderstonde) they shalbe confounded. <sup>b</sup>Who shulde now make a god, or fashiō an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge? Beholde all the felashippe of thē must be brought to confucion. Let all the workmasters of them come and stonde together from amonge men: they must be abashed and confounded one with another. The snyth taketh yron, and tempred it with hote coles, and fashioneth it with hammers, & maketh it with all the strength of his armes: Yee somtyme he is faynt for very hunger, and so thurstie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ymage caruer) taketh me the tymbre, and spreadeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with some coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, ād squareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and acordinge to the bewtie of a man: that it maye stonde in the temple.

C Morouer, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: He bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymbre of the wodde. Or els the Fyrre trees which he planted himself, ād soch as the rayne hath swelled, which wodde serueth for mē to burne. Of this he taketh and warneth himself withall: he maketh a

One peece he burneth in the fyre, with another he rosteth flesh, that he maye eate roste his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himself, and saith: A ha: I am well warned, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the residue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himself. He kneleth before it, he worshippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and sayeth: delyuer me, for thou art my god.

<sup>d</sup>Yet men nether considre ner vnderstonde, because their eyes are stopped, that they can not se: and their hertes, that they can not perceaue. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderstōdinge) to thinke thus: I haue brēt one peece in the fyre, I haue baked bred with ſ coles there of, I haue roasted flesh withall, & eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten peece of wodde? The kepinge of dust, and folishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not I erre?

Cōsidre this (o Iacob and Israel) for thou art my seruauēt. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne ſ agayne vnto me, & I will delyuer ſ.

E Be glad ye heauens, whom the LORDE hath made, let all ſ is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. ## The xlv. Chapter.

A THUS saith the LORDE vnto Cyrus his anoynted,<sup>a</sup> whom he ledeth by  $\hat{y}$  right hōde: that the people maye fall downe before him: I wil lowse the gyrdle of kinges,  $\hat{y}$  they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their dores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straight. I shal breake the brasen dores,  $\tau$  burst the yron barres. I shal geue the the hyd treasure,  $\tau$  the thinge which is secretly kepte: that thou mayest knowe,  $\hat{y}$  <sup>b</sup> I the God of Israel haue called the by thy name: and that for Iacob my seruauant sake,  $\tau$  for Israel my chosen. For I called the by thy name, and ordered the, or euer thou knewest me: Euen I the LORDE, <sup>c</sup> before whom there is none other, for without me there is no God. I haue prepared the, <sup>d</sup> or euer thou knewest me: that it might be knowne from the rysinge of the Sonne to the goinge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. <sup>e</sup> For I am the LORDE,  $\tau$  there is els none. It is I  $\hat{y}$  created the light and darcknes, I make peace and trouble: Yee euen I the LORDE do all these thynges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne rightuousnes. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth health, and therby shal rightuousnes florish. Euen I the LORDE shal bringe it to passe.

B Wo be vnto him that chydeth with his maker, the potsherde with the potter. Saith  $\hat{y}$  claye to the potter: What makest thou? or, thy worke serueth for nothig? Wo be vnto him,  $\hat{y}$  saith to his father: why begetteth thou? And to his mother: why bearest thou? Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one  $\tau$  maker of Israel: Axe me of thynges for to come, concernynge my sonnes: and put me in remēbraunce, as touchinge the workes of my hōdes: I haue made the earth, and created mā vpon it. With my hondes haue I spred forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooste therof. I shal wake him vp with rightuousnesse, and ordre all his wayes. He shal buyld my cite,  $\tau$  let out my prisoners:  $\tau$  that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer: The occupiers of Egipte, the marchauntes of the Moryans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shalbe thine, they shal folowe the, and go with cheynes vpon their fete. For thus sayeth the LORDE: <sup>g</sup> euen he that created heauen, the God  $\hat{y}$  made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth: I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be inhabited: Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. The things that I shewed you euer sence the begynnynge: Hane I not brought thē to passe, immediatly as they came out of my mouth, and declared them? And they are come? Howbeit I knewe that thou art obstinate, and that thy neck hath an yron vane, and that thy brow is of brasse. Neuertheles I haue euer sence the begynnynge shewed the of things for to come, and declared thē vnto the, or euer they came to passe: that thou shuldest not saye: myne Idol hath done it, my carued or cast ymage hath shewed it. Heare & conside all these things, whether it was ye that prophecied thē: But as for me, I tolde the before at the begynnynge, new & secrete things, ſ thou knewest not of: <sup>a</sup> And some done now not of olde tyme, wherof thou neuer herdest, before they were brought to passe: that thou canst not saye: I knewe of them. Morouer there be some wherof thou hast nether herde ner knowne, nether haue they bene opened vnto thine eares afore tyme. For I knew that thou woldest maliciously offende, therefore haue I called the a transgressoure, euen from thy mothers wombe.

Neuertheles for my names sake, I haue withdrawn my wrath, and for myne honours sake I haue ouersene the, so that I haue not rooted the out. Beholde I haue poured the, and not for moneye. I haue chosen the in the fyre of pouerte, And that only for myne owne sake, <sup>c</sup> for I geue myne Honoure to none other, that thou shuldest not despise me. Herken vnto me o Iacob, <sup>d</sup> & Israel whō I haue called. I am euen he that is, I am ſ first and the last. My honde is the foundation of the earth, & my right honde spanneth ouer the heauens. As soone as I called thē they were there. Gather you all together, ad herken: Which of yonder goddes hath declared this, that the LORDE wil do by the kinge of Babilon (whom he loueth & fauoureth) and by the Caldees his arme? I my self alone haue tolde you this before. Yee I shal call him and bringe him forth, & geue him a prosperous iourneye. Come nye & heare this: haue I spokē eny thinge darekly? sence the begynnynge? whē a thinge begynneth, I am there.

Wherefore the LORDE God with his sprete hath sent me, And thus saieth the LORDE thine avenger, the holyone of Israel: <sup>e</sup> I am ſ LORDE thy God, which teach the profitable things, and lede ſ the waye, that thou shuldest go. Yf thou wilt now regarde my cōmaundement, thy welthynes shalbe as the water streame: & thy rightuousnes as the waves flowinge in the see. Thy sede shalbe like as the sonde in the see, & the frute of thy body, like the grauel stones therof: Thy name shal not be roted out, nor destroyed before me. Ye shal go awaye from Babilon, and escape the Caldees with a mery voyce. <sup>f</sup> This shalbe spoken of, declared abrode, & go forth vnto the ende of the worlde: so that it shalbe sayde: The LORDE hath defended his seruante Iacob, that they suffred no thurst, <sup>g</sup> whē they trauayled in the wilderness. He claue the rockes a sonder, and the water gushed out. As for the vngodly, they haue no peace, saieith the LORDE.<sup>h</sup>

 ſ shadowe of his hounde hath he defended me, and hyd me in his quyuer, as a good arowe, and sayde vnto me: 'Thou art my seruau<sup>t</sup> swerde I: I shal lese my labour, I shal spende my strength in vayne. Neuertheles, I wil commytte my cause and my worke vnto the LORDE my God. And now saieth the LORDE (eue he that fashioned me fro my mothers wombe to be his seruau<sup>t</sup>, that I maye bringe Iacob agayne vnto him: howbeit, Israel will not be gathered vnto hi agayne.

 In whose sight I am greate, which also is my

Then shal Sion saye: God hath forsaken me, and the LORDE hath forgottē me.
<sup>e</sup> Doth a wife forget the childe of hir wombe, ad the some whō she hath borne? And though she do forget, yet wil not I forget the.
 Beholde, I haue written the vp vpon my hondes, thy walles are enen in my sight. They that haue broken the downe, shal make haist to buylde the vp agayne: and they that made the waist, shal dwell in the. Lift vp thine eyes, and loke aboute the: all these shal gather them together, and come to the. As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE) thou shalt put them all vpō the, as an apparell, and gyrd thē to the, as a bryde doth hir Jewels. As for thy londe that lieth desolate, waisted &

And therefore thus saieth the LORDE God:

 They shal bringe by thy sonnes in their putteth his trust in me, shal not be confounded.

 Who spoyleth the giaunte of his pray? or who taketh the presoner from the mightie?
 And therefore thus saieth the LORDE: The

The i. Chapter.

A THUS saith the LORDE: Where is the bill of youre mothers deuorcenēt, that I sent vnto her?<sup>a</sup> or who is the vsurer, to whō I solde you? Beholde, for youre owne offēces are ye solde: <sup>b</sup>τ because of youre transgression, is youre mother forsakē. For why wolde no mā receaue me, when I came? τ when I called, no man gaue me answer. Was my hōde clene smytē of, that it might not helpe? or, had I not power to delyuer? <sup>c</sup>lo, at a worde I drike vp the see, τ of water floudes I make drie lōde: so <sup>d</sup>ȳ for want of water, the fish corruppe and die of thirst. <sup>e</sup>As for heauen, I clooth it with dareknesse, and put a sack vpon it.

B The LORDE God hath genē me a wel lerned tūge, so that I can conforte them which are troubled,<sup>f</sup> yee τ <sup>g</sup>ȳ in due season. He waked myne eare vp by tymes in <sup>h</sup>ȳ mornynge (as <sup>i</sup>ȳ scolemasters do) <sup>j</sup>ȳ I might herkē. The LORDE God hath opened myne eare, therefore cā I not saye naye,<sup>k</sup> ner with drawe my self, but I offre my backe vnto <sup>l</sup>ȳ smyters, and my chekes to the nyppers. I turne not my face fro shame ad spittinge, for the LORDE God helpeth me, therefore shal I not be cōfounded. I haue hardened my face like a flynt stone, for I am sure, that I shal not come to confucion. Myne aduocate speaketh for me, who wil then go with me to lawe? Let vs stōde one agaynst another: yf there be eny that wil reason with me, let him come here forth to me. Beholde, the LORDE God stonde by me, <sup>m</sup>what is he that can condemne me? lo, they shalbe all like as an olde cloth, <sup>n</sup>which <sup>o</sup>ȳ mothes shal eate vp.

C Therefore who so feareth the LORDE, amōge you, let him heare the voyce of his seruāt. Who so walketh in dareknesse, τ no light shyneth vpō him, let him hope in the LORDE, and holde him by his God. But take hede, ye haue all kyndled a fyre, and gyrded youre selues with the flame: Ye walke in the glistrige of youre owne fyre, and in the flame that ye haue kyndled. This cometh vnto you fro my honde, namely, <sup>p</sup>ȳ ye shal slepe in sorowe.

The li. Chapter.

A HERKEN vnto me, ye that holde of rightuousnes, ye that seke the LORDE. Take hede vnto the stone, wherout ye are hewen, and to the graue wherout ye are digged. <sup>q</sup>Considere Abraham youre father, τ Sara that bare you: how that I called him alone, prospered him wel, τ increased him: how the LORDE confortd Siō, and repayed all hir decaye: makinge hir deserte as a Paradise, and hir wildernesse as the garden of the LORDE. Myrth and ioye was there, thankesgeuyng and <sup>r</sup>ȳ voyce of prayse. Haue respecte vnto me then (o my people) and laye thine eare to me: for a lawe, and an ordinance shal go forth fro me,<sup>s</sup> to lighten the Gentiles. It is hard by, that my health τ my rightuousnesse shal go forth, and the people shalbe ordred with myne arme.

B The floudes (that is <sup>t</sup>ȳ Gentiles) shal hope in me, and put their trust in myne arme. Lift vp youre eyes toward beauē, and loke vpon the earth beneth. <sup>u</sup>For the heauens shal vanish awaye like smoke, and the earth shall teare like a clothe, τ they that dwel therein, shal perish in like maner. <sup>v</sup>But my health endureth for euer, and my rightuousnes shall not cease. Therefore hercken vnto me, ye <sup>w</sup>ȳ haue pleasure in rightuousnes, <sup>x</sup>thou people that bearest my lawe in thine herte. <sup>y</sup>Feare not the curse of men, be not afrayde of their blasphemies τ reuylinges: for wormes τ mothes shal eat thē vp like clothe τ woll. But my rightuousnesse shal endure for euer, τ my sauynge health from generacion to generacion.

Wake vp, wake vp, τ be stronge: O thou arme of the LORDE: wake vp, lyke as in tymes past, euer and sence the worlde beganne. <sup>z</sup>Art not thou he, that hast wounded that proude lucifer, and hewen the dragon in peeces? Art not thou euen he, which hast dried vp the depe of the see, which hast made playne the see grounde, that the deluyered might go thorow? <sup>aa</sup>That the redemed of the LORDE, which turned agayne, might come with ioye vnto Siō, there to endure for euer? <sup>ab</sup>That myrth and gladnesse might be with them: that sorowe τ wo might fle from thē? <sup>ac</sup>Yee

I, I am euē he, that in all thiȝes geueth you consolacion. What art thou then, that fearest a mortall mā. ⁊ childe of man, which goeth awaye as doeth the floure? And forgettest the LORDE that made the,<sup>a</sup> that spred out the heauens, and layde the foundation of the earth. But thou art euer afraide for the sight of thyne oppressoure, which is ready to do harme: Where is the wrath of the oppressoure? It cometh on fast, it maketh haist to appeare: It shal not perish, ⁊ it shulde not be able to destroye, nether shal it fayle for faute of norishinge. I am the LORDE thy God, that make the see to be still,<sup>b</sup> and to rage: whose name is the LORDE of hoostes. I shal put my worde also in thy mouth, and defende the with the turnynge of my honde: that thou mayest plante the heauens, and laye the foundations of the earth, and saye vnto Sion: thou art my people.

¶ Awake, Awake, and stonde vpo Ierusalem, ⁊ thou that from the honde of the LORDE, hast drunkē out the cuppe of his wrath; thou that hast supped of, and sucked out the slombringe cuppe to the botome. For amonge all the sonnes whom thou hast begotten, there is not one that maye holde the vp: and not one to lede the by the honde, of all the sonnes that thou hast norished. Both these thinges are happened vnto the, but who is sory for it? Yee, destruction, waistinge, hunger ⁊ swerde: but who hath comforted the? Thy sonnes lie comfortles at ⁊ heade of euery strete like a takē venyson, ⁊ are ful of ⁊ terrible wrath of ⁊ LORDE, ⁊ punyshmēt of thy God. And therefore thou miserable ⁊ drunkē (howbeit not with wyne) Hear this: Thus saith thy LORDE: thy LORDE ⁊ God, ⁊ defender of his people: Beholde, I wil take ⁊ slōbrige cuppe out of thy hōde, euē ⁊ cuppe with the dregges of my wrath: ⁊ frō hence forth thou shalt neuer drinke it more, ⁊ wil put it ī their hōde that trouble the: which haue spoken to thy soule: stoupe downe, that we maye go ouer the: make thy body euē with the grounde, and as the strete to go vpon.

The liij. Chapter.

thou cite of the holy one. For from this tyme forth, there shal no vncircumcised ner vncleane person come in the. Shake the frō the dust, arise ⁊ stonde vp, o Ierusalē. Pluck out thy neck from the bōde, o thou captiue daughter Sion. For thus saith the LORDE: <sup>d</sup>Ye are solde for naught, therefore shal ye be redemed also without any money.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: <sup>e</sup>My people wēte downe afore tyme in to Egipte, there to be straungers. Afterwarde dyd the kinge of the Assirians oppresse thē, for naught. And now what profit is it to me (saith ⁊ LORDE) ⁊ my people is frely caried awaye, <sup>f</sup>⁊ brought in to heuynes by their rulers, and my name euer still blasphemed? saith the LORDE. <sup>g</sup>But ⁊ my people maye knowe my name, I my self will speake in that daye. Beholde, here am I. O how bewtiful are the fete of the Embassitoure, ⁊ bringeth the message frō the mountayne, <sup>h</sup>⁊ proclaimeth peace: ⁊ brigeth the good tydings, ⁊ preacheth health, ⁊ saith vnto Sion: Thy God is the kinge. Thy watchmē shal lift vp their voyce, with loude voyce shal they preach of him: for they shal se him present, whē the LORDE shal come agayne to Sion.

Be glad, <sup>i</sup>o thou desolate Ierusalē, ⁊ reioyce together: for the LORDE will cōforte his people, he wil deluyer Ierusalē. The LORDE wil make bare his holy arme,<sup>k</sup> ⁊ shewe it forth in the sight of all the Gētiles, ⁊ all the endes of the earth shal se the sauynge health of oure God. <sup>l</sup>Awaye, Awaye, get you out frō thence, ⁊ touch no vncleane thinge. Go out from amonge soch, And be cleane, ye that beare the vessell of the LORDE. But ye shal not go out with sediciō, ner make haist as they that fle awaye: for the LORDE shal go before you, <sup>m</sup>⁊ād the God of Israel shal kepe the watch.

Beholde, my seruauant shal deale wysely, therefore shal he be magnified, exalted ⁊ greatly honoured. Like as ⁊ multitude shal wōdre vpon him, because his face shalbe so deformed ⁊ not as a mans face, ⁊ his bewtie like no man: Euen so shal the multitude of the Gētiles loke vnto him, ⁊ ⁊ kinges shal shut their mouthes before him. For they ⁊ haue not bene tolde of him, shal se him: <sup>n</sup>and they ⁊ herde nothinge of him, shal beholde him.

The liij. Chapter.

A BUT who geueth credence vnto oure preaching? "Or to who is the arme of the LORDE knowne? He shal growe before the LORDE like as a brauch, ⁊ as a rote in a drie grounde. He shal haue nether bewty ner fauoure. When we loke vpon him, there shalbe no fayrnesse: we shal haue no lust vnto him. <sup>2</sup>He shalbe the most symple ⁊ despised of all, which yet hath good experience of sorowes ⁊ infirmities. We shal reken him so symple ⁊ so vyle, that we shal hyde oure faces frō him. <sup>3</sup>Howbeit (of a treuth) he only taketh awaye oure infirmite, ⁊ beareth oure payne: <sup>4</sup>Yet we shal iudge him, as though he were plagued and cast downe of God: where as he (not withstōdinge) shal be wōded for oure offences, ⁊ smytten for oure wickednes. For the payne of oure punyshment shalbe layde vpo him, ⁊ with his stripes shal we be healed.

B As for vs, we go all astraye (like shepe), every one turneth his owne waye. But thorow him, the LORDE pardoneth all oure synnes. He shal be payned ⁊ troubled, ⁊ shal not opē his mouth. <sup>6</sup>He shalbe led as a shepe to be slayne, yet shal he be as still as a lambe before the shearer, ⁊ not open his mouth. He shal be had awaye, his cause not herde, ⁊ without eny iudgment: Whose generacion yet no man maye nombre, when he shalbe cut of frō the grounde of the lyvinge: Which punyshment shal go vpon him, for the transgression of my people. <sup>7</sup>His graue shalbe geuē him with the cōdemned, ⁊ his crucifenge with the theues, <sup>8</sup>Where as he dyd neuer violence ner vnright, nether hath there bene eny disceatfulnesse in his mouth.

C Yet hath it pleased ŷ LORDE to smyte him with infirmite, <sup>9</sup>that when he had made his soule an offering for synne, he might se a lōge lastinge sede. And this device of the LORDE shal prospere in his honde. With trauallye and labour of his soule, shal he optayne greate riches. My righteous seruauant shall with his wisdomē iustifie ⁊ delyuer the multitude, for he shal beare awaye their synnes. <sup>10</sup>Therefore wil I geue him the multitude for his parte, ⁊ he shal deuyde the strōge spoyle because he shal geue ouer his soule to death, <sup>11</sup>⁊ shalbe rekened amonge the transgressours, which neuertheles shal take awaye ŷ synnes of the multitude, and make intercession for the mysdoers.

The liiiij. Chapter.

THEREFORE be glad now, thou barc that bearest not. Reioyce, synge ⁊ be mery, thou ŷ art not with childe: For the desolate hath moo children, <sup>2</sup>then the married wife, saith the LORDE. Make thy tente wyder, ⁊ sprede out the hangings of thine habitaciō: spare not, laye forth thy coardes, and make fast thy stakes: for thou shalt breake out on the right syde and on the left, ⁊ thy sede shal haue ŷ Gētiles in possession, ⁊ dwell in the desolate cities. Feare not, for thou shalt not be confounded: Be not ashamed, for thou shalt not come to confucion. Yee thou shalt forget the shame off thy youth, and shalt not remembre the dishonoure of thy wedwoheade. For he that made the, shalbe thy LORDE, ⁊ husbonde (whose name is the LORDE of hostes) <sup>3</sup>⁊ thyne avenger shalbe euen the holy one off Israel, the LORDE of the whole worlde. A litle while haue I forsaken the, <sup>4</sup>but with greate mercifulnesse shal I take the vp vnto me. Whē I was angrie, I hid my face from the for a litle season, but thorow euerlastinge goodnesse shal I pardon the, saith the LORDE thine avenger. Ye fast not (as somtyme) that youre voyce might be herde aboue. <sup>a</sup>Thynke ye this fast pleaseth me, that a mā shulde chasten himself for a daye, and to wryth his heade aboute like an hoke in an hairy cloth, and to lye vpon the earth? Shulde that be called fastynge, or a daye <sup>b</sup>pleaseth <sup>c</sup>the LORDE? But this fastynge pleaseth not me, till <sup>d</sup>ye tyme be thou lowse him out of bondage, that is in thy daunger: that thou breake the oath of wicked bargaynes, that thou let the oppressed go fre, and take from them all maner of burthens. <sup>e</sup>It pleaseth not me, till thou deale thy bred to the hongrie, and brynge the poore fatherlesse home in to thy house, when thou seist the naked that thou couer him, and hyde not thy face fro thine owne flesh. Then shalt thy light breake forth as <sup>f</sup>ymornyng, and thy health florish right shortly: <sup>g</sup>thy rightuousnesse shal go before the, and <sup>h</sup>the glory of the LORDE shal embrace the.

Then yf thou callest, the LORDE shal answer the: <sup>i</sup>yf thou criest, he shal saye: here I am. Yee yf thou layest awaye thy burthens, and holdest thy fyngers, and ceasest from blasphemous talkynge, yf thou hast compassion vpon the hongrie, and refrezhest <sup>j</sup>the troubled soule: <sup>k</sup>Then shal thy light springe out in the darknesse, and thy darknesse shalbe as the noone daye. The LORDE shal euer be thy gyde, and satisfie the desyre of thine hert, and fyl thy bones with marry. Thou shalt be like a freshwatred garden, and like the founteyne of water, that neuer leaueth runnyng. Then the places that haue euer bene waist, shalbe buylded of the: there shalt thou laye a foundation for many kynreds. Thou shalt be called the maker vp of hedges, and <sup>l</sup>the buylder agayne of <sup>m</sup>the waye of the Sabbath.

<sup>k</sup>Yee yf thou turne thy fete from the Sabbath, so that thou do not the thinge which pleaseth thyself in my holy daye: then shalt thou be called vnto the pleasaut, holy and glorious Sabbath of the LORDE, where thou shalt be in honoure: so <sup>l</sup>ye thou do not after thine owne ymaginacion, nether seke thine owne wil, ner speake thine owne wordes. The shalt thou haue thy pleasure in <sup>m</sup>the LORDE, which shal carie <sup>n</sup>ye lie aboue <sup>o</sup>ye earth, and fede the with the heretage of Iacob thy father: for the LORDES owne mouth hath so promised.

The lii. Chapter.

Beholde, the LORDES honde is not so shortened <sup>p</sup>ye it can not helpe, nether is his eare so stopped <sup>q</sup>ye it maye not heare. But youre myszdedes haue separated you from youre God, and youre synnes hyde his face from you, <sup>r</sup>ye he heareth you not. For youre hondes are defyled with bloude, and youre fyngers with vnrighteousnesse: Your lippes speake lesynges, and youre tonge setteth out wickednes. No man regardeth righteounes, and no mā iudgeth truly. Euery man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceate, conceaeth weerynesse, and bringeth forth euell. They brede cockatrice egges, and weene <sup>s</sup>ye spyders webbe. Who so eateth of their egges, dieth. But yf one treade vpon the, there cometh vp a serpent. Their webbe maketh no clothe, and they maye not couer the with their labours. Their dedes are <sup>t</sup>ye dedes of wickednes, and <sup>u</sup>ye worke of robbery is in their hōdes. Their fete runne to euell, and they make haist to shed innocēt bloude. Their counceils are wicked counceils, harme and destrucciō are in their wayes. But <sup>v</sup>the waye of peace they knowe not. In their goinges is no equitye, their wayes are so croked, <sup>w</sup>ye who so euer goeth therin, knoweth nothinge of peace.

half deed. We roare all like Beeres, ⁊ mourne stil like dounes. We loke for equite, but there is none: for health, but it is farre frō vs. For oure offences are many before ŷ, ⁊ oure synnes testifie agaynst vs. Yee we must cōfesse ŷ we offende, ⁊ knowlege, ŷ we do anysse: Namely, transgresse ⁊ dyssemble agaynst ŷ LORDE, ⁊ fall away frō oure God: vsinge presūptuous ⁊ traytorous ymaginacions, ⁊ casting false matters in oure hertes. And therefore is equyte gone asyde, ⁊ righteousnes stōdeth farre of: ⁊ treuth is fallen downe in the strete, and the thinge that is playne and open, maye not be shewed. Yee ŷ treuth is lade in preson, and he that refrayneth himself frō euil, must be spoyled.

¶ When the LORDE sawe this, it displeased him sore, ŷ there was no where eny equite. He sawe also, that there was no man, which had pitie therof, or was greued at it. And he helde him by his owne power, and cleued to his owne rightuousnes. He put rightuousnes vpō him for a brest plate, ⁊ set the helmet of health vpō his heade. He put on wrath in steade of clothēge, ⁊ toke gelousy aboute him for a cloke: (like as when a man goeth forth wrothfully to recōpence his enemies, ⁊ to be avenged of his aduersaries.) Namely, that he might recompence and rewarde the Ilōdes, wherthorow the name of the LORDE might be feared, from the risynge of the Sōne: and his magesty, vnto the goynge downe of the same.

For he shal come as a violent waterstreame, which the wynde of the LORDE hath moued. But vnto Sion there shal come a redemer, and vnto them in Iacob that turne from wickednesse, saith the LORDE. I will make this couenaunt with them (sayeth ŷ LORDE): My sprete that is come vpon the, ⁊ the wordes which I haue put in thy mouth, shal neuer go out of thy mouth, nor out of ŷ mouth of thy childrē, no ner out of ŷ mouth of thy childers childrē, from this tyme forth for euer more.

The li. Chapter.

¶ AND therefore get the vp by tymes, for thy light cometh, ⁊ the glory of ŷ LORDE shal ryse vp vpō ŷ. For lo, while ŷ darknesse ⁊ cloude couereth the earth ⁊ the people, the LORDE shal shewe the light, ⁊ his glory shal be sene in the. The Gentiles shal come to thy light, ⁊ kynge to the brightnes ŷ springeth forth vpō ŷ. Lift vp thine eyes, ⁊ loke rounde aboute the: All these gather thē selues, ⁊ come to the. Sonnes shal come vnto ŷ from farre, ⁊ daughters shal gather thē selues to the on euery side. When thou seist this, thou shalt maruel exceedingly, and thine hert shalbe opened: when the power of the see shalbe cōuerted vnto the (that is) whē the strength of the Gentiles shal come vnto the. The multitude of Camels shal couer ŷ, the Dromedaries of Madiā and Ephā. All they of Saba shal come, ⁊ bringinge golde ⁊ incense, ⁊ shewinge the prayse of the LORDE. All the catel of Cēdar shalbe gathered vnto ŷ, the rāmes of Nabaioth shal serue the, to be offred vpō myne autler, which I haue chosen, ⁊ in the house of my glory which I haue garnished. But what are these that fle here like the cloudes, and as the dounes fliege to their wyndowes?

The Illes also shal gather thē vnto me, and specially the shippes of ŷ see: that they maye bringe the sonnes from farre, and their syluer and their golde with them, vnto the name of the LORDE thy God, vnto the holy one of Israel, that hath glorified the. Strañgers shal buykle vp thy walles, and their kiges shal do the seruyce. For when I am angrie, I smyte the: and when it pleaseth me, I pardon the. Thy gates shal stonde open still both daye and night, and neuer be shut: that the hooste of the Gentiles maye come, and that their kinges maye be brought vnto the. For euery people ⁊ kingdome that serueth not the, shal perish, and be destroyed with the swerde. The glory of libanus shal come vnto the: The Fyrre trees, Boxes ⁊ Cedres together, to garnish the place of my Sanctuary, for I wil glorifie the place of my fete.

Moroner those shal come kuelinge vnto the, ŷ haue vexed the: ⁊ all they that despised ŷ, shal fall downe at thy fote. Thou shalt be called the cite of the LORDE, the holy Sion of Israel. A THE sprete of the LORDE God is with me, for <sup>e</sup>ȝ LORDE hath anoynted me, and sent me, to preach good tydiges vnto the poore, <sup>f</sup>ȝ I might bynde vp <sup>g</sup>ȝ wounded hertes, <sup>h</sup>ȝ I might preach delyuerance to <sup>i</sup>ȝ captyue, and open the preson to thē that are bounde: <sup>j</sup>ȝ I might declare <sup>k</sup>ȝ acceptable yere of <sup>l</sup>ȝ LORDE, and the daye of <sup>m</sup>ȝ avēgeance of oure God: that I might comforte all them that are in heynesnes, <sup>n</sup>that I might geue vnto them <sup>o</sup>ȝ mourne in Sion, bewty in the steade of ashes, ioyful oymēt for sighinge, pleasaunt raymēt for an heuy mide: That they might be called excellent in rightuousnesse, a platinge of the LORDE for him to reioyce in.

They shal buylde the lōge rough wildernes, and set vp <sup>p</sup>ȝ olde deserte. They shal repayre the waist places, and soch as haue bene voyde thorow out many generaciōs. Straigers shal stōde and fede youre catel, and the Aleantes shalbe youre plowmē and reapers. But ye shalbe named the prestes of the LORDE, <sup>q</sup>and me shall call you the seruantes of oure God. Ye shall enioye the goodes of <sup>r</sup>ȝ Gētiles and tryūphe in their substaunce. For youre greate reprofe and shame, shall they haue ioye, <sup>s</sup>ȝ ye maye hane parte with thē. For they shal haue dubble possession in their lōde, and euerlasting ioye shalbe with them. <sup>t</sup>For I the LORDE, which loue right and hate robbery (though it were offred me) shal make their workes ful of faithfulness, and make an euerlasting couenaut with them.

Their seide also and their generacion shal be knowne amonge the Gentiles, and amonge the people. All they that se them, shall knowe, that they are the hie blessed seide of <sup>u</sup>ȝ LORDE. And therefore I am ioyful in the LORDE, and my soule reioyseth in my God. For <sup>v</sup>he shall put vpon me the garmēt of health, and couer me with the mātle of rightuousnes. He shal deeke me like a brydegrome, and as a bryde that hath hir apparell vpō her. For like as <sup>w</sup>ȝ grounde bringeth forth frute, and as the gardē shuteth forth seide: So shal the LORDE God cause rightuousnes, and the feare of God to florish forth before all the Heithen.

The lxiij. Chapter.

WHAT is he this, that cometh from Edom, with stayned reade clothes of Bosra: (which is so costly cloth) ⁊ cometh in so neebly with all his strēgh? I am he ſ teacheth rightuousnes, ⁊ am of power to helpe. Wherefore thō is thy clothinge reade, ⁊ thy raymēt like his ſ treadeth in ſ wyne presse? I haue troddē the presse my self alone, ⁊ of all people, there was not one with me. Thus haue I troddē downe myne enemies in my wrath,<sup>b</sup> and set my fete vpō them in my indignacion: And their bloude sprange vpō my clothes, ⁊ so haue I stayned all my rayment. For the daye of vengeance that I haue takē in honde, ⁊ the yere of my delyuerance is come. I loked aboute me, and there was no mā to shewe me eny helpe. I fel downe, and no man helde me vp. Thē I helde me by myne owne arme, ⁊ my feruētnesse susteyned me. And thus haue I troden downe the people in my wrath, and bathed them in my displeasure: In so moch that I haue shed their bloude vpon the earth.

I will declare the goodness of the LORDE, <sup>c</sup> yee and the prayse of the LORDE for all that he hath gyuen vs, for the greate good ſ he hath done for Israel: which he hath gyuen them of his owne fauoure, ⁊ accordinge to the multitude of his lounge kindneses. For he sayde: These no doute wilbe my people, and no shrēkinge children, and so he was their Sauoure. <sup>d</sup> In their troubles he forsoke thē not, but the angel that went forth from his presence, delyuered them: Of very loue ⁊ kindnesse that he had vnto them, redeemed he them. He hath borne them, and caried them vp euer, sence the worlde begāne. But after they prouoked him to wrath and vexed his holy minde, he was their enemye, and fought agaynst them him self. Yet remēbred he the oldē tyme, of Moses ⁊ his people: <sup>e</sup> How he brought them from the water of the see, as a shepherde doth with his shepe: how he had geuen his holysprete amonge them: how he had led Moses by the right honde with his glorious arme: how he had deuyded the water before them (wherby he gat him self an euerlastinge name) how he led them in the depe, as an horse is led in the playne, that they shulde not stamble. The sprete of the LORDE led them, as a tame beast goeth in the felde.

Thus (o God) hast thou led thy people, to make thy self a glorious name with all. Loke downe then from heauē,<sup>f</sup> and beholde the dwellinge place of thy sanctuary ⁊ thy glory. How is it, ſ thy gelousy, thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies and thy lounge kyndnesse, wyl not be entreated of vs? <sup>g</sup> Yet art thou oure father: For Abraham knoweth vs not, nether is Israel acquainted with vs. But thou LORDE art oure father and redeemer, and thy name is euer lastinge.<sup>h</sup> O LORDE wherfore hast thou led vs out of thy waye? wherfore hast thou hardened oure hertes, that we feare the not? Be at one with vs agayne, for thy seruantes sake ſ are of the generaciō of thy heretage. Wilt thou holde thy peace, and scourge vs so sore?

The lrb. Chapter.

THEY shal seke me, that hitherto haue not axed for me: they shal fynde me, that hither to haue not sought me. Then shal I saye immediatly, to the people that neuer called vpon my name: I am here, I am here. For thus longe haue I euer holden out my hondes to an vfaithfull people, that go not the right waye, but after their owne ymaginacions: To a people, that is euer denyng me to my face. They make their oblacions in gardens, and their smoke vpon alters of bricke, they lurck amonge the graues, and lie in the dennes all night. They eate swyne flesh, and vnclene broth is in their vessels. Yf thou comest nye them, they saie: touch me not, for I am holier then thou.

All these men when I am angrie, shalbe turned to smoke and fyre, that shal burne for euer. Beholde, it is written before my face, ⁊ shal not be forgotten, but recöpened. I shal rewarde it them in to their bosome: I meane youre mysdedes, and the mysdedes of youre fathers together (saith the LORDE) which haue made their smokes vpon the mountaynes, and blasphemed me vpon the hilles: therefore will I measure their olde dedes in to their bosome agayne.

Morouer thus saith the LORDE: like as when one wolde gather holy grapes, men saye vnto him: breake it not of, for it is holy: Euen so will I do also for my seruauentes sakes, that I will not destroye them all. But I will take a sede out of Iacob, and out of Iuda one, to take possession of my hill. My chosen shal possesse these thinges, ⁊ my seruauentes shall dwell there. Saron shalbe a shepefolde, and the valley of Achor<sup>m</sup> shal geue stallinge for the catell of my people, that feare me. But as for you, ye are they, y haue forsaken the LORDE, and forgotten my holy hill. Ye haue set vp an alter vnto fortune, ⁊ geuē rich drinkofferings vnto treasure. Therefore will I nombre you with the swerde, that ye shall be destroyed all together. For when I called, no man gaue me answer: when I spake, ye herkened not vnto me, but dyd wickednes before myne eyes, and chosed the thinge that pleased me not.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, my seruauentes shal eate, but ye shall haue hunger. Beholde, my seruauentes shall drynke, but ye shal suffre thurst. Beholde, my seruauentes shal be mery, but ye shal be cöfounded. Beholde, my seruauentes shal reioyse for very quietnesse of herte. The lxi. Chapter.

A THUS saith the LORDE: Heauē is my seate, <sup>g</sup> and the earth is my fote stole. Where shal now the house stonde, & ye will buylde vnto me? And where shal be the place, & I wil dwell in? As for these thinges, my hōde hath made them all, and they are all created, saith the LORDE. Which of them shal I then regarde? <sup>h</sup> Euē him that is of a lowly troubled sprete, and stōdeth in awe of my wordes. For who so slayeth an oxe for me, doth me so greate dishonoure, as he ſ killeth a mā. He that killeth a shepe for me, choketh a dogge. He that bringeth me meat offringes, offreth swynes bloude: Who so maketh me a memoriall of Incense, prayseth the thinge ſ is vnright. Yet take they soch wayes in honde, and their soule deliteth in these abominacions.

<sup>i</sup> Therefore wil I also haue pleasure in laughinge them to scorne, and the thinge that they feare, wil I bringe vpon thē. For when I called, no man gaue answer: when I spake, they wolde not heare: But dyd wickednesse before myne eyes, & chose the thinges that displease me. Heare the worde of God all ye, that feare the thinge which he speaketh. Your brethren that hate you, and cast you out for my names sake, saye: Let the LORDE magnifie himself, that we maye se youre gladnesse: & yet they shalbe cōfounded.

<sup>j</sup> For as touchinge the cite and the temple, I heare the voyce of the LORDE, that will rewarde, and reconpēce his enemies: like as when a wife bringeth forth a man childe, or euer she suffre the payne of the byrth and anguysch of ſ trauaile. Who euer herde or sawe soch thinges? doth the grounde beare in one daye? or are the people borne all at once, as Sion beareth his sonnes? For thus sayeth the LORDE: Am I he that maketh other to beare, and beare not my self? Am not I he that beareth, <sup>k</sup> and maketh baren? saith thy God. Reioyse with Ierusalem, & be glad with her, all ye that loue her. Be ioyful with her, all ye that mourned for her. For ye shal sucke cōforte out of hir brestes, and be satisfied. Ye shal taist, and haue delite in the plenteousnesse of hir power. For thus sayeth the LORDE: beholde, I wil let peace ſ to her, like a water floude, & ſ might of the Heithē like a flowinge streame. Then shal ye sucke, ye shal be borne vpon hir sydes, and be ioyful vpō hir knees. For like as a childe is comforted of his mother, so shal I comforte you, and ye shalbe comforted in Ierusalem. <sup>l</sup> And when ye se this, youre herte shal reioyse, and youre bones shal florish like an herbe.

Thus shal the honde of the LORDE be knowne amonge his seruantes, and his indignacion amonge his enemies. For beholde, the LORDE shal come with fyre, and his charet shal be like a whyrlwynde, that he

THESE are the Sermons of Jeremy the sonne of Helchia the prest, one of them that dwelt at Anathot in the londe of Beniamin:<sup>a</sup> when the LORDE had first spoken with him, in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, in the xij yeare of his kingdome: and so duringe vnto the tyme of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, and vnto the xj yeares of Sedechias the sonne of Iosias<sup>b</sup> kinge of Iuda were ended: when Ierusalem was taken, euen in the fyfth Moneth.

The first Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE spake thus vnto me: <sup>c</sup>Before I fasshioned the in thy mothers wōbe, I dyd knowe the: And ouer thou wast borne, I sanctified the, & ordered the, to be a prophet vnto the people. The sayde I:<sup>d</sup> Oh LORDE God, I am vnmete, for I am yet but yonge. And the LORDE answered me thus: Saye not so, I am to yonge: <sup>e</sup>For thou shalt go to all that I shall sende the vnto, and what so euer I cōmaunde the, that shalt thou speake. Be not afrayed of their faces, for I wilbe with the, to deliyuer the, saith the LORDE.

<sup>f</sup>And with that, the LORDE stretched out his honde, and touched my mouth, and sayde morouer vnto me: Beholde I put my wordes in thy mouth, and this daye do I set the ouer the people and kingdomes: that thou mayest rote out, breake of, destroye, and make waist; and that thou mayest buylde vp, and plāte. <sup>g</sup>After this, the LORDE spake vnto me sayenge: Jeremy, what seist thou? And I sayde: I se a wakyng rodde.<sup>h</sup> Then sayde <sup>i</sup>the LORDE: thou hast sene right, for I will watch diligently vpon my worde, to perfourme it.

It happened afterwarde, that the LORDE spake to me agayne, & sayde: What seist thou? <sup>j</sup>And I sayde: I do se a seethinge pot, lokinge from out of the north hitherwarde.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Out of the north<sup>k</sup> shall come a plage vpon all the dwellers of the londe. For lo, I will call all the officers of the kyngdomes of the north, (saith the LORDE.) And they shall come, and euery one shall set his seate in the gates of Ierusalem, and in all their walles rounde aboute, and thorow all the cities of Iuda. And thorow them shall I declare my iudgment, vpon all the wickednesse of those men that haue forsaken me: that haue offred vnto straunge goddes, & worshipped the workes of their owne hondes.

And therefore gyrde vp thy loynes,<sup>l</sup> arise, and tell them all, that I geue the in cōmaundement. Feare them not, I will not haue the to be afrayed of thē. For beholde,<sup>m</sup> this daye do I make the a strōge fensed towne, an yron pyler, and a wall of <sup>n</sup>stele agaynst <sup>o</sup>the whole londe, agaynst the kinges and mightie men of Iuda, agaynst the prestes and people of the londe. They shall fight agaynst the, but they shall not be able to ouercome the: <sup>p</sup>for I am with the, to deliyuer the, saith the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of the LORDE cōmaunded me thus: <sup>q</sup>"Go thy waye, crie in the eares of Ierusalē, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE: I remembre the for the kyndnesse of thy youth, and because of thy stedfast loue: in that thou folowdest me thorow the wilderness, in an vttilled londe. Thou Israel wast halowed vnto the LORDE, and so was his first frutes. <sup>r</sup>All they that deuoured Israel, offended: misfortune fell vpon them, saith the LORDE. Heare therefore the worde of the LORDE, O thou house of Iacob, and all the generacion of the house of Israel. Thus saith <sup>s</sup>the LORDE vnto you:

What vnfaithfulnesse founde youre fathers in me, that they wente so farre awaye from me, fallinge to lightnesse, and beinge so vayne? They thought not in their hertes: Where haue we left the LORDE, <sup>t</sup>the brought vs out of the lōde of Egipte: <sup>u</sup>the led vs thorow the wilderness, thorow a deserte and rough londe, thorow a drie and a deedly londe, yee a londe that no man had gone thorow, and wherein no man had dwelt. <sup>v</sup>And when I had brought you in to a pleasaunt welbuylded londe, that ye might enioye the frutes and all the cōmodities of the same: <sup>w</sup>ye went forth and defyled my londe, & brought myne heretage to abhominacion.

The prestes the selues saide not once; <sup>x</sup> where is  $\hat{y}$  LORDE? "They  $\hat{y}$  haue the lawe in their hondes, knowe me not: The shepherdes offende agaynst me. The prophetes do seruyce vnto Baal, & folowe such thinges as shall bringe them no profit.

Wherfore I am constrainyd (sayeth the LORDE) to make my complainte vpon you, and vpon youre children. Go in to the Iles of Cethim, and loke wel: sende vnto Cedar, take diligent hede: and se, whether such thinges be done there, whether the Gentiles themselves deale so falsly & vntruly with their goddes (which yet are no goddes in dede.<sup>a</sup>) But my people hath geuen ouer their hie honoure, for a thinge that maye not helpe them.

Be astonished (o ye heauens) be afraide, & abashed at such a thinge, saith the LORDE. For my people hath done two euels. "They haue forsakē me the well of the water of life, and digged them pittes, yee vile and broken pittes, that holde no water. Is Israel a boude seruauant, or one of the housholde?<sup>d</sup> Why is he then so spoyled? Why do they roare and crie then vpon him, as a lyon? "They haue made his londē wayst, "his cities are so brent vp, that there is no man dwellinge in them. Yee the children of Noph and Taphanes haue defyled thy necke.

Cometh not this vnto the, because thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God,<sup>e</sup> euer since he led the by the waye? And what hast thou now to do in  $\hat{y}$  strete of Egipte? to drinke foule water? Either, what makest thou in the waye to Assiria? To drinke water of the floude? "Thine owne wickednesse shal reprove the, and thy turnynge awaye shal condemne the: that thou mayest knowe and vnderstonde, how euell and hurtful a thinge it is,  $\hat{y}$  thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, and not feared him, saith the LORDE God of hostes.

"I haue euer broken thy yock of olde, & bursten thy bondes: yet saiest thou, I wil nomore serue, but (like an harlot) thou runnest aboute vpon all hie hilles, & amonge all grene trees: where as I planted the out of noble grapes and good rotes. "How art thou turned then in to a bytter, vnfrutefull, and straunge grape? Yee and that so sore: that though thou wasshest the with Nitrus & makest thiself to sauoure with that swete smellingē herbe of Borith: yet in my sight thou art stayned with thy wickednesse, saith the LORDE thy God.

Saye not now: I am not vnclene, and I haue not folowed the goddes. "Loke vpō thyne owne waies in the woddēs, valles & denues: so shalt thou knowe, what thou hast done. Thou art like a swift Dromedary, that goeth easely his waye: and thy wantonnes is like a wilde Asse, that vseth the wilderness, and that snoffeth and bloweth at his wil. Who can tame the? All they that seke the, shal not fayle, but fynde the in thyne owne vnclennes. Thou kepest thy fote from nakednes, and thy throte from thurst, and thinkest thus in thy self: tush, I wil take no sorowe, I wil loue the straunge goddes, & hange vpon them.

Like as a thefe that is taken with the dede, commeth to shame, euē so is the house of Israel come to confucion: the comon people, their kinges and rulers, their prestes and prophetes. "For they saye to a stock, thou art my father, and to a stone: thou hast begotten me, yee they haue turned their back vpon me, & not their face. But in the tyme of their trouble, when they saye: stonde vp, and helpe vs, I shal answerē thē: "Where are now thy goddes, that thou hast made the? byd them stonde vp, and helpe the in the tyme of nede? For loke how many cities thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also.

Wherfore thē wil ye go to lawe with me, seinge ye all are synners agaynst me, saith the LORDE? It is but lost labour, that I smyte youre children, for they receaue not my correction. "Your owne swearde destroyeth youre prophetes, like a deuouringe lyon. Yf ye be the people of the LORDE, then herke vnto his worde: Am I thē become a wilderness vnto the people of Israel? or a londē that hath no light? Wherfore saith my people then: we are fallē of, and we wil come no more vnto the? Doth a mayden forget hir raymēt, or a bryde hir stomacher? And doth my people forget me so lōge? Why boostest thou thy wayes so hylie, (to optayne fauoure there thorow) when thou hast yet stayned them with blasphemies?

Yet darrest thou saye: I am giltylesse: Tush, his wrath can not come vpon me. Beholde, I wil reason with y, because thou darrest saye: I haue not offended. O how euell wil it be for the, to abyde it: when it shall be knowne, how oft thou hast gone backward? For thou shalt be confounded, as wel of Egypte, as of the Assirians: Yee thou shalt go thy waye from the, & smyte thyne hondes together vpon thy heade. Because the LORDE shal bringe that confidence and hope of thine to naught, and thou shalt not prospere with all.

The iij. Chapter.

A COMMONLY, when a man putteth away his wife, and she goeth from him, and marieth with another, then the question is: shulde he resorte vnto her eny more after that? Is not this felde then defyled and vnclene? But as for the, thou hast played the harlot with many louers, yet turne agayne to me, sauieth the LORDE. Lift vp thine eyes on euery syde, and loke, yf thou be not defyled. Thou hast waited for them in the stretes, and as a murderer in the wilderness. Thorow thy whordome and shamefull blasphemies, is the londe defyled.

“This is the cause, that the rayne and euenyng dew hath ceased. Thou hast gotten the an whores foreheade, and canst not be ashamed. Els woldest thou saye vnto me: O my father, thou art he that hast brought me vp, and led me fro my youth: Wilt thou then put me away, and cast me of for euer? Or wilt thou withdrawe thy self clene fro me? Neuertheles, thou speakest such wordes, but thou art euer doinge worse, and worse.

B The LORDE sayde also vnto me, in the tyme of Iosias the kinge: Hast thou sene what that shrinkeing Israel hath done? how she hath runne vp vpon all hie hilles, and amonge all thicke trees, and there played the harlot? hast thou sene also, (when she had done all this) how I sayde vnto her: that she shulde turne agayne vnto me, and yet she is not returned? “Iuda that vnfaithfull sister of hirs also sawe this: Namely, that after I had well sene the aduoutrye of the shrenkinge harlot Israel, I put her awaye, and gaue her a byll of deuorcement.

For all this, hir vnfaithfull sister Iuda was not ashamed, but wente backe and played the whore also. Yee and the noyse of hir whordome hath defyled the whole lode. For she hath committed hir aduoutrie with stones and stockes.

Neuerthelesse, hir vnfaithfull sister Iuda is not turned vnto me agayne with hir whole herte, but faynedly, saith the LORDE. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The baeslyder Israel is more rightuous, than the vnfaithfull Iuda: and therefore go preach these wordes towarde the north, & saye: Thou shrenkinge Israel, turne agayne (saith the LORDE,) and I will not turne my face from you, for I am merciful, saith the LORDE, & I will not allwaye beare displeasure agaynst the: but on this condicion, that thou knowe thy greate blasphemy: Namely, that thou hast vnfaithfully forsaken the LORDE thy God, & hast made thy self partaker of straunge goddes vnder all grene trees, but hast had no wil to heare my voyce, saith the LORDE.

“O ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, saith the LORDE, and I wilbe married with you. For I will take one out of the citie and two out of one generacion from amonge you, and bringe you out of Sion: and will geue you hyrdmē after myne owne mynde, which shal fede you with lernynge and wysdome. Morouer, when ye be increased and multiplied in the londe, then (saith the LORDE) there shall nomore boost be made of the arke of the LORDES Testament: No man shall thinke vpon it, neither shall eny man make mencion of it: for from thence forth it shall neither be visited, ner honoured with giftes.

Then shall Ierusalem be called the LORDES seate, and all Heithen shalbe gathered vnto it, for the name of the LORDE sake, which shalbe set vp at Ierusalem. And from that tyme forth, they shall folowe nomore the ymaginacion of their owne frauward herte.

Thē those y be of the house of Iuda, shal go vnto the house of Israel: And they shal come together out of the north, in to the O ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, (saynge: lo, we are thine, for thou art the LORDE oure God:) And so shal I heale youre bacturnynges. The hilles fall, and all the hie pryde of the mountaynes, but the health of Israel stondesth only vpon God oure LORDE.

"Confucion hath deuoured oure fathers labour from oure youth vp: yee their shepe and bullockes, their sonnes and daughters. So do we also slepe in oure confucion, and shame couereth vs: for we and oure fathers from oure youth vp vnto this daye haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and haue "not obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God.

The iiii. Chapter.

O ISRAEL, yf thou wilt turne the, then turne vnto me, saith the LORDE. And yf thou wilt put awaye thy abhominaciōs out of my sight, thou shalt not be moued: "And shalt sweare: The LORDE lyueth: in treuth, in equite and righteousness: and all people shall be fortunable and ioyfull in him. For thus saith the LORDE, to all Iuda and Ierusalem: plowe youre londe, and sowe not amonge the thornes.

"Be circumcised in the LORDE, and cut awaye the foreskynne of youre hertes, all ye of Iuda, "and all the indwellers of Ierusalem: that my indignacion breake not out like fyre, ⁊ kyndle, so that no man maye quench it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions.

Preach in Iuda and Ierusalem, crie out and speake: "blowe the trompettes in the londe, crie that euery man maye heare, and saye: Gather you together, and we will go in to stronge cities. Set vp the token in Sion, spede you, and make no tarienge: for I will bringe a greate plage, and a greate destruction from the north. "For the spoyler of the Gentiles is broken vp from his place, as a lyon out of his dēne, that he maye make the londe waist, and destroye the cities, so, that no man maye dwell therein. Wherefore gyrdye youre selues aboute with sack cloth, mourne, and wepe, for the fearfull wrath of the LORDE shal not be withdrawn from you.

At the same tyme (saith the LORDE) the hert of the kinge and of the prynces shal be gone, the prestes shalbe astonished, and the prophetes shalbe sore afayed. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, hast thou then disceaused this people and Ierusalem, sayenge: ye shall haue peace, "and now the swearde goeth thorow their lyues? Then shal it be saide to the people ⁊ to Ierusalem: "there commeth a warne wynde from the north thorow the waye of my people, but nether to fanne, ner to clēse.

After that shall there come vnto me a stronge wynde, and then wil I also geue sentence vpon them. For lo, he commeth downe like as a cloude, and his charettes are like a stormy wynde: "his horsmen are swifter then the Aegle. Wo vnto vs, for we are destroyed. O Ierusalem, wash thine hert from wickednesse, "that thou mayest be helped. How longe shal thy noysome thoughtes remayne with the?

For a voyce from Dan and from ⁊ hill of Ephraim speaketh out, and telleth of a destruction. Beholde, the Heithen geue Ierusalem warnynge, and preach vnto her, that hir destroyers are cōmyng from farre countrees. They tell the cities of Iuda the same also, they shall geue them warnynge in euery place, like as the watch men in the felde. For they haue prouoked me to wrath, "saith the LORDE.

"Thy wayes and thy thoughtes, haue brought the vnto this, this is thyne owne wickednesse and disobediēce, that hath possessed thyne hert: Ah my bely, ah my bely, (shalt thou crie) how is my hert so sore? my hert paunt-eth within me, I can not be still, for I haue herde the crienge of the trompettes, and peales of warre.

They crie murthur vpon murthur, the whole londe shal perish. Immediately my tentes were destroyed, and my hanginges, in the twinkle of an eye. How longe shall I se the tokens of warre, and heare the noyse of the trompettes?

D Neuertheles this shall come vpon them, because my people is become foolish, <sup>a</sup> and hath vterly no vnderstandinge. They are the children of foolishnes, <sup>b</sup> and without eny discreciō. To do euell, they haue witt ynough: but to do well, they haue no wisedome. I haue loked vpon the earth, and se, it is wayst and voyde. I loked towarde heauen, and it had no shyne.

I behelde the mountaynes, and they trembled, and all the hilles were in a feare. I loked aboute me, and there was no body, and all the byrdes of the ayre were awaye. I marked well, and the plowed felde was become waist: yee all their cities were broken downe at the presence of the LORDE, and indignacion of his wrath.

E For thus hath the LORDE sayde: The whole londe shalbe desolate, yet will I not then haue done. And therefore let the earth mourne, and let the heauen be sory aboute: for the thinge that I haue purposed and taken vpon me to do, shal not repente me, and I will not go from it. The whole londe shal fle, for the noyse of the horsmen and bowmen: they shall runne in to dennes in to woddes, and clymme vp the stony rockes. All the cities shalbe voyde, and no man dwellinge therein.

What wilt thou now do, thou beinge destroyed? <sup>c</sup> For though thou clothest thy self with scarlet, <sup>d</sup> and deckest <sup>e</sup> with gold: though thou payntest thy face with colours, <sup>f</sup> yet shalt thou trymme thy self in vayne.

For those that hither to haue bene thy greate fauourers, shal abhorre the, and go aboute to slaye <sup>g</sup>. For (me thinke) I heare a noyse, like as it were of a woman trauelinge, or one laboringe of hir first childe: Euen the voyce of the daughter Sion, that casteth out hir armes, and swowneth, sayenge: Ah wo is me, how sore vexed and faynte is my herte, for them that are slayne?

The v. Chapter.

L OKE thorow Ierusalem, beholde and se: <sup>a</sup> Seke thorow hir stretes also within, yf ye can fynde one man, that doth equall and right, or that laboureth to be faithfull: and I shall spare him (saith the LORDE). <sup>b</sup> For though they can saye: the LORDE lyueth, yet do they sweare to disceau: Where as thou (o LORDE) lokest only vpon faith and treuth.

Thou hast scourged them, but they toke no repentance: thou hast correcte them for amendemēt, but they refused thy correction. They made their faces harder then a stone, and wolde not amende.

Therefore I thought in my self: peraduenture they are so synple and folish, that they vnderstonde nothinge of the LORDES waye, <sup>c</sup> and iudgmentes of oure God. Therefore will I go vnto their heades and rulers, and talke with them: yf they knowe the waye of the LORDE, and the iudgmēt of oure God. But these (in like maner) haue broken the yock, and bursten the bondes in sonder.

Wherefore a lyon out of the wod shal hurte them, <sup>d</sup> and a wolfe in the euenynge shal destroye them. The cat of the mountayne shal lie lurking by their cities, to teare in peeces all them, that come therout. For their offences are many, and their departinge awaye is greate.

<sup>e</sup> Shulde I then for all this haue mercy vpon the? Thy children haue forsaken me, and sworne by them that are no goddes. And albeit they were bounde to me in mariage, yet they fell to aduoutrie, and haunted harlottes houses.

In the desyre of vnclenly lust they are become like the stoned horse, euey man neyeth at his neighbours wife. <sup>f</sup> Shulde I not correcke this, saith the LORDE?

<sup>g</sup> Shulde I not be avenged of euery people, that is like vnto this? Clymme vp vpon their walles, beate them downe, but destroye them not vterly: cut of their braunches, because they are not the LORDES.

For vnfaithfully hath the house of Israel and Iuda forsaken me, saith the LORDE. <sup>h</sup> They haue denied the LORDE, and sayde: it is not he.

Tush, there shall no misfortune come vpon vs, we shall se nether swearde ner hunger.

¶ As for the warnynge of the prophetes, they take it but for wynde, "yee there is none of these, which will tell them, that soch thinges shal happen vnto them.

Wherefore thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: because ye speake soch wordes, beholde: "The wordes that are in thy mouth will I turne to fyre, and make the people to be wod, that it maye consume them.

"Lo, I will bringe a people vpō you from farre, o house of Israel (saith the LORDE) a mightie people, an olde people, a people whose speach thou knowest not, nether vnderstodest what they saye.

Their arrowes are sodane death, yee they them selues be very giauntes. This people shal eate vp thy frute & thy meate, yee they shal deuoure thy sonnes and thy daughters, thy shepe and thy bullockes.

They shall eate vp thy grapes & fyges. As for thy stronge and well fensed cities, wherin thou didest trust, they shal destroye them with the sward.

¶ Neuertheles I will not then haue done with you, saith the LORDE. But yf they saye: wherefore doth the LORDE oure God all this vnto vs?

Then answereth they: because, that like as ye haue forsakē me, and "serued straunge goddes in youre owne londe, euen so shall ye serue other goddes also in a straunge londe.

Preach this vnto the house of Iacob, & crie it out in Iuda, and saye thus: Heare this (thou folish and vndercrete people.) "Ye haue eyes, but ye se not: eares haue ye, but ye heare not.

Fearre ye not me, saith the LORDE? Are ye not ashamed, to loke me in the face? "which bynde the see with the sonde, so that it can not passe his boundes: For though it rage, yet can it do nothinge: and though the wawes therof do swell, yet maye they not go ouer.

But this people hath a false and an obstinate herte, they are departed and gone awaye fro me. They thinke not in their hartes: O let vs feare the LORDE oure God, that geueth vs rayne early and late, when nede is: which kepeth euer still the haruest for vs yearly.

¶ Neuertheles youre miszdedes haue turned these from you, & "your synnes haue robbed

you herof. For amonge my people are founde wicked personnes, that priuely laye snares and waite for men, to take them, and destroye them.

And like as a net is full of byrdes, so are their houses full of that, which they haue gotten with falsede and disceate. Herof cometh their greate substance and riches, herof are they fat and welthy, and are runne awaye fro me with shameful blasphemies. They minstre not the lawe, "they make no ende of the fatherlesse cause, they iudge not the poore accordinge to equite.

"Shulde I not punysh these thinges, saith the LORDE? Shulde I not be avenged of all soch people, as these be? Horrible and greuous thinges are done in the londe.

The prophetes teach falsely, and the prestes folowe them, and my people hath pleasure therein. What will come therof at the last?

The vi. Chapter.

COME out of Ierusalem, ye stronge childre of Ben Iamin: "blowe vp the trompettes ye Teeuites, set vp a token vnto Bethacarem, for a plage and a greate misery pepeth out from the North.

I will liken the daughter Sion to a fayre and tendre woman, and to her shall come the shepherdes with their flockes. Their tentes shal they pitch rounde aboute her, and euery one shal fede with his honde. Make batell agaynst her (shal they saye:) Arise, let vs go vp, while it is yet daye.

Alas, the daye goeth awaye, & the night shadowes fall downe: Arise, let vs go vp by night, and destroye hir stronge holdes, for thus hath the LORDE of hoostes commaunded.

Hew downe hir trees, and set vp bulworkes agaynst Ierusalem. This is the cite that must be punished, for in her is all maliciousnes. Like as a cōdyte aboundeth in water, euē so this cite aboundeth in wickednes. Robbery and vnrightuousnesse is herde in her, sorow & woundes are euer there in my sight. Amēde the (o Ierusalem) lest I with drawe my herte from the, and make the desolate: & thy londe also, "y no man dwel in it. For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: The residue of Israel shalbe gathered, as the remnaunt of grapes.

And therefore turne thine honde agayne in to the bascket, like the grape gatherer. But vnto whom shal I speake? whom shal I warne, that he maye take hede? <sup>a</sup> Their eares are so vncircumcised, that they maye not heare.

Beholde, <sup>b</sup> they take the worde of God but for a scorne, and haue no lust therto. And therefore I am so full of thy indignacion (o LORDE) that I maye suffre no longer. Shed out thy wrath vpon the children that are without, and vpon all yonge men. Yee the man must be taken prisoner with the wife, and the aged with the crepel. Their houses with their londes and wiues shal be turned vnto straungers, whē I stretch out myne hōde vpon the inhabitants of this londe, saith the LORDE. <sup>c</sup> For from the leest vnto the most, they hange all vpon covetousnes: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they go all aboute with falsede and lyes.

Thus saith the LORDE: go in to the stretes, conside and make inquisition for the olde waye: and yf it be the good and right waye, then go therin, that ye maye fynde rest for youre soules. (But they saye: we will not walke therin) and I will set watchmen ouer you, and therefore take hede vnto the voyce of the trompet. But they saye: we will not take hede. Heare therfore ye Gentiles, and thou congregacion shalt knowe, what I haue denyed for them. Heare thou earth also: beholde, <sup>g</sup> I will cause a plage come vpon this people, euen the frute of their owne ymaginacions.

For they haue not bene obedient vnto my wordes and to my lawe, but abhorred them. <sup>h</sup> Wherefore bringe ye me incense from Saba, <sup>i</sup> & swete smellenge Calamus from farre countrees? Your burnt offeringes displease me, and I reioyse not in youre sacrifices.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make this people fall, and there shal fall from amonge them the father with the children, one neyghboure shal perish with another.

Morouer thus saith <sup>j</sup> LORDE: Beholde, <sup>k</sup> there shal come a people from the North, <sup>l</sup> & a greate people shal arise from <sup>m</sup> y endes of <sup>n</sup> y earth, with bowes & with dartes shal they be weapened: It is a rough & fearece people, an vnnmerciful people: their voyce roareth like the see, they ride vpon horses wel appointed to <sup>o</sup> batell agaynst the, o daughter Sion. Then shal this erie be herde: Oure armes are feble, heuynes and sorow is come vpon vs, as vpon a woman traueling with childe. Noman go forth in to the felde, no man come vpon the hie strete: for the swearde and feare of the enemie shalbe on euery side.

Wherefore, gyrd a sack cloth aboute the (o thou daughter of my people) sprynkle thy self with aszshes, <sup>p</sup> mourne and wepe bitterly, as vpon thy only beloued sonne: For the destroyer shal sodeinly fall vpon vs. The haue I set for a prouer of my harde people, to seke out and to trye their wayes. For they are all vnfaithful and fallen awaye, they hange vpon shameful lucre, they are clene brasse and yron, for they hurte and destroye euery man. The bellous are brent in the fyre, the leade is consumed, the melter melteth in wayne, for the euel is not taken awaye from them. Therefore shal they be called naughty syluer, because the LORDE hath cast them out.

The vij. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes, that God spake <sup>q</sup> vnto Ieremy: <sup>r</sup> Stonde vnder the gates of the LORDES house, and crie out these wordes there, with a loude voyce, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE, all ye of Iuda, that go in at this dore, to honour the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel. <sup>s</sup> Amende youre wayes and youre counsels, and I will let you dwell in this place. Trust not in false lyenge wordes, sayenge: here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE.

will not shed innocent bloude in this place: yf ye wil not cleue to straite goddes to youre owne destruction: then wil I let you dwell in this place, yee in the londe that I gaue afore tyme vnto youre fathers for euer. But take hede, yee trust in counceils, that begyle you and do you no good. For when ye haue stollē, murthered, committed aduoutrie, and periury: Whē ye haue offred vnto Baal, folowinge straunge & vnknowne goddes: <sup>a</sup> Then come ye, and stonde before me in this house (which hath my name geuen vnto it) and saye: Tush, we are absolved quyte, though we haue done all these abhominacions.

What? <sup>b</sup> thinke you this house that beareth my name, is a deme of theues? And these thinges are not done priuely, but before myne eyes, saith the LORDE. Go to my place in Silo, where vnto I gaue my name afore tyme, and loke well what I dyd to the same place, for the wickednes of my people of Israel. And now, though ye haue done all these dedes (saith the LORDE) and I my self rose vp euer by tymes to warne you and to comon with you: yet wolde ye not heare me: I called, ye wolde not answer. <sup>c</sup> And therefore euen as I haue done vnto Silo, so wil I do to this house, that my name is geuen vnto, (and that ye put youre trust in) yee vnto the place that I haue geuen to you and youre fathers. <sup>d</sup> And I shal thrust you out of my sight, as I haue cast out all youre brethren the whole sede of Ephraim.

They poure out drinkoffringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath: How be it they hurte not me (saith the LORDE) but rather confounde, and shame them selues.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, my wrath and my indignacion shalbe poured out vpon this place, vpon men and catell, vpon the trees in the felde and all frute of the londe, & it shal burne so, that no man maye quench it.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: <sup>g</sup> Ye heape vp youre burnt-offringes with youre sacrifices, & eate <sup>h</sup> flesh. <sup>i</sup> But when I brought youre fathers out of Egipte, I spake no worde vnto them of burnt-offringes and sacrifices: but this I commaunded them, sayenge: herken and obeye my voyce, <sup>j</sup> and I shalbe youre God and ye shal be my people: so that ye walke in all the wayes, which I haue comaunded you, that ye maye prosper.

<sup>k</sup> But they were not obedient, they inclyned not their eares there vnto, but went after their owne ymaginacions and after the mocions of their owne wicked herte, and so turned them selues awaye, and conuerted not vnto me. And this haue they done, from the tyme that youre fathers came out of Egipte, vnto this daye.

<sup>l</sup> Neuertheles, I sent vnto them my seruauentes all the prophetes: I rose vp early and sent them worde, yet wolde they not herke, ner offere me their eares, but were obstinate, and worse then their fathers.

And thou shalt now speake all these wordes vnto them, but they shal not heare the: thou shalt erie vpon them, but they shal not answer the. Therefore shalt thou saye vnto them: this is the people, that nether heareth the voyce of the LORDE their God, ner receaueth his correction. <sup>m</sup> Faithfulness & treuth is cleue rooted out of their mouth.

AT the same tyme, saith the LORDE, the bones of the kinges of Iuda, the bones of his princes, the bones of the prestes and prophetes, yee and the bones of the citisens of Ierusalē, shalbe brought out of their graues<sup>d</sup> and layed agaynst the Sonne, the Moone and all the heavenly hooste: whom they loued, whom they serued, whom they ranne after, whom they sought & worshipped. They shal nether be gathered together ner buried, but shal lye vpō the earth, to their shame and despisinge.

<sup>e</sup>And all they that remayne of this wicked generacion, shal desyre rather to dye thē to lyue: where so euer they remayne, & where as I scatre them, saith the LORDE of hoostes. This shalt thou saye vnto them also: Thus saith the LORDE: Do men fall so, that they arise not vp agayne: And turne they so farre awaye, y<sup>e</sup> they neuer conuerte? Wherefore then is this people and Ierusalem gone so farre backe, that they turne not agayne? They are euer the longer the more obstinate, and will not be conuerted.

BFor I haue looked, and considered: <sup>f</sup>but there is no mā, that speaketh a good worde: there is no man, that taketh repētaunce for his synne, that will so much as saye: wherefore haue I done this? But euery man (as soone as he is turned backe) runneth forth still, like a wilde horse in a battayl. The Storke knoweth his apoynted tyme, the Turtledoue, & Swallow and the Crane, cōsidre the tyme of their trauayle: <sup>g</sup>but my people will not knowe the tyme of the punishment of the LORDE. How darre ye saye then: we are wise, we haue the lawe of the LORDE amonge vs?

Beholde, the disceatfull penne of the scribes, setteth forth lies: therefore shal the wise be confounded, they shalbe afraied and taken: for lo, <sup>h</sup>they haue cast out the worde of the LORDE: what wysdome can then be amonge them? Wherefore, I will geue their wyues vnto aleauntes, and their feldes to destroyers.

For from the lowest vnto the hiest, they folowe all shamefull lucre: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they deale all with lies. <sup>i</sup>Neuertheles, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, where there is no peace at all.

I<sup>e</sup>ve for shame, how abhominable thinges do they? And yet they be not ashamed, yee they knowe of no shame.

Morouer I will gather them in (saith the LORDE) so that there shal not be one grape vpon the vyne, nether one fyge vpon the fyge tre, and the leaues shalbe plucte of.

Then will I cause them to departe, and saye: why prolonge we the tyme? Let vs gather oure selues together, and go in to the stronge cite, there shall we be in rest: For the LORDE oure God hath put vs to sylence, and geuen vs water myxte with gall, to drynke, because we haue synned agaynst him.

We loked for peace, and we fayre not the better, we wayted for the tyme of health, and lo, here is nothing but trouble.

Then shall the noyse of his horses be herde from Dan, the whole londe shal be afraied at the neyge of his stronge horses: for they shal go in, and denoure the londe, with all that is in it: the cities, and those that dwell therein. <sup>l</sup>Morouer, I will sende Cockatrices & serpētes amonge you (which will not be charmed) and they shal byte you, sayeth the LORDE.

Sorowe is come vpon me, and heynes vexeth my herte: for lo, the voyce of the criēge of my people is herde from a farre countre: Is not the LORDE in Sion? Is not he kinge in her? Wherefore then haue they greued me (shall the LORDE saye) with their ymages and foolish straunge fashions? The harvest is gone, the Sōmer hath an ende, and we are not helped. I am sore vexed, because of the hurte of my people: I am heuy and abashed, for there is no more Triacle at Galaad, and there is no Phisician, that cā heale the hurte of my people.

The ii. Chapter.

O, WHO will geue my heade water ynough, & a well of teares for myne eyes: that I maye wepe night & daye, for the slaughter of my people? Wolde God that I had a cottage some where farre from folke, that I might leaue my people, and go from thē: for they be all aduoutrers and a shrenckinge sorte. They bēde their tūges like bowes, to shute out lies: As for the treuth, they maye nothinge awaye with all in the worlde. For they go from one wickednes to another, and holde nothinge of me, saith the LORDE.

Yee one must kepe himself from another, "no man maye safelye trust his owne brother: for one brother vndermyne another, & one neyghboure begyleth another. Yee one dissembleth with another, and they deale with no treuth. <sup>b</sup>They haue practised their tūges to lye, and taken greate paynes to do myschefe. They haue set their stole in the myddest of disceate, and (for very dissemblinge falsede) they wil not knowe me, saith the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, beholde, I wil melte them and trie thē, for what shulde I els do to my people? Their tūges are like sharpe arrowes, <sup>c</sup>to speake disceate. With their mouth they speake peaceably to their neyghboure, but preuely they laye waite for him. Shulde I not punysh them for these thinges, saith the LORDE? <sup>d</sup>Or, shulde I not be auenged of eny soch people, as this? <sup>e</sup>Vpon the mountaynes will I take vp a lamentacion and soroufull crie, and a mournyng vpon the fayre playnes of the wildernes: Namely, how they are so brente vp, that no man goeth there any more: Yee a man shal not heare one beast crie there.

<sup>f</sup>Byrdes and catell are all gone from thēce. I will make Ierusalem also an heape of stones, and a denne of venomous wormes. And I wil make the cities of Iuda so waist, that no man shal dwell therein. What man is so wise, as to vnderstonde this? Or to whom hath the LORDE spoken by mouth, that he maye shewe this, and saye: <sup>g</sup>O thou londe, why perishest thou so? Wherefore art thou so brent vp, and like a wilderness, that no mā goeth thorow? Yee the LORDE himself tolde the same vnto them, that forsoke his lawe, and kepthe not the thyng that he gaue them in commaundement, nether lyued thereafter: <sup>h</sup>but folowed the wickednes of their owne herthes, and serued straunge goddes, as their fathers taught them.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: Beholde, I will fede this people with wormwod, and geue thē gall to drynke. <sup>i</sup>I will scatere them also amonge the Heithen, whom nether they ner their fathers haue knowne: and I will sende a swearde amonge them, <sup>j</sup>to persecute them, vntill I bringe them to naught. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: loke that ye call for mournyng wyues, and sende for wise women: that they come shortly, and singe a mournyng songe of you: that the teares maye fall out of oure eyes, and that oure eye lyddes maye guszhe out of water.

For there is a lamentable noyse herde of Sion: O how are we so sore destroyed? O how are we so piteously confounded? We must forsake oure owne naturall countre, and we are shot out of oure owne lodgiges. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye women) and let youre eares regarde the wordes of his mouth: that ye maye lerne youre daughters to mourne, and that euery one maye teach hir neyghboursse, to make lamentacion. Namely thus: Deeth is clymmē vp in at oure wyndowes, he is come in to oure houses, to destroye the childe before the dore, & <sup>k</sup>y yonge man in the strete.

But tell thou planely, thus saith <sup>l</sup>the LORDE: The deed bodies of men shal lye vpon <sup>m</sup>the ground, as the donge vpon the felde, <sup>n</sup>and as the hay after the mower, and there shal be no man to take them vp. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: Let not the wise man reioyse in his wisdom, ner the stronge man in his strength, <sup>o</sup>neither the rich man in his riches: But who so wil reioyse, let him reioyse in this, that he vnderstōdeth, and knoweth me: for I am the LORDE, which do mercie, equite and rightuousnes vpon earth. <sup>p</sup>Therefore haue I pleasure in such thinges, saith  $\S$  LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil vyset all them, whose foreskynne is vncircumcised: The Egipcians, <sup>a</sup> the Iewes, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the shauen Madianites, that dwel in the wilderness. <sup>b</sup> For all  $\S$  Gentiles are vncircumcised in the flesh, but all the house of Israel, are vncircumcised in the herte.

The x. Chapter.

HEARE the worde of the LORDE,  $\S$  he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne after the maner of the Heithē, <sup>c</sup> and ye shal not be afraied for the tokens of heauen: for the Heithen are afraied of soch: Yee all the customes and lawes of the Gētiles are nothinge, but vanite. <sup>d</sup> They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the hondes of the workeman, and fashion it with the axe: they couer it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it with nales and hammers, that it moue not. It stōdeth as stiff as the palme tre, it can nether speake ner go, but must be borne. <sup>e</sup> Be not ye afraied of soch, for they cā do nether good ner euil. But there is none like vnto  $\S$  (o LORDE) thou art greate, <sup>f</sup> and greate is the name of thy power. Who wolde not feare the? or what kige of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

For amonge all the wysemen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye be lickened vnto the. They are all together vnlernd and vnwise, All their connyng is but vanite: namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beatē to plates: <sup>g</sup> and golde from Ophir, a worke  $\S$  is made with the honde of the craftesman  $\S$  the caster, clothed with yalow sylck and scarlet: euen so is the worke of their wyse men all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyuinge God, and an euerlastinge kinge. <sup>h</sup> Yf he be wroth, the earth shaketh: all the Gētiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their goddesses, it maye well be sayde of thē: they are goddesses, that made nether beauē ner earth: therefore shal they perish frō the earth, and from all thinges vnder heauen.

But (as for oure God) he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdom hath he fynished the whole compasse of the worlde, with his discrecion hath he spred out the heauens, At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he draweth vp  $\S$  cloudes from the vttemost partes of  $\S$  earth: <sup>i</sup> he turneth lighteninge to rayne, and brighet forth the wyndes out of their treasures: <sup>j</sup> His wisdom maketh all men fooles. And confunded be all casters of ymages, <sup>k</sup> for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. <sup>l</sup> The vayne craftes men with their workes, that they in their vanite haue made, shall perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuertheles, Iacobs porciō is not soch: but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaūce: The LORDE of hoostes is his name. Put away thy vncleennesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inhabitours of this londe a greate waye off, and trouble them of soch a fashiō, that they shal no more be founde.

Alas, how am I hurte? Alas, how panefull are my scourges vnto me? For I cōsidre this sorow by my self,  $\S$  I must suffre it, My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My children are gone fro me, and can no where be founde. Now haue I none to sprede out my tente, or to set vp my hanginges. For the hyrdmen haue done folishly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therefore haue they dealt vnwisely with their cattell,  $\S$  all are scatred abroad. Beholde, the noyse is harde at honde, and greate sediciō out of the north: to make the cities of Iuda a wyldernes, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. <sup>m</sup> Now I knowe (o LORDE) that it is not in mā's power to ordre his owne waies, or to rule his owne steppes  $\S$  goinges. Therefore chastē thou vs (o LORDE) but with fauoure, <sup>n</sup> and not in thy wrath, bringe vs not vtterly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gētiles, that knowe  $\S$  not, and vpon the people that call not on thy name: And that because they haue consumed, deuoured and destroyed Iacob, and haue roted out his glory.

The xi. Chapter.

A THIS is another Sermon, which the LORDE commaunded Ieremy for to preach, sayenge :

Hear the wordes of the couenaunt, and speake vnto all Iuda, and to all them that dwel at Ierusalem, And saye thou vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Cursed be euery one, that is not obedient vnto y<sup>e</sup> wordes of this couenaunt: which I commaunded vnto youre fathers, what tyme as I brought them out of Egipte, from the yron forname, sayenge: <sup>a</sup>Be obedient vnto my voyce, and do accordinge to all that I commaunde you: <sup>b</sup>so shal ye be my people, and I wil be youre God, and will kepe my promyse, y<sup>e</sup> I haue sworne vnto youre fathers: Namely, that I wolde geue them <sup>c</sup>a londe which floweth with mylke and hony, as ye se, it is come to passe vnto this daye.

Then answered I, and sayde: Amen. It is euen so LORDE, as thou sayest. Then the LORDE sayde vnto me agayne: Preach this in y<sup>e</sup> cities off Iuda and rounde aboute Ierusalem, and saye: Hear the wordes off this cōuenaunt, that ye maye kepe them. For I haue diligently exorted youre fathers, euer sence the tyme that I brought them out off the Londe off Egipte, vnto this daye. I gaue them warnynge by tymes, sayenge: B herken vnto my voyce: <sup>d</sup>Neuertheles, they wolde not obeye me, nor encline their eares vnto me, <sup>e</sup>but folowed the wicked ymaginaciōs of their owne hertes. And therefore haue I accused them as transgressours of all the wordes off this couenaunt, that I gaue them to kepe, which they (notwithstōdinge) haue not kepte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: It is foude out, that whole Israel and all the citisens off Ierusalem are gone backe. They haue turned them selues to the blasphemies off their fore fathers, which had no lust to heare my worde. Euen likewise haue these also folowed straunge goddes, and worshipped them. The house off Israel and Iuda haue broken my couenaunt, which I made with their fathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Be-holde, I will sende a plage amouge you, which ye shal not be able to escape: and though ye crie vnto me, I will not heare you. <sup>f</sup>The shal the townes off Iuda and the citisens off Ierusalem go, and call vpon their goddes, vnto whom they made their oblacōs: <sup>g</sup>but they are not able to helpe them in tyme off their trouble. <sup>h</sup>For as many cities as thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also: <sup>i</sup>And loke how many stretes there be in the (o Ierusalem) so many shameful aulters haue ye set vp, to offre vpon them vnto Baal. <sup>j</sup>But praye not thou for this people, byd nether prayse ner prayer for them: for though they crie vnto me in their trouble, yet will I not heare them.

O thou beloued, why doest thou so shameful greate blasphemies in my house? <sup>k</sup>euen as though that holy flesh might absolue the, specially when thou hast made thy boost off thy wickednes. The LORDE called the a grene olyue tre, <sup>l</sup>a fayre one, a frutefull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary reporte off the abrode, he will burne the vp, <sup>m</sup>ad destroye thy braunches. <sup>n</sup>For the LORDE off hoostes that plated the, hath deuyed a plage for the (o thou house of Israel & Iuda) for y<sup>e</sup> euil that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wrath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) haue I lerned of the, and vnderstonde it, for thou hast shewed me their ymaginaciōs. <sup>o</sup>But I (as a meke lambe) was caried awaye to be slayne: not knowinge, that they had deuyed such a counceyl agaynst me, sayenge: <sup>p</sup>We will destroye his meate with wod, and dryue him out of the londe of the lyuyng, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therefore I will beseke the now (o LORDE of hoostes) <sup>q</sup>thou rightuous iudge, thou that tryest the reynes and the hertes: let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therefore spake thus of the citisens of Anothot, that sought to slaye me, sayenge: <sup>r</sup>Preach not vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure hondes. Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I will viset you. Your yonge mē shal perish with the swerde, youre sonnes and youre daughters shal vtterly dye of hunger,

The xij. Chapter.

A O LORDE, thou art more rightuous, then that I shulde dispute with the: Neuertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. "How happeneth it, that the waye off the vngodly is so prosperous? and that it goeth so wel with them, which (with out eny shame) offēde and lyue in wickednesse? Thou plantest them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boast moch off the, yet doest thou not punysh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, & proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house,<sup>a</sup> and apoynte them for the daye off slaughtinge.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therein?

"The catell and the byrdes are gone, yet saye they: tush, God wil not destroye vs vtterly.

Seinge thou art weery in runnyng with the fote men, how wilt thou then runne with horses? In a peaceable sure londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Iordane? For thy brethren ād thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence.

B "Beleue them not, though they speake fayre wordes to the. As for me (saye I) I haue forsaken myne owne dwellinge place, and left myne heretage. My life also that I loue so wel, haue I geuen in to the hōdes of myne enemies. Myne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therefore haue I forsaken it. "Myne heretage is vnto me, as a speckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse coloures is vpon it. Go hence, and gather all the beastes of the felde together, that they maye eate it vp.

"Dyuerse hyrdmē haue broken downe my vynyarde, and troden vpon ny porcion. Of my pleasaunt porcion, they haue made a wildernes & deserte. They haue layed it waist: and now that it is waist, it sigheth vnto me. Yee the whole londe lieth waist, and no man regardeth it. The destroyers come ouer the heeth euery waye, for "the swarde off the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of y lōde to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reape thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe confounded of youre owne wynnynges, because of the greate wrath of the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE vpon all myne C cruel neighbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Israel: Beholde, I wil plucke them (namely Israel) out of their londe, and put out the house of Iuda from amonge them. "And whē I haue rooted thē out, I wilbe at one with thē agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them: and brynge them agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lōde. And yf they (namely that trouble my people) wil lerne y wayes of them, to swear by my name: The LORDE lyueth (like as they lerned my people to swear by Baal) thē shal they be rekened amōge my people. "But yf they wil not obeye, the wil I rote out the samie folke, and destroye them, saith the LORDE.

The xij. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus saied the LORDE A vnto me: go thy waye & get the a lynnē breche, and gyrd it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a breche, accordinge to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the breche that thou hast prepared & put aboute the, and get the vp, and go vnto Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wēt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe after this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Vp, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the breche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp, and toke the brech from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the brech was corrupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus B saith the LORDE: Euen so wil I corrupte the pryde off Iuda, and the hie mynde off

B Then spake the LORDE, concernynge this people: ŷ haue pleasure to go so nembly with their fete, and leaue not of, and therefore displease the LORDE: in so moch, that he will now bringe agayne to remembrance all their mysdedes, and punysh all their synnes. Yee euen thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt not praye to do this people good. ⁹ For though they fast, I will not heare their prayers. And though they offre burnt offrises and sacrifices, yet will not I accepte them. For I will destroye them with the swerde, hunger and pestilence. Then answerde I: O LORDE God, the prophetes saye vnto them: ⁸ Tush, ye shal se no swerde, and no hunger shal come vpon you, but the LORDE shal geue you continuall rest in this place.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The prophetes preach lies vnto them in my name. I haue not spoken with them, nether gaue I them eny charge, nether dyd I sende the: yet they preach vnto you false visions, charmynge, vanite, and discautfulness of their owne herte. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: As for those prophetes that preach in my name (whom I neuertheles haue not sent) and ŷ saye: Tush, there shal nether batel ner hunger be in this londe: With swerde and with hunger shal those prophetes perish, ⁹ and the people to whom they haue preached, shal be cast out of Ierusalem, dye of hunger, and be slayne with the swerde, (and there shal be no man to burie them) both they and their wyues, their sonnes and their daughters. For thus wil I poure their wickednes vpon the. This shalt thou saye also vnto them: Myne eyes shal wepe without ceasinge daye and night. For my people shalbe destroyed with greate harme, and shall perish with a greate plage. For yff I go in to the felde, lo, it lieth all full off slayne men: Yff I come in to the cite, lo, they be all famished of hunger.

Yee their prophetes also and prestes shal be led in to an vnknowne londe.

Hast thou then vtterly forsaken Iuda? B (sayde I) Dost thou so abhorre Siō? Or hast thou so plagued vs, that we can be healed no more? ⁸ We looked for peace, and there cometh no good: for the tyme of health, and lo, here is nothinge but trouble. We knowlege (o LORDE) all oure mysdedes, and the synnes of oure fathers, that we haue offended ŷ. Be not displeased (o LORDE) for thy names sake, forget not thy louynge kyndnes: ⁹ Remembre ŷ trone of thyne honoure, breake not the couenaunt, that thou hast made with vs. ⁹ Are there eny amonge the goddes of the Gentiles, that sende rayne, or geue the showers of heauen? Dost not thou it o LORDE oure God, in whō we trust? Yee LORDE, thou dost all these things.

The xv. Chapter.

THEN spake the LORDE vnto me, and sayde: ⁸ Though Moses and Samuel stode before me, yet haue I no herte to this people. Dryue them awaye, that they maye go out of my sight. And yf they saye vnto the: Whyther shal we go? The tell the: The LORDE geueth you this answer: Some vnto death, some to the swerde, some to hunger, some in to captiuyte. For I will bringe foure plagis vpon them, saith the LORDE. ⁹ The swerde shal stragle them, the dogges shal deuoure them, the foules of the ayre and beestes of the earth shal eate them vp, and destroye them. I will scatere them aboute also in all kingdomes and londes to be plagued, because of Manasses the sonne of Ezechias kinge of Iuda, for the things that he dyd in Ierusalem.

Who shal then haue pite vpon the, o Ierusalem? Who shal be sory for the? Or who shal make intercession, to opteyne peace for the? seinge thou goest fro me, and turnest backward, saith the LORDE? Therefore I will stretch out myne honde against the, to destroye the, and I will not be intreated. I will scatere the abroad with the fanne on euery side of the londe: ⁹ I will waist my people and destroye them, for they haue had no lust to turne from their owne wayes. I will make their wyddowes mo in nombre, then the sondes of the see. Vpon ŷ mothers of their children, I shal bringe a destroyer in the noone daye.

The Sonne shall fayle her in the cleare daye, when she shalbe confounded and faynte for very heynesse. <sup>a</sup> As for those <sup>y</sup> remayne, I wil delyuer them vnto the swearde off their enemies, saith the LORDE. <sup>c</sup> O mother, alas that euer thou dydest beare me, anemie and hated of the whole londe: Though I neuer lente ner receaued vpon vsury, yet euery man speake euell vpon me. And <sup>y</sup> LORDE answered me: Lede not I the then vnto good? Come not I to the, when thou art in trouble: and helpe <sup>y</sup>, when thine enemy oppresseth the? Doth one yron hurte another, or one metall that cometh from the north, another? As for youre riches and treasure, I wil geue them out in to a pray, <sup>a</sup> not for eny money, but because of all youre synnes, that ye haue done i all youre coastes. And I wil brige you with youre enemies in to a londe, <sup>c</sup> <sup>y</sup> ye knowe not: for the fyre that is kyndled in my indignacion, shal burne you vp.

O LORDE (sayde I then) thou knowest all thinges, therefore remembre me, <sup>ad</sup> viset me, delyuer me fro my persecuters: Receaue not my cause in thy lōge wrath, yet thou knowest, that for thy sake I suffre rebuke. <sup>d</sup> When I had founde thy wordes, I at them vpgredely: they haue made my hert ioyfull <sup>e</sup> glad. For I call vpon thy name, o LORDE God off hoostes. I dwell not amonge the scornors, nether is my delyte therin: but I dwell only in the feare of thy honde, for thou hast fylled me with bytternes. Shall my heynes endure for euer? Are my plagges then so greate, <sup>y</sup> they maye neuer be healed? Wilt thou be as a water, that falleth, and can not contynue? Vpon these wordes, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Yf thou wilt turne agayne, I shal set the in my seruyce: and yf thou wilt take out the thinge that is precious from the vyle, thou shalt be euen as myne owne mouth. <sup>f</sup> They shal conuerte vnto the, but turne not thou vnto thē: and so shal I make the a strōge wall of stele agaynst this people. <sup>g</sup> They shal fight agaynst the, but they shal not prenaile. For I my self will be with the, to helpe the, and delyuer the, saith the LORDE. And I will ryd the out of the hondes of the wicked, and delyuer the out of the honde of Tirautes.

The xvi. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus sayde the LORDE <sup>a</sup> vnto me: Thou shalt take <sup>y</sup> no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their fathers that haue begotten them in this londe, thus saith the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible deeth, no mā shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as dōge vpon the earth. They shal perish thorow the swearde and hunger, and their bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the earth. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE: Go not vnto them, that come together, for to mourne and wepe: for I haue taken my peace fro this people (saith the LORDE) yee my fauoure and my mercy. And in this londe shal they dye, olde and yonge, and shall not be buried: no man shall bewepe them, no man shall clippe or shaue himself for them.

There shal not one viset another, to mourne with them for their deed, or to comforte them. One shall not offre another the cuppe off consolacion, to forget their heynes for father and mother. <sup>b</sup> Thou shalt not go in to their feast house, to syt downe, moch lesse to eate or drynke with them. For thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: <sup>b</sup> Beholde, I shall take awaye out of this place, the voyce off myrth <sup>ad</sup> gladnesse, the voyce off the brydegrome and off the bryde: yee and that in youre dayes, that ye maye se it.

<sup>c</sup> Now when thou shewest this people all these wordes, and they saye vnto the: Wherefore hath the LORDE deuysed all this greate plage for vs? Or what is the offence and synne, that we haue done agaynst the LORDE oure God? Then make thou them this answer: Because youre fathers haue forsaken me (saith the LORDE) <sup>d</sup> and haue cleued vnto straunge goddes, whom they haue honoured and worshipped: but me haue they forsakē, and haue not kepte my lawe. <sup>e</sup> And ye with youre shamefull blasphemies, haue exceeded the wickednes off youre fathers. For euery one off you foloweth the frawerde euel ymaginacion off his owne hert, and is not obedient vnto me.

Therefore wil I cast you out off this londe, in to a londe that ye and youre fathers knowe not: and there shall ye serue straunge goddes daye and night, there will I shewe you no fauoure. Beholde therfore (saith the LORDE) the daies are come, that it shall nomore be sayed: <sup>a</sup>The LORDE lyueth, which brought the children of Israel out of the lode of Egipte: but (it shall be sayde) the LORDE lyueth, that brought the children of Israel from the North, † from all londes where I had scatred them. For I wil bringe thē agayne in to the lode, that I gaue vnto their fathers.

Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will sende out many fiszhers<sup>c</sup> to take them, and after † wil I sende out many hunters to hunte thē out, from all mountaynes and hilles <sup>ad</sup> out of the caues of stones. For myne eyes beholde all their wayes, and they can not be hyd from my face, nether can their wicked dedes be kepte close out of my sight. But first will I sufficiently rewarde their shamefull blasphemies and synnes, wherwith they haue deyled my londe: Namely, with their stinckinge Idols and abhominacions, wherwith they haue fylled myne heretage. <sup>a</sup>O LORDE, my strength, my power, and refuge in tyme off trouble. The Gentiles shall come vnto the from the endes off the worlde, and saye: Verely oure fathers haue cleued vnto lies, their Idols are but vayne and vnprofitable. How can a man make those his goddes, which are not able to be goddes? And therfore, I will once teach them (saith † LORDE) I wil shewe them my honde and my power, that they maye knowe, † my name is † LORDE.

the greate synne that ye haue done vpon youre hie places, thorow out all † coostes off youre lode. Ye shall be cast out also from the heretage, that I gaue you. And I wil subdue you vnder the heuy bōdage of youre enemies, in a londe that ye knowe not. For ye haue ministred fyre to my indignacion, which shal burne euermore. Thus saith the LORDE: † Cursed be the man that putteth his trust in man, <sup>ad</sup> that taketh flesh for his arme: and he, whose herte departeth from † LORDE. He shall be like the heeth, that groweth in the wildernes. As for the good thinge that is for to come, he shall not se it: but dwell in a drie place off the wildernes, in a salt and vnoccupied londe. O Blissd is the man, <sup>a</sup> that putteth his trust in the LORDE, and whose hope the LORDE is himself. For he shalbe as a tre, that is planted by the water syde: which spredeth out the rote vnto moystnesse, whom the heate can not harme, when it commeth, but his leaues are grene. And though there growe but little frute because off drouth, yet is he not carefull, but he neuer leaueth off to bringe forth frute. Amonge all thinges lyuynge, man hath the most disceatfull and vnsercheable hert.

Who shall then knowe it? <sup>a</sup>Euen I the LORDE ripe out the grounde off the hert, <sup>ad</sup> search the reynes and rewarde euery mā accordinge to his wayes, and accordinge to the frute off his counceils.

The disceatfull maketh a nest, but bringeth forth no yonge: He commeth by riches, but not rightuously. In the myddst off his life must he leaue them behinde him, and at the last be founde a very foole. But thou (o LORDE) whose trone is most glorious, excellent and off most antiquite, which dwellest in the place of oure holy rest: Thou art the comforte off Israel. All they that forsake the, shalbe confounded: <sup>a</sup>all they that departe from the, shalbe written in earth, for they haue forsaken the LORDE, the very condite off the waters of life.

Heale me (o LORDE) and I shall be whole: saue thou me, and I shalbe saued, for thou art my prayse. Beholde, these men saye vnto me: Where is the worde of the LORDE? Let it come. Where as I neuertheles ledynge

Let my persecuters be confounded, but not me: let them be afayed, and not me. Thou shalt bringe vpon the tyme off their plage, and shalt destroye them right sore.

D Agayne, thus hath the LORDE sayde vnto me: <sup>b</sup>Go and stonde vnder the gate, where thorow the people and the kinges of Iuda go out and in, yee vnder all the gates of Ierusalem, and saye vnto them: Heare the wordes of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, and all thou people of Iuda, and all ye citesyns of Ierusalem, that go thorow this gate: Thus the LORDE commaundeth: <sup>c</sup>Take hede for youre lyues, that ye carie no burthen vpon you in the Sabbath, to bringe it thorow the gates of Ierusalem: ye shall beare no burthen also out of youre houses in the Sabbath: Ye shall do no labour there in, but halowe the Sabbath, as I commaunded your fathers. <sup>d</sup>How be it they obeyed me not, nether herkened they vnto me: but were obstinate & stubburne, & nether obeyed me, ner receaued my correccion.

E Neuertheles, yf ye will heare me (saith the LORDE) and beare no burthen in to <sup>e</sup> cite thorow this gate vpon the Sabbath: Yf ye will halowe the Sabbath, <sup>f</sup>so that ye do no worke there in: then shal there go thorow the gates of this cite, kinges and prynces, that shall syt vpon the stole of Dauid: They shall be caried vpon charettes, and ryde vpon horses, both they and their princes: Yee whole Iuda and all the citesyns of Ierusalem shall go here thorow, and this cite shall euer be the more and more inhabited. There shall come men also from the cities of Iuda, from aboute Ierusalem, & from <sup>g</sup>londe of Ben Iamin, from the playne felde, from the mountaynes and from the wilderness: which shall bringe burntofferings, sacrifices, oblations, and incense, and offre vp thankegeuyng in the house of the LORDE. But yf ye will not be obedient vnto me, to halowe the Sabbath, so that ye will beare youre burthens thorow the gates off Ierusalem vpon the Sabbath: Then shall I set fyre vpon the gates off Ierusalem, & it shal burne vp the houses off Ierusalem, and no man shal be able to quench it.

The xliij. Chapter.

This is another communicacion, that God had with Ieremy, sayenge:

ARISE, and go downe in to the Potters house, and there shall I tell the more off my mynde. Now when I came to the Potters house, I founde him makinge his worke vpon a whele. The vessel that the Potter made off claye, brake amonge his hōdes: So he beganne a new, and made another vessell, accordinge to his mynde. Then sayde the LORDE thus vnto me: <sup>h</sup>Maye not I do with you, as this Potter doth, O ye house off Israel? saith the LORDE? Beholde, ye house off Israel: ye are in my honde, euen as the claye in the Potters honde.

<sup>i</sup>When I take in honde to rote out, to destroye, or to waist awaye eny people or kīgdome: yff that people (agaynst whom I haue thus deuysed) couerte from their wickednes: Immediately, I repente off the plage, that I deuysed to bringe vpon the. <sup>j</sup>Agayne: Whē I take in honde, to buylde, or to plante a people or a kingdome: yff the same people do euell before me, and heare not my voyce: Immediately, I repente of the good, that I deuysed to do for them.

Speake now therfore vnto whole Iuda, and to them that dwell at Ierusalem: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I am deuysinge a plage for you, and am takinge a thinge in honde agaynst you.

B Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Axe amonge the Heithen, yf eny man hath herde soch horrible thinges, as the daughter of Sion hath done. Shal not <sup>n</sup> snowe (y melteth vpon the stony rockes of Libanus) moysture the felde? Or maye the springes off waters be so grauen awaye, that they runne no more, geue moystnesse, ner make frutefull? But my people hath so forgotten me, ¶ they haue made sacrifice vnto vayne goddes. And whyle they folowed their owne wayes they are come out of the hie strete, and gone in to a fote waye not vsed to be troden. Where thorow they haue brought their londe in to an enerlastinge wildernesse and scorne: "So ¶ who so euer trauayleth ther by, shalbe abashed, and wagge their heades. With an East wynde will I scatere thē, before their enemies. And when their destruction cōmeth, I will turne my backe vpō them, but not my face.

¶Therefore let their childrē dye of hunger, and let them be oppressed with the swearde. Let their wyues be robbed of their childrē, and become wyddowes: "let their huszbōdes be slayne, let their yonge men be kylled with the swearde in the felde. Let the noyse be herde out of their houses, when the murtherer cōmeth sodenly vpon them: For they haue digged a pit to take me, and layed snares for my fete. "Yet LORDE, thou knowest all their coicell, that they haue deuysed, to slaye me. And therefore forgeue them not their wickednes, and let not their synne be put out of thy sight: but let them be iudged before the as the giltye: This shalt thou do vnto thē in ¶ tyme of thy indignacion.

The xix. Chapter.

the porte that is made of brick, ¶ shewe them there the wordes, that I shall tell the, and saye thus vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, ād ye citesyns of Ierusalem: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe soch a plage vpon this place, that ¶ eares of all that heare it, shal glowe. "And that because they haue forsakē me, and vnhalowed this place, and haue offred in it vnto straunge goddes: whō nether they, their fathers, ner the kinges off Iuda haue knowne. They haue filled this place also with the bloude of innocentes, "for they haue set vp an aluter vnto Baal, to burne their children for a burnt-offringe vnto Baal, which I nether commaunded, ner charged them, nether thought once there vpon.

In Tophet shal they be buried,<sup>p</sup> for they shal haue none other place. Thus wil I do vnto this place also, saith the LORDE, and to thē ¶ dwell there in: yee I wil do to this cite, as vnto Tophet (For the houses of Ierusalē ¶ the houses of the kinges of Iuda are defyled, like as Tophet,) because off all the houses, in whose parlors they dyd sacrifice vnto all the hooste of heauē, and poured out

And so Jeremy came from Tophet, where the LORDE had sent him to prophecie, and stode in the courte off the house off the LORDE, and spake to all the people: Thus saiethe the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe vpon this cite and vpon euery towne aboute it, all the plagis that I haue deuyed agaynst them: for they haue bene obstinate,<sup>a</sup> ad wolde not obeye my warnynges.

The rr. Chapter.

WHEN Pashur the preast, the sonne off Emmer, chefe in the house of  $\gamma$  LORDE, herde Jeremy preach so stedfastly: <sup>b</sup>he smote Ieremy, and put him in the stockes, that are by the hie gate of Ben Iamin, in the house of  $\gamma$  LORDE. The nexte daye folowing, Pashur brought Ieremy out of the stockes agayne. Then sayde Ieremy vnto him: The LORDE shall call the nomore Pashur (that is excellent and increasinge) but Magor (that is fearfull ad afrayed) euery where. For thus saiethe the LORDE: beholde, I will make the afrayed, the thy self, and all that fauoure  $\gamma$ : which shal perish with the swearde off their enemies, euen before thy face.

And I wil geue whole Iuda vnder the power of the kinge of Babilon, which shall carie some vnto Babilon presoners, and slaye some with the swearde. Morouer, <sup>c</sup>all  $\gamma$  substance of this londe, all their precious and gorgeous workes, all costlynnesse, and all the treasure of the kinges of Iuda: wil I geue in to the hōdes of their enemies, which shal spoyle them, and carie them vnto Babilon. But as for the (o Pashur) thou shalt be caried vnto Babilon with all thine housholde,  $\tau$  to Babilō shalt thou come, where thou shalt die, and be buried: thou and all thy fauourers, to whom thou hast preached lies. O LORDE, thou makest me weake, but thou refreshest me,  $\tau$  makest me stronge agayne. <sup>d</sup>All the daye longe am I despyed, and laughed to scorne of euery man: because I haue now preached longe agaynst malicious Tyranny, and shewed them off destruction. <sup>e</sup>For  $\gamma$  which cause they cast the worde off the LORDE in my teth, and take me euer to the worst.

to speake of him, ner to preach eny more in his name. But the worde off the LORDE was a very burnyunge fyre in my hert and in my bones, which when I wolde haue stopped, I might not. For why, I herde so many derisiois and blasphemies, <sup>f</sup>yee euen of myne owne companions, and off soch as were conuersaunte with me: which wente aboute, to make me afrayed sayenge: vpon him, let vs go vpon him, to feare him, and make him holde his touge:  $\gamma$  we maye ouercome him, and be avenged off him.

But the LORDE stode by me, like a mightie giaunte: therefore my persecuters fell, and coude do nothinge. They shal be sore confounded, for they haue done vnwisely, they shall haue an euerlasting shame. And now, o LORDE of hoostes, <sup>g</sup>thou rightuous sercher (which knowest the reynes and the very hertes:) let me se them punyshed, for vnto the I committe my cause.

Synge vnto the LORDE, and prayse him, for he hath deluyered the soule off the oppressed, from the honde off the violent. Cursed be the daye, wherein I was borne: <sup>h</sup>vnhappy be  $\gamma$  daye, where in my mother brought me forth. Cursed be the man, that brought my father the tidinges, to make him glad, sayenge: thou hast gotten a sonne. Let it happen vnto that man, as to the cities<sup>i</sup> which  $\gamma$  LORDE turned vpside downe (when he had longe herde the wicked rumoure of them) because he slewe me not, as soone as I came out off my mothers wombe, and because my mother was not my graue herself, that the byrth might not haue come out, but remainyd still in her. <sup>k</sup>Wherefore came I forth off my mothers wombe? To haue experience of laboure and sorowe? and to lede my life with shame?

The rri. Chapter.

THES E are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him Pashur the sonne off Melchias, and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia, prest, sayenge: Axe counsell at the LORDE (we praye the) of oure behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (peradventure) will deale with vs, acordinge to his maruelous power, and take him from vs.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THUS sayde the LORDE also: Go <sup>a</sup> downe in to the house of the kinge off Iuda, and speake there these wordes, & saye: Heare the worde off the LORDE, thou kinge off Iuda that syttest in the kyngly seate off Dauid: thou and thy seruantes and thy people, that go in & out at this gate. <sup>b</sup> Thus the LORDE commaundeth: kepe equite and rightuousnesse, deluyer the oppressed frō the power off the violent: do not greue ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, & shed no innocēt bloude in this place.

And yff ye kepe these thinges faithfully, then shall there come in at the dore off this house kynges, to syt vpo Dauids seate: they shal be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon horses, both they & their seruantes, & their people. <sup>c</sup> But yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I swaie by myne owne self (saith & LORDE) this house shal be waist. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vpon the kinges house of Iuda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye off it, yf I make the not so waist (<sup>d</sup> thy cities also) that no man shal dwell there in? <sup>e</sup> I wil prepare a destroyer with his weapens for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shall speake one to another: Wherfore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenant off the LORDE their God, <sup>f</sup> and haue worshipped and serued straunge goddes. Mourn not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sory for him that departeth awaye: for he cometh not agayne, & seeth his natyue countre no more. For thus saith the LORDE, <sup>g</sup> as touchinge Sellum the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, which reigned after his father, and is caried out off this place:

He shal neuer come hither agayne, for he shal dye in the place, wher vnto he is led captiue, and shall se this londe nomore. <sup>h</sup> Wo worth him, that buyldeth his house with vn-rightuousnes, & his perlers with the good,

C that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neighbours laboure, ner payeth him his hyre. He thinketh in himself: I wil buylde me a wyde house, ad gorgeous perlers: He causeth wyndowes to be hewen there in, and the sylinges and geastes maketh he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkst thou to reigne, now that thou proouokest me to wrath with thy Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as lōge as he dealt with equite ad rightuousnesse? Yee when he helped y oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes? saith the LORDE. Neuertheles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon covetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wronge and violence. And therefore, thus saith the LORDE agaynst Ioachim, y sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda: "They shall not mourne for him (as they vse to do) alas brother, alas syster: Nether shall they saye vnto him: Alas syr, alas for that noble pryuce. But as an Asse shall he be buried, corrupte and be cast without the gates of Ierusalem.

D Clymme vp the hill off Libanus (o thou daughter Sion) lift vp thy voyce vpon Basan, erie from all partes: for all thy louers are destroyed. I gaue the warninge, whyle thou wast yet i prosperite, But thou saydest: I wil not heare. And this maner hast thou vsed from thy youth, that thou woldest neuer heare my voyce. All thy hyrdmen shalbe dryuen with the wynde, and thy derlinges shalbe caried awaye in to captiuyte: Then shalt thou be brought to shame and confucion, because of all thy wickednes: <sup>a</sup> thou that dwellest vpon Libanus, ad makest thy nest in the Cedre trees. O how greate shal thy mournynge be, when thy sorowes come vpon the, as a woman traueling with childe?

E As truly as I lyeue (saith the LORDE.) <sup>c</sup> Though Iechonias the sonne off Ioachim kinge off Iuda were the signet off my right honde, yet will I plucke him of: And I wil geue the in to y power off thē that seke to slaye the, and in to the power off them that thou fearest: in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon, and in to the power of the Caldees. Morouer, I will sende the, and thy mother that bare the, in to a straunge londe, where ye were not borne, ad there shall ye dye. But as for the londe that ye will desyre to returne vnto, ye shall neuer come at it agayne. This mā Iechonias shal be like an ymage robbed and torne in peeces, which pleaseth no man, for all his apparell. Wherefore both he and his sede shalbe sent awaye, and cast out in to a lōde, that they knowe not.

O thou earth, earth, earth: heare the worde off the LORDE. Wryte this man amonge the outlawes, for no prosperite shall this man haue all his life longe. Nether shall eny of his sede be so happie, as to syt vpon the seate of Dauid, and to beare rule in Iuda.

The xxiij. Chapter.

WO be vnto the shepherdes, <sup>a</sup> that destroye, and scatre my flocke, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, this is the commaundemēt of the LORDE God of Israel, vnto the shepherdes that fede my people: Ye scatre ad thrust out my flocke, and loke not vpon them. Therefore, now will I vyset the wickednes of youre ymaginations, saith y LORDE: And will gather together the remnant of my flocke, from all londes that I had dryuen them vnto, and will bringe them agayne to their pastures, that they maye growe and increace. I will set shepherdes also ouer them, which shall fede them. They shall no more feare and drede, for there shall none off them be lost, saith the LORDE. the north londe, and from all countrees where I had scatred them, and they shal dwell in their owne londe agayne.

My herte breaketh in my body because of the false prophetes, all my bones shake: I am become like a droneken man (that by the reason of wyne can take no rest) for very feare of the LORDE, and of his holy wordes: Because the londe is full of adouterers, where thorow it is destroyed and mourneth,<sup>a</sup> and y pleasant pastures of the deserte are dried vp. Yee the waye that men take, is wicked, & their gouernance is nothinge like the holy worde of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the prestes them selues are poluted Ypocrites, and their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, their waye shall be slippery in the dareknesse, wherein they maye stacker and fall. For I wil bringe a plague vpon them, enen the yere of their visitacion, saith the LORDE. I haue sene folly amonge the prophetes of Samaria, y they preched for Baal, and disceaue my people off Israel. I haue sene also amonge the Prophetes off Ierusalem foule adoutery, and presumptuous lies. They take the most shamefull men by the hode, flatering them, so that they can not returne from their wickednes. All these with their citesyns are vnto me, as Sodom, and as the inhabitours off Gomorre.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes concernynge the prophetes: Beholde, I wil fede them with wormwod, & make them dryncke the water of gall. For fro the prophetes of Ierusalem is the sicknes of Ypocrisie come in to all the londe.

And therefore the LORDE of hostes geueth you this warnynge: Heare not the wordes of the prophetes, that preach vnto you, and disceaue you: for they speake the meanyng of their owne herte, and not out of the mouth of the LORDE. They saye vnto them, that despyse me: The LORDE hath spoken it: Tush, ye shal prospere right well. And vnto all them, that walke after the lust of their owne herte, they saye: Tush, there shall no mysfortune happen you. For who hath sytten in the counceill of the LORDE, that he hath herde and vnderstonde, what he is aboute to do? Who hath marked his deuyce, and herde it? Beholde, the stormy wether of the LORDE (that is, his indignacion) shal go forth, and shal fall downe vpon the heade of the vngodly. And the wrath of the LORDE shal not turne agayne, vntill he perfourne, and fulfill the thought of his herte. And in the latter dayes ye shall knowe his meanyng.

I haue not sent these prophetes, (saith the LORDE) and yet they ranne. I haue not spoken to them, and yet they preached. But yf they had continued in my counceill and herde my wordes: they had turned my people from their euell wayes and wicked ymaginations. Am I the God that seeth but the thinge, which is nye at honde, and not that is farr off? saith the LORDE. Maye eny man hyde him self so, that I shal not se him? saith the LORDE. Do not I fulfill heauen and earth? saith the LORDE. I haue herde well ynough, what the prophetes saye, that preach lyes in my name, sayge: I haue dreamed, I haue dreamed. How longe wil this cotynue in the prophetes hertes, to tel lyes, and to preach the craftie sotylte of their owne herte? Whose purpose is, (with the dreames that euery one tell) to make my people forget my name, as their fore fathers dyd, whē Baal came vp. The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell it: and he that vnderstonde my worde, let him shewe it faithfully.

For what hath chaffe and wheat to do together? saith the LORDE. Is not my worde like a fyre, (saith the LORDE) and like an hammer, that breaketh the harde stone? Therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I wil vpō the prophetes, that steale my worde priuely from euery man. Beholde, here am I (saith the LORDE) agaynst the prophetes, that take vpon their tunges to speake: The LORDE hath sayde it. Beholde, here am I (saith y LORDE) agaynst those prophetes, that darre prophecy lies, and disceaue my people with their vanities and miracles, whom I neuer sent, ner commaunded them. They shal do this people greate harme, saith the LORDE.

But thus shall ye saye, euery one to another: What answer hath the LORDE geuen? or, what is the LORDES commaundement? And as for the burthen of the LORDE, ye shal speake nomore of it: for euery mans owne worde is his burthen, because ye haue altered the wordes of the luyngye God the LORDE of hoostes oure God.

Thus shall euery man saye to the prophetes: what answer hath the LORDE geuen the? Or, what saith the LORDE? And not once to name the burthen of the LORDE. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: For so moch as ye haue vsed this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) where as I notwithstandinge sent vnto you, and forbadde you to speake of the LORDES burthen:

Beholde therefore, I will repute you as a burthen, and will cast you out of my presence: yee and the cite also, that I gaue you and youre fathers: and will bringe you to an euerlastinge confucion, and in to soch a shame, as shal neuer be forgotten.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THE LORDE shewed me a visiō: Beholde, there stode two maundes of fyges before y<sup>e</sup> Tēple of the LORDE, <sup>a</sup>after y<sup>e</sup> Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilō had led awaye captiue Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim kinge of Iuda, the mightie men also of Iuda, with the workemasters and cōnyng men of Ierusalem, vnto Babilon. In the one maunde were very good fyges, euen like as those that be first ripe. In the other maunde were very naughtie fyges,<sup>b</sup> which might not be eaten, they were so euell.

B Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: what seist thou Ieremy? I sayde: fyges, where of some be very good, and some so euell, that no man maye eate them.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, after this maner: Thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE the God of Israel: like as thou knowest the good fyges, so shal I knowe the men led awaye, whom I haue sent out of this place in to the londe of the Caldees, for their profite: and I will set myne eyes vpon them for the best, for I will bringe them agayne in to this londe: I will buylde them vp, and not breake them downe: I will plante them, and not rote them out. And I will geue them an herte, to knowe, how that I am the LORDE. They shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God, for they shal returne vnto me with their whole herte.

<sup>a</sup>And like as thou knowest the naughtie fyges, which maye not be eatē, they are so euell: Euen so wil I (saith the LORDE) let Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, (ye and all his prynces, & the residue of Ierusalem that remaine ouer in this londe, & them also that dwell in Egipte) to be vexed & plagued in all kingdomes & londes. And will make them to be a reprove, <sup>a</sup>a comon byworde, a laughinge stocke & shame, in all the places, where I shal seate them. I will sende the swearde, honger & pestilence amonge them, vntill I haue clene consumed them out of the londe, that I gaue vnto them & their fathers.

ASERMON that was geuen vnto Ieremy, vpon all the people of Iuda: In the fourth yeare of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, that was, in the first yeare of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon. Which sermone, Ieremy the prophet made vnto all the people of Iuda, & to all y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitours of Ierusalem, on this maner:

From the xiiij yeare of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, vnto this present daye, (that is euen xxiiij yeare) the worde of the LORDE hath bene committed vnto me. And so I haue spokē to you, I haue rysen vp early, I haue geuē you warnyng in season, but ye wolde not heare me. B Wherefore, thus saith the LORDE of hostes: Because ye haue not herkened vnto my worde, lo, I will sende out, ⁊ call for all the people, y dwell in the north<sup>a</sup> (saith the LORDE) ⁊ wil prepayre Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruauant, ⁊ wil bringe them vpon this londe, and vpon all y dwell therein, ⁊ vpon all the people that are aboute them, and will vterly rote them out. I will make of them a wilderness, a mockage, and a continuall deserte.

Morouer, I will take from them the voyce of gladnesse and solace, the voyce of the brydegrome ⁊ the bryde, the voyce of the anoynted, with the cressshettes: ⁊ this whole londe shal become a wilderness, ⁊ they shall serue the sayde people and the kinge of Babilon, thre score yeaues and ten. <sup>a</sup>When the lxx yeaues are expyred, I wil viset also the wickednesse of the kinge of Babilon ⁊ his people, saith the LORDE: yee ⁊ the londe of the Caldees, ⁊ wil make it a perpetuall wildernes, ⁊ wil fulfil all my wordes vpon that londe, which I haue deuysed agaynst it: yee all that is written in this boke, which Jeremy hath prophecied of all people: so that they also shal be subdud vnto dyuerse nacions ⁊ greates kynges, for I wil recompense them, accordinge to their dedes ⁊ workes of their owne hondes.

C For thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken vnto me: Take this wyne cuppe of indignacion fro my honde, that thou mayest cause all the people (to whom I sende the) for to drinke of it: that when they haue drunkē thereof, they maye be madd, ⁊ out of their wyttes, when the swearde commeth, that I wil sende amōge them. Then toke I the cuppe from the LORDES honde, ⁊ made all the people drynke there of, vnto whom the LORDE had sent me.

But first the cite of Ierusalem, ⁊ all the cities of Iuda, their kinges ⁊ prynces: to make

Yee ⁊ Pharao y kinge of Egipte, his seruauantes, his prynces ⁊ his people altogether one with another and all kinges of the londe of Hus, all kinges of the Philistynes londe, Ascalon, Gaza, Accaron ⁊ the remnaunt of Aszdod, the Edomites, the Moabites ⁊ the Ammonites: all the kinges of Tirus ⁊ Sidon: the kinges of the fles, that are beyonde the see: Dedan, Thema, Buz ⁊ the shauen Ismaelites: ⁊ all the kinges of Araby, ⁊ (generally) all the kinges that dwell in the deserte: all the kinges of Simri, all the kinges of Elam, all y kinges of the Meedes, all kinges towards the north (whether they be farre or nye) euery one with his neighbours: Yee and all the kingdomes that are vpon the whole earth. The kinge of Sesach (sayde he) shal drinke with them also.

And saye thou vnto them: this is the commaundement of the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: drinke and be droncken, spewe, and fall, that ye neuer ryse: and that thorow the swearde, which I wil sende amonge you. But yf they will not receaue the cuppe of thy honde, and drinke it, then tell them: Thus doth the LORDE of hostes threaten you: <sup>a</sup>drynke it ye shal, and that shortly. For I begynne to plage the cite, that my name is geuen vnto: thynke ye then, that I will leaue you vnpunyshe? Ye shall not go quyte. For why, I call for a swearde vpō all the inhabitours of the earth, saith the LORDE of hostes.

Therefore tell them all these wordes, and saye vnto them: The LORDE shal crie from aboue, and let his voyce be herde from his holy habitacion. With a greates noyse shal he crie from his courte regali. He shal geue a greates voyce (like the grape gatherers) and the sounge thereof shalbe herde vnto the endes of the worlde. For the LORDE hath a iudgment to geue vpon all people, and will holde his courte of iustice with all flesh and punyshe the vngodly, saith the LORDE.

self slaye them, from one ende of the earth to another. There shall no mone be made for eny of them, none gathered vp, none buried: but shall lie as dunge vpon the grounde.

Mourne (o ye shepherdes) & crie: sprinkle youre selues with aszshes, o ye rammes of the flocke: for the tyme of youre slaughter is fulfilled, and ye shal fall like vessels connyngly made for pleasure.

“The shepherdes shal haue no waye to fle, and the rammes of the flocke shall not escape. Then shal the shepherdes crie horribly, and the rammes of the flocke shal mourne: for the LORDE shal consume their pasture, and their best felde shal lie deed because of the horrible wrath of the LORDE. They shall forsake their foldes like as a lyon: For their londes shalbe waiste, because of the wrath of the destroyer, and because of his fearfull indignacion.

The xvi. Chapter.

IN the begynnyng of the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda, came this worde from the LORDE, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE: <sup>a</sup>Stonde in the courte of the LORDES house, and speake vnto all them which (out of the cities of Iuda) come to do worshipp in the LORDES house, all the wordes <sup>b</sup> I commaunde thee to saye. Loke that thou kepe not one worde backe, yf (perauenture) <sup>c</sup> they will herke, and turne euery man from his wicked waye: that I maye also repente of the plage, which I haue determind to bryng vpon them, because of their wicked inuencions.

And after this maner shalt thou speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: yf ye will not obeye me, to walke in my lawes, which I haue geuen you, and to heare the wordes of my seruantes the prophetes, whom I sent vnto you, rysynge vp tynely, and still sendinge: Yf ye will not folowe the (I saye) then will I do to this house, as I dyd vnto Silo, and will make this cite to be abhorred of all the people of the earth. <sup>d</sup> And the prestes, the prophetes and all the people herde Ieremy preach these wordes, in the house of the LORDE.

Now when he had spoken out all the wordes, that the LORDE commaunded him to preach vnto all the people, then the prestes, the prophetes and all the people toke holde vpon him, and sayde: thou shalt dye. How darrest thou be so bolde, as to saye in the name of the LORDE: it shal happen to this house as it dyd vnto Silo? and this cite shalbe so waiste, that no man shal dwell there in?

And when all the people were gathered aboute Ieremy in the house of the LORDE, the prynces of Iuda herde of this rumoure, & they came soone out of the kinges Palace in to the house of the LORDE, and sat them downe before the new dore of the LORDE. <sup>e</sup> Then spake the prestes and the prophetes vnto the rulers & to all the people, these wordes: <sup>f</sup> This man is worthy to dye, for he hath preached agaynst this cite, as ye youre selues haue herde with youre eares.

Then sayde Ieremy vnto the rulers and to all the people: The LORDE hath sente me to preach agaynst this house & agaynst this cite all the wordes that ye haue herde. <sup>g</sup> Therefore amende youre wayes, and youre aduysmentes, and be obedient vnto the voyce of the LORDE your God: so shal the LORDE repēt of the plage, <sup>h</sup> yf he had deuysed agaynst you. Now as for me: I am in youre hondes, do with me, as ye thinke expediet and good. But this shall ye knowe: yf ye put me to death, ye shal make youre selues, this cite & all the inhabitours there of, <sup>i</sup> giltye of innocent bloude. For this is of a treuth: that the LORDE hath sente me vnto you, to speake all these wordes in youre eares.

Then sayde the rulers and the people vnto the prestes and prophetes: This man maye not be condemned to death, for he hath preached vnto vs in the name of the LORDE our God. The Elders also of the londe stode vp, & sayde thus vnto all the people: <sup>j</sup> Micheas the Morascite, which was a prophet vnder Ezechias kinge of Iuda, spake to all the people of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: <sup>k</sup> Sion shalbe plowed like a felde, Ierusalē shalbe an heape of stones, & the hill of the LORDES house shalbe turned to an hie wod. Dyd Ezechias <sup>l</sup> kinge of Iuda & the people of Iuda put him to deeth for this? No verely, but rather feared <sup>m</sup> the LORDE, & made their prairer vnto him. For the which cause also <sup>n</sup> the LORDE repented of the plage,

There was a prophet also, that preached stilly in the name of the LORDE, called Vrias the sonne of Semeia of Cariathiarim: this mā preached also agaynst this cite τ agaynst this lōde, acordinge to all as Ieremy saith. <sup>a</sup> Now when Ioachim the kinge with all the estates τ prynces had herde his wordes, the kinge went aboute to slaye him. <sup>b</sup> When Vrias perceaued that, he was afrayed, τ fled, τ departed in to Egipte.

Then Ioachim the kinge sent seruauentes in to the lōde of Egipte, Namely: Elnathā the sonne of Achbor, τ certayne men with him in to Egipte, which fetched Vrias out of Egipte, τ brought him vnto kinge Ioachim that slewe him with the swerde, τ cast his deed body in to ȝ comō peoples graue. But Ahicam the sonne of Saphan helped Ieremy, that he came not in to the hondes of the people to be slavne.

The xxvij. Chapter.

A IN the begynnynge of the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kyng of Iuda, came this worde vnto Ieremy from the LORDE, which spake thus vnto me: Make the bondes τ chaynes, and put them aboute thy neck, τ sende thē to the kinge of Edom, the kinge of Moab, the kinge of Amon, the kinge of Tirus, τ to the kinge of Sidon: τ that by the messaugers, which shal come to Ierusalem vnto Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and byd them saye vnto their masters: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel, speake thus vnto youre masters: 'I am he that made the earth, the men τ ȝ catell that are vpon the grounde, with my greate power τ outstretched arme, τ haue geuen it vnto whom it pleased me. <sup>d</sup> And now will I deliyuer all these londes in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruauent. The beestes also of the felde shal I geue him to do him seruyce. And all people shal serue him, τ his sonne, and his childe children, vntil the tyme of the same lōde be come also: Yee many people τ greate kinges shal serue him.

Morouer, that people τ kingdome which wil not serue Nabuchodonosor, and that wil not put their neckes vnder ȝ yock of the kinge of Babilon: the same people will I viset with swerde, with hunger, with pestilence, vntill I haue consumed them in his hondes, saith the LORDE. <sup>e</sup> And therefore, folowe not youre prophetes, soythsayers, expounders of dreames, charmers τ witches, which saye vnto you: ye shal not serue the kinge of Babilon. For they preach you lies, to bringe you farre from youre londe, τ that I might cast you out, τ destroye you. But the people that put their neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, τ serue him, those I wil let remayne still in their owne lōde (saith the LORDE) τ they shal occupie it, τ dwell there in.

<sup>f</sup> All these thinges tolde I Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and sayde: Put youre neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and serue him τ his people, that ye maye lyue. Why wilt thou and thy people perish with the swerde, with hunger, with pestilence: like as the LORDE hath deuysed for all people, that wil not serue the kinge of Babilon? Therefore geue no eare vnto those prophetes (that tell you: Ye shall not serue the kinge of Babilon) for they preach you lies, <sup>g</sup> nether haue I sent them, saith the LORDE: how be it they are bolde, falsely for prophecie in my name: that I might ȝ sooner dryue you out, τ that ye might perish with youre preachers.

I spake to the prestes also and to all the people: Thus saith the LORDE: <sup>h</sup> Heare not the wordes of those prophetes, that preach vnto you, τ saye: Beholde, the vessels of the LORDES house shall shortly be brought hither agayne from Babilon: For they prophecie lies vnto you. Heare them not, but serue the kinge of Babilon, ȝ ye maye lyue. Wherefore will ye make this cite to be destroyed? But yf they be true prophetes in very dede, and yf the worde of the LORDE be comytted vnto them, then let them praye the LORDE of hostes, that the remnaunt of the ornamentes (which are in the house of the LORDE, and remayne yet in the house of the kinge of Iuda and at Ierusalem) be not caried to Babilon also. For thus hath the LORDE of hostes spoken concernynge the pylers, the lauer, the seate and the residue of the ornamentes that yet remayne in this cite, which Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon toke not, when he caried awaye Iechonias

The xxviij. Chapter.

BUT in the fourth yeare of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, in the fifth Moneth, It happened, that Hananias ¶ sonne of Assur the prophet of Gabaon, spake to me in the house of the LORDE, in the presence of the prestes ¶ and of all the people, ¶ and sayde: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I haue brokē the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and after two yeare will <sup>d</sup>I bringe agayne in to this place, all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, ¶ Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon caried awaye from this place vnto Babilon. Yee I wil bringe agayne Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim the kinge of Iuda himself, with all the presoners of Iuda, (¶ they are caried vnto Babilon,) euē in to this place, saith ¶ the LORDE, for I wil breake ¶ the yock of the kinge of Babilō.

<sup>b</sup>For thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Let not those prophetes and soythsaiers <sup>c</sup> be amonge you, disceaue you: ⁊ beleue not youre owne dreames. <sup>d</sup>For why, they preach you lies in my name, ⁊ I haue not sent them, saieith the LORDE. But thus saieith the LORDE: When ye haue fulfilled lxx yeares at Babilon, <sup>e</sup> I wil bringe you home, and of myne owne goodnes I will carie you hither agayne vnto this place. For I knowe, what I haue deused for you, saieith <sup>f</sup> the LORDE. My thoughtes are to geue you peace, ⁊ not trouble (which I geue you all redie) ⁊ that ye might haue hope agayne. <sup>g</sup>Ye shall crie vnto me, ye shal go ⁊ call vpō me, ⁊ I shal heare you. <sup>h</sup>Ye shal seke me, ⁊ fynde me: Yee, yf so be that ye seke me with youre whole herte, I will be founde of you (saieith the LORDE) and will deliuer you out of preson, ⁊ gather you together agayne out of all places, where in I haue scatred you, saieith the LORDE: and wil bringe you agayne to the same place, from whence I caused you be caried awaye captiue.

But where as ye saye, that God hath rayseed you vp prophetes at Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE spoken (concernynge the kinge that sytteth in the stole of Dauid, and all <sup>i</sup> ye people that dwell in this cite, <sup>j</sup> youre brethren that are not gone with you in to captiuite.) Thus (I saye) speaketh the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil sende a sward, hunger ⁊ pestilence vpon them, <sup>k</sup> and wil make them like vntymely fyges, that maye not be eatē for bytternes. And I wil persecute them with the sward, with hunger ⁊ death.

I wil deliuer them vp to be vexed of all kingdomes, to be cursed, abhorred, laughed to scorne, ⁊ put to confusion of all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred them: ⁊ that because they haue not bene obedient vnto my commaundementes, (saieith the LORDE)

which I sent vnto them by my seruantes the prophetes. <sup>l</sup> I stode vp early, and sent vnto them, but they wolde not heare, saieith the LORDE. Heare therfore the worde of the LORDE, all ye presoners, whom I sent from Ierusalē vnto Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, of Achab <sup>m</sup> y sonne of Colaia, ⁊ of Sedechias the sonne of Maasia, which prophcie lies vnto you in my name: Beholde, I wil deliuer them in to the honde of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, that he maye slaye them before youre eyes. And all <sup>n</sup> ye presoners of Iuda that are in Babilon, shal take vpō them this terme of cursinge, and saye: Now God do vnto the, as he dyd vnto Sedechias ⁊ Achab, whom the kinge of Babilon rosted in the fyre, because they synned shamefully in Israel.

For they haue not onely defiled their neighbours wyues, but also preached lyenge wordes in my name, which I haue not commaunded them. This I testifie, ⁊ assure, saieith the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Nehelamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy name, vnto all the people that is at Ierusalem, ⁊ to Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest, yee and sent them to all the prestes: where in thou wrytest thus vnto him: The LORDE hath ordered the to be prest in steade of Ioiada the prest, that thou <sup>o</sup> shuldest be the chefe in the house of the LORDE aboute all prophetes, ⁊ preachers, ⁊ that thou mightest put them in preson, or in <sup>p</sup> ye stocks. How happeneth it then, that thou hast not reprobud Ieremy of Anathoth, which neuer leaueth of his prophecience. And beside all this, he hath sent vs worde vnto Babilon, and tolde vs planely, that oure captiuite shal longe endure: that we shulde buylde vs houses to dwell therein, ⁊ to plante vs gardens, that we might enioye the frutes therof. Which lettre Sophonias the prest dyd rede, and let Ieremy the prophet heare it.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayenge: Sende worde to all them that be in captiuite, on this maner: <sup>q</sup> Thus hath the LORDE spoken concernynge

The xxx. Chapter.

A THESE are the wordes, that the LORDE shewed vnto Ieremy, saienge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Wryte vp diligently all the wordes, that I haue spoken vnto the, in a boke. For lo, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I will bringe agayne the presoners of my people of Israel and Iuda, saith the LORDE: For I will restore them vnto the londe, that I gaue to their fathers, and they shall haue it in possession.

Agayne, these wordes spake the LORDE, cōcernynge Israel and Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE: We heare a terrible crie, feare and disquietnesse. For what els doth this signifie, that I se? Namely, that all stronge men smyte, euery man his honde vpon his loynes, as a woman in the payne of hir trauaile. Who euer sawe a man trauaile with childe? En-quere thereafter, ⁊ se. Yee all their faces are maruelous pale.

B Alas for this daye, which is so dredefull, that none maye be lickened vnto it: and alas for the tyme of Iacobs trouble, from the which he shall yet be deluyered. For in that daye, saith the LORDE, I will take his yock from of thy neck, ⁊ breake thy bondes. They shall nomore serue straunge goddes vnder him, but they shall do seruyce vnto God their LORDE, and to David their kinge, whom I will rayse vp vnto them. And as for the, o my seruaunt Iacob, feare not (saith y LORDE) and be not afraied, o Israel. For lo, I will helpe the also from farre, ⁊ thy sede from the londe of their captiuyte.

And Iacob shall turne agayne, he shalbe in rest, and haue a prosperous life, and no man shall make him afraied. For I am with the,
to helpe the, saith the LORDE. And though I shal destroye all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred the, yet will I not destroye the, but correete the, and that with discrecion. For I knowe, that thou art in no wise without faute. Therefore thus saith y LORDE: I am sory for thy hurte and woundes. There is no man to medle with thy cause, or to bynde vp thy woundes: there maye no man helpe the.

All thy loners haue forgotten the, and care nathing for the. For I haue geuen the a cruell stroke, and chastened the roughly: and that for the multitude of thy myszedes, for thy synnes haue had the ouer hande. Why makest thou mone for thy harme? I my self haue pite of thy sorowe, but for the multitude of thy myszedes and synnes, I haue done this vnto the.

And therefore all they that deuoure the, shalbe deuoured, and all thine enemies shal be led in to captiuyte. All they that make the waist, shalbe waisted them selues: and all those that robbe the, will I make also to be robbed. For I will geue the thy health agayne, and make thy woundes whole, saith the LORDE: because they reuyled the, as one cast awaye and despised, o Sion.

For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will set vp Iacobs tentes agayne, and defende his dwellinge place. The cite shalbe buylded in hir olde estate, and the houses shal haue their right foundation. And out of them shall go thankesgeuyng, and the voyce of ioye.

I will multiplie them, and they shall not mynishe: I shall endue them with honoure, and no man shall subdue them. Their children shalbe as afore tyme, and their congregacion shal cōtinue in my sight. And all those that vexed them, will I viset.

A captayne also shall come of them, and a prynce shall springe out from the myddest of them: him will I chalenge to myself, and he shall come vnto me. For what is he, that geueth ouer his herte, to come vnto me?
saith the LORDE. Ye shalbe my people also, and I wilbe youre God. Beholde, on the other syde shall the wrath of the LORDE breaue out as a stormy water, as a mightie whyrle wynde: and shal fall vpō the heades of the vngodly.

THUS saith the LORDE: The people of Israel which escaped in  $\bar{y}$  wildernes from the swerde, <sup>a</sup>founde grace to come in to gladnes because of Iacob, crie vnto the heade of the Gentiles: speake out, synge, and saye:

The LORDE shall deluyr his people, the remaunt of Israel, & make them whole. Be-holde, I will bringe them agayne from out of the north lode, and gather them from the endes of the worlde, with the blynde and lame that are amonge them, with the women that be greate with childe, and such as be also delyuered: and the company of them that come agayne, shal be greate.

They departed from hence in heuynes, but with ioye will I bringe them hither agayne.
I will lede them by the ryuers of water in a straight waye, where they shall not stombe:
For I will be Israels father, and Ephraim shalbe
my firstborne.<sup>d</sup>

Heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye Gentiles) preach in the lles, that lie farre of,
and saye: he that hath seatred Israel, shall gather him together agayne, and shall kepe him as a shepherde doth his flocke. For the LORDE shall redeme Iacob, and ryd him from the honde of the violent. And they shal come, & reioyce vpon the hill of Sion, & shall haue plenteousnes of goodes, which the LORDE shall geue them: Namely, wheate, wyne, oyle, yonge shepe and calues. And their conscience shalbe as a well watred garden, for they shall nomore be hongrie.

Then shal the mayde reioyce in the daunce, yee both yonge and olde folkes. For I will turne their sorow in to gladnesse, and will comforte them, and make them ioyfull, euen from their hertes. I will poure plenteousnes vpon the hertes of the prestes, and my people shalbe satisfied with good thinges, saith the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE: <sup>e</sup>The voyce of heuynes, wepyng and lamentacion came vp in to heauen: euen of Rachel mournynge for hir children, and wolde not be comforted, because they were awaye.

But now saith the LORDE: leaue of from wepyng and crienge, witholde thyne eyes from teares, for thy labour shalbe rewarded, saith the LORDE. And they shall come agayne out of the londe of their enemies:
Yee euen thy posterite shall haue consolacion in this (saith the LORDE) that thy children shall come agayne in to their owne londe.

Morouer I herde Ephraim, (that was led awaye cartyue) complayne on this maner: O LORDE, thou hast correcte me,<sup>f</sup> and thy chastenynge haue I receated, as an vtamed calfe. <sup>g</sup>Conuerte thou me, and I shalbe con-uerted, for thou art my LORDE God. Yee as soone as thou turnest me, I shall refoirme my self: and when I vnderstonde, I shall smyte vpon my thee. For verely I haue comitted shamefull thinges: O let my youth beare this reprove and confucion.

Vpon this complaynte, I thought thus by my self: <sup>h</sup>is not Ephraim my deare sonne?
Is he not the childe, with whom I haue had all myrth and pastyme? For sence the tyme that I first comoned with him, I haue him euer in remembraunce: therefore my very herte dryeth me vnto him: gladly and louyngly will I haue mercy vpon him, saith the LORDE. Get the watchmen, prouyde teachers for the: set thine herte vpon the right waie, that thou shuldest walke, and turne agayne: (o thou daughter of Israel,) turne agayne to these cities of thyne. How longe wilt thou go astraie, o thou shrekinge daughter?

For the LORDE will worke a new thyng vpon earth: A woman shall compasse a man.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: It will come therto, that when I haue brought Iuda out of captiuyte, these wordes shalbe herde in  $\hat{y}$  londe and in his cities: <sup>a</sup>“The LORDE, which is the fayre brydegrome of rightuousnesse, make the frute-full, o thou holy hill: And there shall dwell Iuda and all hir cities, the shepherdes and huszbonde men: For I shall fede the hongrie soule,<sup>b</sup> and refresh all faynte hertes. When I herde this, I came agayne to my self, and mused, like as I had bene waked out of a swete slepe.

Beholde (saith the LORDE) the dayes come, that I will sowe the house of Israel and the house of Iuda, with men and with catell. Yee it shall come therto,<sup>c</sup> that like as I haue gone aboute in tymes past to rote them out, to scatre them, to breake them downe, to destroye them and chastē them: Euen so will I also go diligently aboute, to buylde them vp agayne, and to plante them, saith the LORDE.

<sup>d</sup>Then shall it no more be sayde:  $\hat{y}$  fathers haue eaten a sower grape, and the childrens teth are set on edge: for euery one shall dye for his owne myszdede, so that who so eateth a sower grape, his teth shalbe set on edge.

Beholde, the dayes come (saith the LORDE)  $\hat{y}$  I will make a new couenaunt with  $\hat{y}$  house of Israel  $\tau$  with  $\hat{y}$  house of Iuda: not after the couenaunt that I made with their fathers, when I toke them by the honde,  $\tau$  led them out of the londe of Egipte: which couenaunt they brake, wherfore I punyshed them sore, saith the LORDE: But this shal be the couenaunt that I will make with the house of Israel after those dayes,<sup>e</sup> saith the LORDE: I will plante my lawe in the inwarde partes of them, and write it in their hertes, and wilbe their God, and they shalbe my people.

And from thēce forth shall no man teach his neyghboure or his brother, and saye: knowe the LORDE: But they shall all knowe me, from the lowest vnto the hiest, saith the LORDE. For I will forgeue their myszdedes, and wil neuer remembre their synnes eny more. <sup>f</sup>Thus saith the LORDE which gaue the sonne to be a light for the daye, and the Moone and starres to shyne in the night: which moueth the see, so that the floudes therof waxe fearece: his name is the LORDE of hoostes. Like as this ordinaunce shal neuer be taken out of my sight, saith the LORDE: So shal the sede of Israel neuer cease, but all waye be a people before me.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: like as the heauen aboue can not be measured, and as the foundations of the earth beneth maye not be sought out: <sup>g</sup>So will I also not cast out the whole sede of Israel, for that they haue commytted, saith the LORDE. Beholde, the daies come saith the LORDE,  $\hat{y}$  the cite of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE shalbe enlarged from the towre of Hananeel, vnto  $\hat{y}$  gate of the corner wall. From thence shal the right measure be taken before her vnto the hill toppe of Gareb, and shal come aboute Gaatha, and the whole valley of the deed carcases, and of the ashes, <sup>h</sup> $\tau$  all Seremoth, vnto the broke of Cedron: and from thence vnto the corner of the horsgate toward  $\hat{y}$  east, where as the Sanctuary of the LORDE also shal be set. And when it is now buylded,  $\tau$  set vp of this fashion it shall neuer be broken, ner cast downe eny more.

THESE wordes spake the LORDE vnto <sup>i</sup>Jeremy, in the tenth yere of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, which was  $\hat{y}$  xviij yere of Nabuchodonosor, what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste layed sege vnto Ierusalem. But Jeremy the prophet laye bounde in  $\hat{y}$  courte of the preson, which was in the kinge of Iudaes house: where Sedechias the kinge of Iuda caused him to be layed, because he had prophecied of this maner: <sup>j</sup>“Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will deliuer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon, which shal take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, he shal not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon: which shall speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shall loke another in the face. And Sedechias shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there shall he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saith the LORDE. But yf thou takest in hōde to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prospere.

B And Ieremy sayde: Thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: Beholde, Hananeel the sonne of Sellum thine Vncles sonne shall come vnto the, and requyre the to redeme ſy londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: <sup>a</sup>for by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out.

And so Hananeel myne Vncles sonne came to me in the courte of the preson, (acordinge to the worde of the LORDE,) and sayde vnto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anothot in the countre of Ben Iamyn: for by heretage thou hast right to lowse it out for thy self, therefore redeme it. Then I preceaued, that this was the commaundement of the LORDE, and so I lowsed the londe from Hananeel of Anathot, myne Vncles sonne, and weyed him there the moneye: euen seuen sycles, and ten syluer pens.

I caused him also to make me a writinge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him there the money vpon the waightes. So I toke the eyuendence with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and red ouer) and I gaue the eyuendence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Hananeel my cosen, and in the presence of the witnesses, that be named in the eyuendence, and before all the Iewes that were therby in the courte of the preson.

I charged Baruch also before them, saienge: The LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel commaundeth the, to take this sealed eyuendence with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldes and vynyards shalbe possessed agayne in this londe.

C Now when I had deliuered the eyuendence vnto Baruch ſy sonne of Nerias, I besought the LORDE, sayenge: <sup>b</sup>O LORDE God, It is thou that hast made heauen and earth with thy greate power and hie arme, and there is nothinge to harde for ſy. Thou shewest mercy vpon thousandes, <sup>c</sup>thou recompēcest the wickednes of the fathers, in to the bosome of the children that come after them.

Thou art the greate and mightie God, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes: greate in counsell, and infinite in thought: Thine eyes loke vpon all the wayes of mens children, <sup>d</sup>to rewarde euery one after his waye, and acordinge to the frutes of his inuencions: Thou hast done greate tokens and wonders in the londe of Egipte (as we se this daye) vpon the people of Israel and vpon those men: to make thy name greate, as it is come to passe this daye: <sup>e</sup>Thou hast brought thy people of Israel out of the londe of Egipte, with tokens, with wondres, with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme and with greate terriblenes: and hast geuen them this londe, like as thou haddest promysed vnto their fathers: Namely, that thou woldest geue them a lōde, that floweth with mylke and honye.

<sup>f</sup>Now when they came therin, and possessed it, they folowed not thy voyce, and walked not in thy lawe: but all that thou commaundedest them to do, that haue they not done, and therefore come all these plagues vpon them.

Beholde, there are bulworckes made now agaynst the cite, to take it: and it shalbe wonne of the Caldees that besege it, with swearde, with hunger and death, and loke what thou hast spoken, that same shal come vpon them.

For lo, all thinges are present vnto the: Yet sayest thou vnto me (o LORDE God) and commaundest me, that I shall loose a pece of londe vnto my self, and take witnesses therto: and yet in the meane season the cite is deliuered in to the power of the Caldees.

D Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, I am the LORDE God of all flesh, Is there eny thinge then to harde for me? Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: beholde, I shal deliuer this cite in to the power of the Caldees, and in to the power of Nabuchodonosor<sup>g</sup> the kinge of Babilon, they shall take it in: For the Caldees shall come, and wyne this cite, and set fyre vpon it, and burne it: with the gorgeous houses, in whose parlors they haue made sacrifice vnto Baal, and poured drynke offerings vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath.

For seinge the children of Israel and the children of Iuda haue wrought wickednes before me euer from their youth vp, what haue they els done, but prouoked me with the workes of their owne hondes? saith the LORDE.

Or, what hath this cite bene els, but a prouokinge of my wrath, euer sence the daye that I buylded it, vnto this houre? Wherin I cast it out of my sight, because of the greate blasphemies of the childre of Israel and Iuda, which they haue done to prouoke me: yee they, their kinges, their prynces, their prestes, their prophetes, whole Iuda, and all the cite-syns of Ierusalem.

"When I stode vp early, and taught them and instructe them, they turned their backs to me, and not their faces. They wolde not heare, to be reformed and correcte. They haue set their goddes in <sup>f</sup> house,<sup>b</sup> that is halowed vnto my name, to defyle it. They haue buylded hie places for Baal in the valley of the children of Ennon, to vowe their sonnes and daughters vnto Moloch: which I neuer commaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought, to make Iuda synne with soch abhominacion.

¶ Morouer thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken, concernynge this cite, which (as ye youre selues confesse) shalbe deliuered in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, when it is wonne with the swerde, with hunger and with pestilence. Beholde, I will gather them together from all londes wherin I haue scatred them in my wrath, in my fearfull and greate displeasure: and will bringe them agayne vnto this place, where they shal dwell safely. And they shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God.

"And I will geue them one herte and one waye, that they maye feare me all the daies of their life, that they and their children after them maye prosper. "And I will set vp an euerlastinge couenaunt with them, Namely: that I will neuer cease to do them good, and that I will put my feare in their hertes, so that they shall not runne awaye fro me.

"Yee I will haue a lust and pleasure to do them good, and faithfully to plante them in this londe, with my whole herte, and with all my soule.

For thus saith the LORDE: like as I haue brought all this greate plage vpon this people: so will I also bringe vpon them all the good, that I haue promysed them. And men shall haue their possessions in this londe, wherof ye saye now, that it shal nether be inhabited of people ner of catell, but be deliuered in to the hodes of the Caldees: Yee londe shalbe bought for money, and euyldeces made ther vpon and sealed before witnesses in the countre of Ben Iamin, and rounde aboute Ierusalem: in the cities of Iuda, in the cities that are vpo the mountaynes, and in them that lie beneth, yee and in the cities that are in the deserte. For I wil bringe their presoners hither agayne, saith the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

MOROUER the worde of the LORDE ¶ came vnto Jeremij on this maner, whē he was yet bounde in the courte of the preson: Thus saith the LORDE, which fulfilleth the thinge that he speaketh, the LORDE which perfourmeth the thinge that he taketh in honde: euen he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herde the: I haue shewed greate and hie thinges, which were vnknowne vnto you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concernynge the houses of this cite, and the houses of the kinges of Iuda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and weapens, when the Caldees come to besege them: and they shalbe fylled with the deed carcasses of men, whom I will slaye in my wrath and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them whole: I will open them the treasure of peace and treuth.

"And I will returne the captiuyte of Iuda and Israel: and will set them vp agayne, as they were afore. From all mysdedes (wherin they haue offended agaynst me) I will cōse them: And all their blasphemies which they haue done agaynst me, when they regarded me not, I will forgeue them.

And this shal get me a name, a prayse and honoure, amonge all people of the earth, which shall heare all the good, that I will shewe vnto them: Yee they shall be afraied and astonied at all the good dedes and benefites, that I will do for them. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: "In this place, wherof ye saye that it shalbe a wilderness, wherin nether people ner catell shal dwell: In like maner in the cities of Iuda and without Ierusalem (which also shalbe so voyde, that nether people ner catell shall dwell there) Shal the voyce of gladnesse be herde agayne, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde, the voyce of them that shall synge: ("Praise the LORDE of hostes, for he is louynge, and his mercy endureth for euer) and the voyce of them that shall offre vp gifts in the house of the LORDE. For I will restore the captiuyte of this londe, as it was afore, saith the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes. It shall come yet therto, that in this londe, which is voyde from men and catell, and in all the cities of the londe, there shal be set vp shepherdes cotages: in the cities vpon the mountaynes, and in the cities that lie vpon the playne, and in the deserte.

In the londe of Ben Iamin, in the feldes of Ierusalem, and in the cities of Iuda shal the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that telleth them, saith the LORDE. Beholde, "the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil performe that good thinge, which I haue promised vnto the house of Israel and to the house of Iuda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto Dauid, the branch of rightuousnes, and he shall do equite and rightuousnesse in the londe. "In those daies shall Iuda be helped, and Ierusalem shall dwell safe, and he that shall call her is euen God oure rightuous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth: "Dauid shal neuer want one, to syt vpon the stole of the house of Israel: "nether shall the prestes and Leuites want one to offre all waye before me, burntofferings, to kyndle the meatofferings, and to prepare the sacrifices.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremij after this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: "Maye the couenant which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due season? Then maye my couenant also be broken, which I made with Dauid my seruauant, and so he not to haue a sonne to reigne in his Trone. "So shall also the prestes and Leuites neuer fayle, but serue me. "For like as the starres of heauen maye not be nombred, nether the soude of the see measured: so will I multiplie the sede of Dauid my seruauant, and of the Leuites my ministers.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came to Jeremij, sainge: Cōsidrest thou not what this people speaketh? Two kynredes (saye they) had the LORDE chosen, and those same two hath he cast awaye. For so farre is my people come, y they haue no hope to come together eny more, and to be one people agayne. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Yf I haue made no couenant with daye and night, and geue no statute vnto heauen and earth: then will I also cast awaye the sede of Dauid my seruauant: so that I wil take no pryncce out of his sede, to rule the posterite of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. But yet I will turne agayne their captiuyte, and be mercifull vnto them.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Jeremij, what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, and all his hostes (out of all the kingdomes y were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Ierusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Go, and speake to Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and tell him: "The LORDE sendeth the this worde: Beholde, I will deliuer this cite in to the hōde of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his hondes, but shalt be led awaye presoner, and deliuered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE, o Sedechias thou kinge of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE vnto the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the swerde, but shalt die in peace. Like as thy fore fathers, the kinges, thy progenitours were brente: so shalt thou be brente also, and in the mournynge they shal saye: oh lorde. For thus haue I determed, saith the LORDE.

Then spake Jeremij the prophet all these wordes vnto Sedechias kinge of Iuda in Ierusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste beseged Ierusalem, and the remnaunt of the cities: Namely, Lachis and Azecha, which yet remayned of the stronge defended cities of Iuda.

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet, when Sedechias was agreed with all the people at Ierusalem, that there shulde be proclaimed a liberte: "so that euery man shulde let fre go his seruauant and handmayde, Hebrue & Hebruesse, & no lewe to holde his brother as a bonde man. Now as they had consented, euen so they were obedient, & let them go fre. But afterwarde they repented, & toke agayne the seruauantes and handmaydens, whom they had letten go fre, and so made them bonde agayne.

C For the which cause the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy from the LORDE himself, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: I made a couenaunt with your fathers, when I brought them out of Egipte, (that they shulde no more be bondmen,) sayenge: "When seven yeares are out, euery man shal let go fre his bought seruante an Hebrue, yf he haue serued him sixe yeares. But your fathers obeyed me not & herkened not vnto me. As for you, ye were now turned, & dyd right before me, in y<sup>e</sup> ye proclaimed, euery mā to let his neigboure go fre, & in y<sup>e</sup> ye made a couenaunt before me, in the temple that beareth my name: But yet ye haue turned your selues agayne, and blasphemed my name: In this, y<sup>e</sup> euery man hath requyred his seruante and hand mayden agayne, whom ye had letten go quyte and fre, and compelled them to serue you agayne, and to be your bonde men. D And therefore thus saith the LORDE: Ye haue not obeyed me, euery man to proclame fredome vnto his brother and neigboure: wherfore, I will call you vnto a fredome, saith the LORDE: euen vnto the swearde, to the pestilence, and to hunger, and will make you to be plaged in all the kyngdomes of the earth. Yee those men that haue brokē my couenaunt, and not kepte the wordes of the apoyntmēt, which they made before me: "when they hewed the calfe in two, & when there wente thorow the two halfes therof: The prynces of Iuda, the prynces of Ierusalem, the gelded men, the prestes and all the people of the londe (which wete thorow the two sydes of the calfe.) Those men wil I geue in to the power of their enemies, and in to the hondes of them that solowe vpon their lyues.

"And their deed bodies shall be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda & his prynces, I will deluyen them in to the power of their enemies, and of them that desyre to slaye them, and in to the honde of the kyng of Babylons hooste, "which now is departed from you: But thorow my commaundement (saith the LORDE) they shal come agayne before this cite, they shall fight agaynst it, wyne it, and burne it. Morouer I will laye the cities of Iuda so waist, that no man shall dwell therein.

The xxxv. Chapter.

THE wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, (in the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda) are these: "Go vnto y<sup>e</sup> house of the Rechabites, & call them out, & bringe thē to y<sup>e</sup> house of the LORDE in to some commodious place, and geue them wyne to drynke. Then toke I Iasania the sonne of Jeremy, the sonne of Habazania, and his brethrē and all his sonnes, and the whole housholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORDE, in to the closet of the children off Hanan the sonne off Igdalia the man off God: which was by the closet off the prynces, that is aboue the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the chefe off the tresury. And before the sonnes of the kynred of the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, For Ionadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and your sonnes shall neuer drynke wyne,<sup>f</sup> buylde no houses, sowe no sede, plante no vynes, yee ye shall haue no vynyardes: but for all your tyme ye shall dwell in tētes, y<sup>e</sup> ye maye lyue lōge in the lōde, wherin ye be straingers.

Thus haue we obeyed the cōmaudemēt of Ionadab y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Rechab oure father, in all y<sup>e</sup> he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyue longe: we, oure wyues, oure sonnes & oure daughters. to sowe : but we dwell in tentes, we obeye, ⁊ do accordinge vnto all, that Ionadab oure father commaunded vs.

But now ŷ Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilō came vp in to the lōde, we sayde : come, let vs go to Ierusalē, ŷ we maye escape the hooste of the Caldees ad the Assiriās : ⁊ so we dwell now at Ierusalē. Then came ŷ worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayenge : Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : Go ⁊ tell whole Iuda ⁊ all the inhabitours of Ierusalē : Wyll ye not be re-fourned, to obeye my wordes? saith the LORDE. The wordes which Ionadab the sonne off Rechab cōmaunded his sonnes, ŷ they shulde drynke no wyne, are fast ⁊ surely kepthe : for vnto this daye they drynke no wyne : but obeye their fathers cōmaundement.

But as for me,<sup>a</sup> I haue stōde vp early, I haue spokē vnto you, ⁊ geuen you earnest warnyng : ⁊ yett haue ye not bene obediēt vnto me. Yee I haue sent my seruātes, all the prophetes vnto you, I rose vp early, ⁊ sent you worde, sayenge : O turne you, euery man from his wicked waye : amēde youre lyues, ⁊ go not after straunge goddes, to worshippe the : ŷ ye maye cōtinue in the lōde, which I haue geuen vnto you and youre fathers, but ye wolde nether heare me, ner folowe me.

The childrē of Ionadab Rachabs sonne haue stedfastly kepthe their fathers cōmaundement, ŷ he gaue them, but this people is not obedient vnto me. And therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes ŷ God of Israel : Beholde, I wil bringe vpō Iuda ⁊ vpō euery one ŷ dwelleth in Ierusalē, all the trouble ŷ I haue deuyed agaynst thē. <sup>b</sup> For I haue spokē vnto thē, but they wolde not folowe : I haue called vnto them, neuertheles they wolde geue me no answeare. Ieremy also spake vnto the housholde off the Rechabites : Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : For so much as ye haue obeyed ŷ cōmaundemēt of Ionadab youre fater, ⁊ kepthe all his preceptes, ⁊ done accordinge vnto all ŷ he hath bydden you : Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : Ionadab the sonne of Rechab shal not fayle, but haue one out of his stocke, to stōde allwaye before me.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

IN the fourth yere of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda, came ŷ worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayēge : Take a boke, ⁊ write therein all ŷ wordes, ŷ I haue spokē to the, to Israel, to Iuda ⁊ to all the people, frō the tyme ŷ I begāne for to speake vnto the (in ŷ reigne of Iosias) vnto this daye. That when the house of Iuda hearth of the plage, which I haue deuyed for thē, they maye peradventure turne, euery man frō his wicked waye, that I maye forgeue their offences and synnes.

Then dyd Ieremy call Baruch the sonne of Nerias, ⁊ Baruch wrote in the boke at ŷ mouth of Ieremy, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had spoken vnto him. And Ieremy commaunded Baruch sayenge : I am in pre-son, so that I maye not come in to the house of ŷ LORDE : therefore go thou thither, ⁊ rede the boke, that thou hast writtē at my mouth : Namely, the wordes off the LORDE, ⁊ rede thē in the LORDES house vpon the fastinge daye : that the people, whole Iuda, ⁊ all they that come out of the cities, maye heare. Peradventure they will praye mekely before the face of the LORDE, and turne, euery one from his wicked waye. For greate is the wrath and displeasure, that the LORDE hath taken agaynst this people.

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, accordinge vnto all that Ieremy the prophet cōmaunded him, readinge the wordes off the LORDE out off the boke in the LORDES house. And this was done in the fyfth yere off Ioachim ŷ sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, in the ix. moneth when it was commaunded, that all the people of Ierusalem shulde fast before the LORDE, and they also that were come from the cities of Iuda vnto Ierusalem.

Then red Baruch the wordes of Ieremy out of the boke within the house of the LORDE, out of ŷ treasury of <sup>a</sup> Gamarias the sonne off Saphan the serybe, which is besyde the hyer lofte off the new dore of the LORDES house : that all ŷ people might heare. Now whē Micheas the sonne of Gamarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORDE out of ŷ boke, he wēt downe to the kinges palace in to ŷ srybes chābre, for there all þy prynces were set: Elisama the scribe, Dalias the sonne of Semei, Elnathā the sonne off Achbor, Gamaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the sonne of Hananias, with all the princes. And Micheas tolde them all the wordes, þy he herde Baruch rede out of the boke before the people.

Then all the prynces sent Iehudi þy sonne of Nathanias the sonne of Salamia the sonne of Chusi, vnto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the boke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Baruch the sonne of Nerias toke þy boke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vnto him: Syt downe, and rede the boke, þy we may heare also. So Baruch red, þy they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abashezd one vpon another, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil certifie the kinge of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how didest thou wryte all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mouth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the boke.

Then sayde the prynces vnto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Ieremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kinge to the courte. But they kepte the boke in the chambre off Elisama the scribe, ad tolde the kyng all the wordes, that he might heare. So the kyng sent Iehudi to fetch him þy boke, which he brought out of Elisama þy scribes chambre. And Iehudi red it, that the kyng and all the prynces, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kyng sat in the wynter house, for it was in the ix. Moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And whē Iehudi had red thre or foure leaues therof,<sup>a</sup> he cut the boke in peces with a penne knyfe, and cast it in to the fyre vpon the herth, vntil the boke was all brente in the fyre vpon the herth.

Yet no man was abashed therof, or rente his clothes: nether the kyng himselfe, ner his seruantes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalias ad Gamarias, besoughte the kinge, that he wolde not burne the boke: notwithstandinge þy kyng wolde not heare them, but commaunded Ieramyhel the sonne off Amalech, Sarias the sonne of Esriel and Selamia þy sonne of Abdiel, to laye hondes vpon Baruch the scribe, and vpon Ieremy the prophet: but the LORDE kepte them out of sight. After now that the kyng had brente the boke, ad þy sermons which Baruch wrote at þy mouth off Ieremy: The worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy sayenge: Take another boke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were written in the first boke, which Ioaichin the kyng off Iuda hath brente.

And tell Ioaichin the kyng off Iuda, Thus saith the LORDE: thou hast brente þy boke, and thoughtest within thy self: Why hast thou written therein, that the kyng off Babilon shal come, & make this lode waist? so that he shal make both people and catel to be out of it? <sup>b</sup> Therefore thus the LORDE saith, off Ioaichin the kyng of Iuda: There shal none of his generacion syt vpon the trone of Dauid. His deed corse shalbe cast out, that the heat off the daye, and the frost of the night maye come vpon him: And I will vyset the wickednes of him, of his sede, and of his seruantes. Morouer all the euell that I haue promised thē (though they herde me not) will I bringe vpon them, vpon þy inhabitours of Ierusalem, and vpon all Iuda. Then toke Ieremy another boke, and gaue it Baruch the scribe the sonne of Nerias, which wrote therein out of the mouth off Ieremy: all the sermons that were in the first boke, which Ioaichin the kyng off Iuda dyd burne. And there were added vnto them many mo sermons, then before.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

SEDECHIAS þy sonne of Iosias (<sup>c</sup>which was made kyng thorow Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon) reigned in the londe of Iuda, in the steade off Iechonias the sonne of Ioaichin. But nether he, ner his seruantes, ner the people in the lode wolde obeye the wordes of þy LORDE, which he spake by the prophet Ieremy. Neuertheles Sedechias the kyng sent Iuchal the sonne of Selamia and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest to the prophet Ieremy, sayenge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE oure God for vs. Now Ieremy walked fre amonge the people at that tyme, and was not put in preson as yet. <sup>d</sup> Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egypte: which when the Caldees that beseged Ierusalem, perceaued, they departed from thence.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy the prophet, sayēge: Thus saieth § LORDE God of Israel. This answerē shal ye geue to the kynge of Iuda, that sent you vnto me for counsell: B Beholde, Pharaos hooste which is come forth to helpe you, shall returne to Egipte in to his owne londe: But the Caldees shall come agayne, ¶ fight agaynst this cite, wyne it, and set fyre vpon it. For thus saieth the LORDE: disceane not your owne myndes, thinkynge on this maner: Tush, the Caldees go now their waye from vs: No, they shall not go their waye. For though ye had slayne the whole hooste off the Caldees that besege you, and euery one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now whē the hooste of the Caldees was brokē vp from Ierusalē for feare of the Egipcians armye, Ieremy went out of Ierusalē towardē the lōde of Ben Iamin, to do certayne busynesse there amōge ¶ people. And whē he came vnder Ben Iamyns Porte, there was a porter called Ierias the sonne of Selamias ¶ zōne of Hananias, which fell vpō him ¶ toke him, sayēge: thy mynde is to runne to the Caldees. Then sayde Ieremy: It is nōt so, I go not to the Caldees. Neuertheles Ierias wolde not beleue him, but brought Ieremy bōnde before the princes. Wherefore the princes were angrie with Ieremy, causinge him to be beaten, ¶ to be layed in preson in the house of Ionathas the scribe. For he was the ruler of the preson. Thus was Ieremy put in to the dongeon ¶ preson, and so laye there a longe tyme. Then Sedechias the kynge sent for him, ¶ called him, ¶ axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge: thinkest thou this busynesse (that now is in honde) cōmeth of the LORDE? Ieremy answerde: yee ¶ it doth: ¶ thou (sayde he) shalt be deliuered in to the kynge of Babilōns power.

D Morouer, Ieremy sayde vnto kynge Sedechias: What haue I offended agaynst ¶, agaynst thy seruaites, or agaynst this people, that ye haue caused me be put in preson? ¶ Where are youre prophetes, which haue prophced vnto you and sayde, that ¶ kynge of Babilō shulde not come agaynst you ¶ this lōde? And therefore heare now, o my lorde

the kynge: let my prayer be accepte before the, ¶ sende me nomore in to ¶ house of Ionathas the scribe, that I dye not there. Then Sedechias the kynge commaunded to put Ieremy in the fore entrie off the preson, and dayly to be geuen him a cake of bred, and els no dighte meate, vntill all the bred in the cite was eaten vp. Thus Ieremy remayned in ¶ fore entrie off the preson.

The xxxiiiij. Chapter.

SAPHATIAS the sonne off Mathā, Gedolias the sonne of Pashur, Iuchal the sonne of Selamias, ¶ Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, ¶ Ieremy had spokē vnto all the people, namely on this maner: Thus saieth the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shall perish, ether with the swearde, ¶ with hunger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vnto the Caldees, shal escape, wyngynge his soule for a pray, ¶ shal lyue. For thus saieth the LORDE: This cite (no doute) ¶ must be deliuered in to ¶ power of the kīge of Babilō, ¶ he also shal wyne it. Thē sayde the prynces vnto ¶ kynge: Syr, we besech you let this man be put to death, For thus he discourageth the hōdes of the soudyers ¶ be in this cite, ¶ the hōdes of all the people, whē he speaketh soch wordes vnto thē. This mā verely laboureth not for peace of ¶ people, but mischief. Sedechias the kīge answered and sayde: lo, he is in youre hōdes, for ¶ kīge maye denye you nothinge. Then toke they Ieremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off Amalech, that dwelt in the fore entrie off the preson. And they let downe Ieremy with coardes in to a dongeon, where there was no water, but myre. So Ieremy stack fast in the myre. Now when Abdemelech the Morian beyngē a chamberlayne in the kynges courte, vnderstode, that they had cast Ieremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kynges house, and spake to the kynge (which thē sat vnder the porte off Ben Iamin) these wordes: My lorde the kynge, where as these men medle with Ieremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in preson, there to dye of hunger, for there is no more bred in the cite. Thē the kynge commaūded Abdemelech the Morian, and sayde: Take from hēce xxx. men whom thou wilt, ¶ drawe vp Jeremey the prophet out of the dongeon, before he dye. So Abdemelech toke the men with him. ⁊ went to ſ house of Amalech, ⁊ there vnder an almery he gat olde ragges ⁊ worne cloutes. ⁊ let thē downe by a coarde, in to the dongeon to Jeremey.

And Abdemelech the Morian sayde vnto the prophet Jeremey: O put these ragges and cloutes vnder thine arme holes, betwixte thē and the coardes: ad Jeremey dyd so. So they drewe vp Jeremey with coardes and toke him out of the dongeon, and he remayned in the fore entrie of the preson. Thē Sedechias the kyng sent and caused Jeremey the prophet be called vnto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the LORDE.<sup>a</sup> And the kyng sayde vnto Jeremey: I wil axe the somewhat, but hyde nothinge fro me. Thē Jeremey answerde Sedechias: Yf I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffre death: yf I geue the coicell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kyng swore an ooth secretly vnto Jeremey, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, that made vs these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Jeremey vnto Sedechias: Thus saieih ſ LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Yf case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kyng off Babilons prynces, thou shalt saue thy life, and this cite shall not be brēt, yee both thou and thy housholde shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kyng off Babilons prynces, then shalt this cite be delyuered in to the hondes of the Caldees which shal set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto Jeremey: I am afayde for the Iewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hōdes, and so they to haue me in derision.

But Jeremey answerde: No, they shal not betraye the: O herken vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseke ſ) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this plainly: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kyng of Iudaes house, shal go out to the kyng of Babilons prynces. For they thynke, ſ thou art disceaned: and that ſ men in whom thou didest put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set thy fete fast in the myre, and gone their waye from the. Therefore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their hondes, but shalt be ſ kyng of Babilons presoner, ⁊ this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto Jeremey: loke ſ no bōdy knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceaue, that I haue talked with the, and come vnto the, sayenge: O speake, what sayde the kyng to the? hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what sayde ſ kyng to the? Se thou geue them this answer: I haue humbly besought the kyng, that he will let me lye no more in Ionathas house, that I dye not there? Then came all the prynces vnto Jeremey, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kyng bad him.<sup>c</sup> Then they helde their peace, for they perceaued nothinge. So Jeremey abode still in the fore entrie off the preson, vntill the daye that Ierusalem was wonne.

The xxxiv. Chapter.

NOW when the cite off Ierusalē was taken<sup>d</sup> (for in the ix. yeare of Sedechias kyng of Iuda in the tenth Moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Ierusalem. And in the xi. yeare of Sedechias in the fourth Moneth ſ ix. daye of ſ Moneth, he brake in to the cite). Then all the kyng of Babilons prynces came in, ⁊ sat thē downe vnder the porte: Nergall, Sarezzer, Samgarnebo, Sarsechim, Rabsaris, Nergal, Sarezzer, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kyng of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kyng of Iuda with his souldyers sawe them, they fled, and departed out of ſ cite by night thorow the kynges gardē, and thorow the porte that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente towarde the wilderness.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Iericho, and brought him presoner to Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilō vnto Reblatha, that lieth in the londe off Hemath where he gaue iudgment vpon him. So the kyng of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off Iuda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias eyes be put out, and boude him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Morouer, the Caldees brēt vp the kynges palace, <sup>a</sup>with  $\hat{y}$  other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Ierusalem. As for the remnant of the people that were in the cite, and soch as were come to helpe them (what so euer was left of the comē sorte) Nabuzaradan the chefe captayne caried them to Babilon. But Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne let the rascall people (and those that had nothinge) dwell still in the lōde off Iuda, and gaue them vynyardes and corne feldes at the same tyme. Nabuchodonosor also the kyng of Babilon gaue Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne a charge, cōcernynge Ieremy, sayenge: take and cherish him, and make moch off him: se thou do him no harme, but intreate him after his owne desyre.

So Nabuzaradā  $\hat{y}$  chefe captayne, Nabuzaszbā the chefe chamberlayne, Nergalsarezer the treasurer and all the kynges of Babylons lordes, <sup>b</sup>sent for Ieremy,  $\tau$  caused him be fet out off the fore entrie off the preson, and committed him vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicā the sonne of Saphā: that he shulde carie him home, and so he dwelt amonge the people. Now whyle Ieremy laye yet bounde in the fore entrie of the preson,  $\hat{y}$  worde off the LORDE came vnto him sayenge: Go, and tell Abdemelech the Morian: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes  $\hat{y}$  God off Israel: Beholde, the cruell and sharpe plage that I haue deuysed for this cite, will I brynge vpon them, that thou shalt se it: but I wil deluyuer the (sayeth the LORDE) and thou shalt not come in the bondes off those men, whom thou fearest. For doutles I will saue the, so that thou shalt not perish with the swearde: but thy life shalbe sauēd, and that because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORDE.

The xl. Chapter.

THIS is the maner, how the LORDE intreated Ieremy, when Nebuzaradan the <sup>c</sup>chefe captayne had let him go fre from Rama, whither as he had led him bounde, amonge all the presoners, that were caried from Ierusalem and Iuda vnto Babilon. The chefe captayne called for Ieremy, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE thy God spake mightely before off the mysery vpon this place: Now the LORDE hath sent it, and performed it, as he had promised: For ye haue synned agaynst the LORDE, and haue not bene obedient vnto his voyce, therefore cometh this plage vpon you. Beholde, I lowse the bondes from thy hōdes this daye: yf thou wilt now go with me vnto Babilon, vp thē: For I will se to the, and prouyde for the: But yf thou wilt not go with me to Babilon, then remayne here. Beholde, all the londe is at thy will: <sup>d</sup>loke where thou thinkest conueniēt  $\tau$  good for the to Abyde, there dwell. Yf thou canst not be content to dwell alone, then remayne with Godolias the sonne off Ahicā the sonne of Saphā, <sup>e</sup>whom the kyng of Babilō hath made gouernoure ouer  $\hat{y}$  cities of Iuda,  $\tau$  dwell with him amonge the people, or remayne, where so euer it pleaseth  $\hat{y}$ . So the chefe captayne gaue him his expēs with a rewarde,  $\tau$  let him go. <sup>f</sup>Then wēt Ieremy vnto Godolias  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ahicā to Masphat,  $\tau$  dwelt there with him amonge the people that were left in the londe.

Now when  $\hat{y}$  captaynes of the hooste of Iuda (which with their felowes were scatred abrode on euery syde in  $\hat{y}$  lōde) vnderstode,  $\hat{y}$  the kyng of Babilō had made Godolias  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ahicā gouernoure in the lōde,  $\tau$   $\hat{y}$  man, wife  $\tau$  childe, yee  $\tau$  the poore men in the londe ( $\hat{y}$  were not led captiue to Babilon) shulde be vnder his Iurisdiction: They came to Godolias vnto Masphat: Namely, Ismael the sonne of Nathania, Iohāna  $\tau$  Ionathas the sonnes of Carea, Sareas the sonne of Tanhomet, the sonnes of Opheus  $\hat{y}$  Netophetite, Iesania  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Machati, with their cōpanyons. And Godolias the sonne of Ahicā the sonne off Saphā, swore vnto thē  $\tau$  their felowes on this maner: <sup>g</sup>Be not afraied to serue the Caldees, dwell in the lōde,  $\tau$  do the kyng of Babilon seruyce, so shal ye prospere. BUT in the seuenth Moneth it happened, ⁊ Ismael the sonne of Nathánias ⁊ sonne of Elisama (one of ⁊ kynges bloude) came with thē that were greatest aboute the kyng, ⁊ ten men that were sworne with him: vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicā to Masphat, and eate there together. And Ismael ⁊ sonne of Nathánias with those ten men that were sworne to him, starte vp, and smote Godolias the sonne of Ahicā the sonne of Saphan with the swerde, ⁊ slewe hym, whom the kyng off Babilō had made gouernoure off the londe. Ismael also slewe all the Iewes that were with Godolias at Masphat, and all the Caldees that he founde there waitynge vpon him.

B The nexte daye after that he had slayne Godolias (the matter was yet vnkowne) there came certayne men from Sichem, frō Silo and Samaria, to the nombre off lxxx. which had shauen their beerdes, rent their clothes, ⁊ were all heuye, bringinge meat offringes and incense in their hondes, to offre it in the house off the LORDE. And Ismael the sonne of Nathánias went forth of Masphat wepinge, to mete them. Now whē he met them, he sayde: Go yourre waye to Godolias the sonne of Ahicā. And when they came in the myddest off the cite, Ismael the sonne off Nathánias (with them that were sworne vnto him) slewe them, eue at the myddest off the pyt. Amonge these lxxx. mē there were ten, ⁊ sayde vnto Ismael: Oh slaye vs not, for we haue yet a greate treasure in the felde, off wheate, barley, oyle and hony. So he spared thē, and slewe them not with their brethren. Now the pyt wherin Ismael dyd cast the deed bodies off the mē (whom he slewe because off Godolias) had kyng Asa caused to be made, ⁊ for feare off Baasa the kyng off Israel, and the same pit dyd Ismael fyll with slayne men. As for the rēnaunt off the people, the kynges daughters and all the people that were yet left at Masphat, vpon whom Nabusaradan the chefe Captayne had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicā gouernoure: Ismael the sonne off Nathánias caried them awaye presoners towarde the Ammonites. But when Iohāna the sonne off Carea and all they which had bene captaynes ouer the kynges hooste with him, ⁊ herde off all the wickednes that Ismael the sonne off Nathánias had done: they toke their companions, and wente out for to fight with Ismael the sōne of Nathánias, and founde him by the waters of Rabin in Gabaon. Now when all the people, whom Ismael led captiue, sawe Iohāna ⁊ sonne off Carea and all the other captaynes off the hooste, they were glad. So all the people that Ismael had caried awaye frō Masphat, were brought agayne.

And whē they returned, they came to Iohanna the sonne off Carea. But Ismael the sonne off Nathánias fled from Iohāna with eight of his sworne companions, ⁊ wente to the Ammonites. Then Iohanna the sonne of Carea and all the captaynes of the hooste that were with him, toke the remnaūt of the people, whom Ismael the sonne of Nathánias had led awaye (When he had slayne Godolias the sonne of Ahicā) whom they also had rescued from him: fightinge men, women ⁊ children, and gelded men, whom they brought agayne from Gabaon: and wente from thence, and sat them downe at Geruth Chimham, which lieth besyde Bethleē, that they might go in to Egipte for feare of the Caldees: of whom they were afrayed, because that Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had slayne Godolias Ahicams sonne, whom the kynge off Babilon had made gouernoure in the londe.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO all the rulers, and Iohāna the sonne off Carea, Iesaias the sonne off Osias came with all the people frō the leest vnto the most, & sayde vnto Jeremy the prophet: <sup>a</sup>O heare oure peticiō, that thou mayest praye for vs vnto the LORDE thy God, and for the remnaunt, wherof there be very few left off many, as thou seist vs: that the LORDE thy God maye shewe vs a waye to go in, & tell vs, what we shulde do. Then Jeremy the prophete sayde vnto them: I haue herde you. Beholde, I will praye vnto God youre LORDE, as ye haue requyred me: and loke what answereth the LORDE geueth you, I shall certifie you theroff, and kepe nothinge back frō you. <sup>c</sup>And they sayde vnto Jeremy: The LORDE off treuth & faithfulness be oure recorde, that we wil do all, that the LORDE thy God commandeth vs, whether it be good or euell. We wil herken vnto the voyce off oure LORDE God, to whom we sende the: that we maye prospere, when we haue folowed the voyce off the LORDE oure God.

33 And after ten dayes came the worde off the LORDE vnto Jeremy. Then called he Iohanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the people that were with him: Yee & all the people from the leest to the most, & sayde vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel vnto whom ye sent me, to laye forth youre prayers before him: Yf ye wil dwell in this londe, I shall buyde you vp, & not breake you downe: I shall plante you, & not rote you out: for I am pacified, as <sup>c</sup>concernyng the trouble that I haue done to you. Feare not the kynge off Babilon, off whom ye stonde in awe: O be not afrayed off him, saith the LORDE: for I will be with you, to helpe you, and deluyer you from his honde. I will pardon you, I wil haue mercy vpon you, and bringe you agayne in to youre owne londe.

Neuertheles, yf ye purpose not to dwell in this londe, ner to folowe the voyce off the LORDE youre God: but will saye thus: we will not dwell here, but go in to Egipte: where we shall nether se warre, heare the noyse off batell, ner suffre honger, there will we dwell. Wherefore heare now the worde of the LORDE, o ye remnaunt of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: <sup>c</sup>Yf ye be whole purposed to go in to Egipte, ad to be there as straigers: the swearde that ye feare, shall ouer take you in Egipte: and the honger wheroff ye be here afrayed, shall hange vpon you in to Egipte, and there ye shall dye. For all they, that off set purpose vndertake to go in to Egipte, there to ease them selues off their mysery, shall perish with the swearde, with honger and pestilence: not one off them shall remayne, there shal none escape the plage, that I wil bringe vpon them.

For thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: like as my wrath and indignacion is come vpon the inhabitours of Ierusalē, so shall my displeasure go forth vpon you also, yf ye go in to Egipte: For there ye shalbe reuyled, abhorred, brought to shame and confucion: and as for this place, ye shall neuer se it more. The LORDE forbyddeth you (o ye remnaunt of Iuda) that ye shall not go in to Egipte. And forget not that I haue warned you earnestly this daye els shal ye begyle youre selues. <sup>d</sup>For ye sent me vnto the LORDE youre God, and sayde: O praye thou the LORDE oure God for vs: and loke what answereth the LORDE oure God geueth the, that bringe vs agayne, ad we shall do thereafter. Now haue I shewed, and declared vnto you the voyce off the LORDE youre God, for the which cause he hath sent me to you. <sup>e</sup>Yf ye will not folowe it, be sure, yf ye shall perishe with the swearde, with honger & pestilence: euen in the same place, where youre lust was to go, and dwell.

there: But Baruch the sonne of Nerias prouoketh the agaynst vs. that he might bringe vs in to the eaptyute off the Caldees: that they might slaye vs, and carie vs away prisoners vnto Babilon

So Iohanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the hooste, and all the people folowed not the commaundement of the LORDE: Namely, to dwell in the londe off Iuda: But Iohanna the sonne of Carea ⁊ all the captaynes of the hooste, caried away all the remnaunt in Iuda, that were come together agayne from the Heithen (amōge whom they had bene scatred)<sup>a</sup> to dwell in the londe of Iuda: Men, women, childrē, the kynges doughters: all those that Nabusaradan the chefe captayne had left with Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. They caried away also the prophet Jeremy, Baruch the sonne of Nerias, and so came in to Egipte: for they were not obedient vnto the commaundement of God. Thus came they to Taphnis.

B And in Taphnis the worde off the LORDE happened vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Take greate stones in thine lōde, and hyde them in the brick wall, vnder the dore off Pharaos house in Taphnis, that all the men of Iuda maye se, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: <sup>1</sup> Beholde, I will sende and call for Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon my seruauant, and will set his seate vpon these stones that I haue hyd, and he shall sprede his tente ouer them.

And when he commeth, he shal smyte the lōde of Egipte with slaughter, with presonment and with the swearde. He shall set fyre vpon the temples of the Egiptias goddes, and burne them vp, ⁊ take them selues prisoners. Morouer he shall araye himself with the lōde of Egipte, like as a shepherd putteth on his cote, and shall departe away from thence in peace. The pilers also of the temple of the Sonne that is in Egipte, shal he breake in peces, and burne the tempels of the Egiptians goddes.

The xliij. Chapter.

A THIS is the worde ⁊ was shewed to Jeremy cōcerninge all ⁊ lewes, which dwelt in Egipte: at Magdal, at Taphnis, at Memphis, ⁊ in the londe of Patures. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Ye haue sene all ⁊ misery, ⁊ I haue brought vpon Ierusalem, and vpon all the cities of Iuda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwelling therein: ⁊ ⁊ because of the greate blasphemies, which they committed, to prouoke me vnto anger: In that they wente backe to do sacrifice ad worshipe vnto straunge goddes: whom nether they, ner ye, ner youre fathers haue knowne. How be it, I sent vnto them my seruantes all the prophetes: <sup>1</sup> I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them warninge: O do no soch abhominable thinges, ⁊ thinges that I hate. But they wolde not folowe ner herke, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge goddes.

Wherefore my indignacion ⁊ wrath was kyndled, and it brente vp the cities of Iuda, the feldes with the stretes off Ierusalem: so that they were made waist and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: How happeneth it, that ye do so greate euell vnto youre owne soules, thus to destroye the men and women, childrē and babes of Iuda? so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wrath with the workes of youre owne hondes: whē ye offre vnto straunge goddes in the londe off Egipte, where as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might vtterly perishe, and that ye might be reuyled and shamfully intreated of all nacions. Or, haue ye now forgotten the wickednes off youre forefathers, the wickednes off ⁊ kynges of Iuda and their wyues, ⁊ wickednes that ye youre selues ad youre wyues haue done in the londe of Iuda, in the cite and in the londe off Ierusalem?

Yet are ye not sory this daye, ye feare not, nether walke ye in my lawe and in my commaundementes, that I haue geuē vnto you and youre forefathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God off Israel: <sup>1</sup> I am stedfastly advyced and determed, to punysh you, and to rote out all Iuda. <sup>2</sup> As for the remnaunt off Iuda that purposly wente in to Egipte, there to ease them off their misery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In ⁊ londe of Egipte shall they perishe, beyng consumed with the swearde and with hunger. For from ⁊ leest vnto ⁊ most, they shal perishe with the swearde and with honger. Morouer they shalbe reuyled, abhorred, shamed, and confounded. For I wil viset them that dwell in Egipte, <sup>a</sup>as I haue visited Ierusalem: with the swearde, with honger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnaunt off Iuda, which are gone to dwell in Egipte, shall be left to come agayne in to y<sup>e</sup> londe off Iuda: all though they thynke to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shal come agayne, but such as are fled awaye.

C Then all the men which knewe that their wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, <sup>a</sup> a greate sorte off wyues that stode there, yee and all the people that dwelt there in Egipte in the cite of Patures, answerde Jeremy, <sup>a</sup> sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, we will in no wyse heare them: but what so euer goeth out of oure owne mouth, that wil we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblacions vnto the Quene off heauen: <sup>b</sup>like as we and oure forefathers, oure kynges and oure heades haue done in the cities off Iuda, and in the stretes and felde of Ierusalem. For then had we plenteuousnesse off vytales, then were we in prosperite, and no mysfortune came vpon vs.

But sens we left of, to offre, and to do sacrifice vnto the Quene of heauen, <sup>c</sup>we haue had scarcenes of all thynges, and perish with the swearde and honger. Last of all, when we womē did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene of heauē, did we make her cakes <sup>d</sup>ad poure vnto her drinkofferings, to do her seruyce, without oure huszbondes wylles?

D Then sayde Jeremy vnto all the people, to the men, to the women and to all the folke, which had geuen him that answer: Dyd not the LORDE remembre the sacrifices that ye, youre forefathers, <sup>e</sup>your kiges <sup>f</sup>and rulers (with all the people) haue offred in the cities of Iuda, in the stretes and londe off Ierusalem? and hath he not considered this in his mynde? In so moch, that the LORDE might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inuencions, and the abhominable thynges which ye dyd? <sup>g</sup>Is not youre londe desolate <sup>h</sup>and voyde, yee and abhorred, so that no mā dwelleth therein any more, as it is come to passe this daye?

ye made soch sacrifice, and synned agaynst the LORDE? Ye haue not folowed his voyce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes.<sup>6</sup>

Yee this is the cause, that all mysfortune happened vnto you, as it is come to passe this daye.

Morouer, Jeremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORDE all Iuda, ye that be in the londe off Egipte: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Ye and youre wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in dede.

Yee thus haue ye sayde: <sup>7</sup>We will not fayle, but do the thyng that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynckofferings to the Quene of heauen. Purposly haue ye set vp youre owne good meanynges, <sup>8</sup>and hastely haue ye fulfilled youre owne intente. And therfore, heare the worde of the LORDE all Iuda, ye that dwell in the londe off Egipte.

Beholde, <sup>9</sup>I haue sworne by my greate name (saith the LORDE) that my name shal not be rehearsed thorow eny mans mouth of Iuda, in all the londe of Egipte: to saye: The LORDE God lyueth, for I wil watch, to plage them, and not for their wealth. And all the men of Iuda that be in the lode of Egipte, <sup>10</sup>shal perish with the swearde and with honger, vntill they be vtterly destroyed.

Neuertheles, those that fled awaye for y<sup>e</sup> swearde, shal come agayne in to the lode of Iuda (but there shal be very fewe of them) And all the remnaunt off Iuda, that are gone in to Egipte, there to dwell, shall knowe, whose wordes shalbe founde true: theirs or myne. Take this for a token, that I wil viset you in this place (saith the LORDE) and that ye maye knowe, how that I (without doute) wil perfourme my purpose vpon you, to punysh you. Beholde (saith the LORDE) I wil delyuer Pharaο Ophram kyng of Egipte in to the hondes of his enemies, y<sup>e</sup> seke after his life: euen as I gaue Sedechias the kyng of Iuda <sup>11</sup>in to the hondes of Nabuchodonosor kige of Babilo, which sought after his life.

of Nerias, "after that he had written these Sermōs in to a boke at the mouth of Ieremy, In the fourth yere of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda.

Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel vnto the, O Baruch: In so moch as thou thoughtest thus (when thou wast writinge) Wo is me, the LORDE hath geuen me payne for my trauayle: I haue weered my self with sighinge, and shall I fynde no rest? Therefore tell him (O Ieremy) <sup>3</sup> the LORDE saith thus: Beholde, The thinge that I haue buylded, wil I breake downe agayne, and rote out the thinge, that I haue planted, yee this whole londe. ### The xlii. Chapter.

But alas, how happeneth it, that I se you so afrayed? why shrēcke ye backe? wherefore are youe worthies slayne? Yee they runne so fast awaye, that none off them loketh behynde him. Fearfulnesse is fallen vpon euerychone off them, saith the LORDE. The lightest off fote shall not fle awaye, and the worthies shall not escape.

<sup>3</sup> Towarde the north by the water of Euphrates they shall stombe and fall. But what is he this, that swelleth vp, as it were a floude, roaringe & raginge like the streames off water? It is Egipte that ryseth vp like the floude, and casteth out the waters with so greate noyse.

For they saye: We will go vp, and will couer the earth: we wil destroye <sup>4</sup> cities, with them that dwell therein. Get you to horse backe, roll forth <sup>5</sup> Charettes, come forth ye worthies: ye Morians, ye Libeans with youre buclers, ye Lideans with youre bowes: So shall this daye be vnto the LORDE God of hoostes, a daye of vègeaunce, that he maye avege him of his enemies. The swearde shal deuoure, it shal be satisfied and bated in their bloude: For the LORDE God off hoostes shall haue a slayneoffringe towardes the North, by the water of Euphrates. Go vp (o Galaad) & bringe triacle vnto the daughter off Egipte:

But in wayne shalt thou go to surgery, for thy wounde shall not be stopped. The Heithen shall heare off thy shame, and the londe shalbe full of thy confucion: for one stronge man shall stombe vpon another, how then shulde they not fall both together?

These are the wordes that the LORDE <sup>6</sup> spake to the prophet Ieremy, concernynge <sup>7</sup> the hoost of Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon, which was to destroye the londe off Egipte: Preach out thorow the londe of Egipte, and cause it be proclaimed at Migdal, Memphis and Taphnis, and saye: Stonde still, make the redie, for the swearde shal consume the rounde aboute.

How happeneth it that thy mightie worthies are fallen? why stode they not fast? Euen because the LORDE thrust them downe. The slaughter was greate, for one fell euer still vpon another. One cried vpon another: Vp, let vs go agayne to oure owne people, and to oure owne naturall cowntre, from the swearde of oure enemye.

Crie euen there: O Pharao kynge of Egipte, the tyme will bringe sedicion. <sup>8</sup> As truly as I lyue (saith the kynge, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) it shall come as <sup>9</sup> the mount of Thabor, and as Libanus yf it stode in the see. O thou daughter of Egipte, make redy thy geer to flyt. For Memphis shalbe voyde and desolate, so that nomā shal dwell therein. The londe of Egipte is like a goodly fayre calfe, but one shall come out of the north to dryue her forward. Hir wagied souldyers that be with her, are like fat calves.

They also shall fle awaye together, and not abyde: for the daye off their slaughter and the tyme of their visitacion shall come vpon them.

The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a trompet. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come with axes, as it were hewers downe of wod. And they shall cut downe hir wod (saith the LORDE) with out eny discrecion. For they shall be mo in nôbre then the greshoppers, so that no man shalbe able to tell thê. The daughter of Egipte shalbe confounded, whê she shalbe deluyered in to the hondes off the people off the north.

☞ Morouer thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde I will vsyet that restlesse people off Alexandria, Pharao and Egipte, yee both their goddes and their kynges: euen Pharao, and all them y litten vnto him. "Yee I will deluyuer them in to the hondes off those, that seke after their lyues: Namely, in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon, and in to the power off his seruaites. "And after all these thinges, it shalbe inhabited as afore tyme, saith the LORDE.

"But be not thou afraied (o my seruaint Iacob) feare not thou, o Israel. For lo, I wil helpe the from farre, and thy sede from the londe of thy captiuyte. Iacob also shall come agayne, and be in rest: he shall be rich, and no man shall do him harme. "Feare thou not (o Iacob my seruaint) saith the LORDE, for I am with the: and will destroye all nacions, amonge whom I haue scatred the. Neuertheles I will not consume the, but chasten the and correcke the: yee and that with discrecion: nether wil I spare the, as one that were faultlesse.

The xlvij. Chapter.

☞ THESE are the wordes, that the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy the prophet agaynst the Phylistines, before that Pharao smote the cite off Gaza. Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall growe to a greate floude, runnyng ouer and couerynge the londe, the cities and them that dwell therein.

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noyse and stampynge off their stronge barded horses, at the shakynge off their charettes, and at the romblinge off the wheles. The fathers shall not loke to their children, so feable and weery shall their hondes be: at the same tyme, when he shal be there, to destroye the whole londe off the Phylistynes. He shall make waist both Tirus, Sidon and all other that are sworne vnto them.

For the LORDE will destroye all Palestina, and the other Iles, that be deuyded fro the countre. Baldnesse is come vpon Gaza, Ascalon with hir other valleys shall kepe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, O thou swearde off the LORDE? Turne agayne in to thy sheeth, reste, and leaue off. But how can it cease, when the LORDE himself hath geuen it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and raysed it vp agaynst the cities off the see coast?

The xlvij. Chapter.

THUS saith y LORDE off hoostes y ☞ God of Israel against Moab: "Wo be to y cite of Nebo, for it shal be layed waist, brought to confucion and taken. Yee thy strôge cite of Cariatharim shalbe brought to shame, and afraied: Moab shall nomore be had in honoure: Wicked counsell shalbe taken vpon Hesebon. Come (shall they saye) let vs rote them out, that they maye be nomore amonge the nombre of the Gentiles, yee that they maye nomore be thought vpon: Thus the swearde shall persecute y. A voyce shall crie from Horonaim: With greate waistinge and destruction, is Moab made desolate.

And this crie shalbe herde in all hir cities. At the goinge vp vnto Lubith there shall arise a lamêtacion: and downe towarde Horonaim, there shall be herde a cruell and a deedly crie: Get you awaye, saue youre lyues t be like vnto the heeth in y wilderness. "For, because thou hast trusted in thy stronge holdes and treasure, thou shalt be taken. Chamos with his prestes and prynces shall go awaye in to captiuyte.

The destroyer shal come vpon all cities, none shall escape. The valleys shalbe destroyed, and the feldes shall be layed waist: like as the LORDE hath determed.

But lo, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I shall sende hir trussers to trusse her vp. to prepare and season hir vessels: yee hir tankerdies rattell, and shake to & fro. And Moab shalbe ashamed off Chamos, like as Israel was ashamed off Bethel, wherin she put hir trust.

Wherefore do ye thinke thus: we are mightie, and stronge men off warre?<sup>b</sup> Moab shal be destroyed, and hir cities brente vp: hir chosen yonge men shall be slayne, saith the kinge, whose name is the LORDE off hoostes. The destruction off Moab commeth on a pace, and hir fall is at honde.

All hir neighbours shall mourne for her, and all they that knowe hir name, shal saye: O how happeneth it, that the stronge staff and the goodly rod is thus broken? And thou daughter Dibō, come downe from thy glory, and syt in pouerte. For he that destroyeth Moab, shall come vp to the also, and breake downe thy stronge holdes.

And thou that dwellest in Aroer, get the to ȝ strete, & loke aboute the: axe them that are fled and escaped, and saye: what thyng is happened? O, Moab is confounded and ouercome.

Mourne and crie, tell it out at Arnon, that Moab is destroyed. And mysery shall come vpon the playne londe: Namely, vpō holon, and Iaza: vpon Mephat and Dibō, vpon Nebo and the house of Diplathaim. vpon Cariatharim and Bethgamul, vpon Bethmaon and Carioth, vpon Bosra and all the cities in the lode off Moab, whether they lye farre or neare.

The horne of Moab shal be myttē downe, & hir arme broken, saith the LORDE. Make hir dronken (for she magnified hir self alone the LORDE:) that men maye clappe their hondes at hir vomyte, and that she also maye be laughed to scorne. O Israel, shalt thou not laugh him to scorne, when he is taken among theues? <sup>c</sup>Yee because off thy wordes that thou hast spoken agaynst him, thou shalt be dryuen awaye. Ye Moabites shal leaue the cities, and dwell in rockes off stone, and become like douses, that make their nestes in holes.

As for Moabs pryde, we haue herde off it, she is very hie mynded. <sup>d</sup>I knowe hir stoutnesse, hir boostinge, hir arrogācy and the pryde off hir stomach, saith the LORDE. For hir furiousnes maye nether vpholde hir with strength, ner dede. Therfore shal there mournynge be made for Moab, and euery mā shal crie for Moabs sake: a lamentacion shalbe made, to the men that stonde vpon the wall. So will I mourne for the also (o Iazer) and for the, O thou vynyarde off Sybma.

Thy wyne brānches shal come ouer ȝ see, and the braunches off Iazer but vnto the see: the destroyer shall breake in to thy haruest and grape gatheringe. Myrth and cheare shalbe taken awaye from the tymbre felde, and from the whole londe off Moab.

There shall be no swete wyne in the presse, the treader shall haue no stomacke to crie, yee there shall be none to crie vnto him: which afore tyme were herde from hesebon to Eleale and Ioaz, which lifted vp their voyce from Zoar vnto Horonaim, that bullock off thre year olde. The waters also off Nemrim shalbe dried vp.

Morouer I will make Moab cease (saith the LORDE) from the offringes and censinge that she hath made vnto hir goddes in hie places. Wherefore my herte mourneth for Moab, like a crowde playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the bricke wall my herte mourneth also, euen as a pype, that pipeth a dolefull songe: for they shalbe very fewe, and destroyed.

All heades shall be shauen, and all beered clipped off: all hondes bounde, and all loynes gyrded aboute with sack cloth. Vpō all the house toppes and stretes off Moab, there shalbe mournynge: For I will breake Moab like an vnprofitable vessell saith the LORDE. O how fearfull is she? O how mourneth she? O how doth Moab hange downe hir heade, and is ashamed? Thus shall Moab be a laughinge stocke, and had in derision off all them, that be rounde aboute her.

For thus saith the LORDE: "Beholde, the enemy shall come flyenge as an Aegle, and sprede his wynges vpon Moab. They shall clymme ouer the walles, and wynde the stronge holdes. Then the mighty mens hertes in Moab, shalbe like the herte off a woman traueling with childe.

And Moab shalbe made so desolate, that she shal nomore be a people, because she hath set vp her selfe agaynst the LORDE. Feare, pyt, and snare shall come vpon the (o Moab) saith the LORDE. Who so escapeth the feare, shal fall in the pyt: and who so getteth out off the pyt, shall be taken in the snare."

For I will bringe a yere off visitacion vpon Moab, saith the LORDE. They that are able to fle, shall stonde vnder the shadowe off Hesebon. For there shall go a fyre out off Hesebon, and a flame from Sion, & shall burne vp that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

Wo be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shalt perish: Yee thy sonnys and doughters shall be led awaye captiue. Yet at the last will I bringe Moab out off captiue agayne, saith the LORDE. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

The xlii. Chapter.

AS concerninge the Ammonites, thus the LORDE saith: Hath Israel no children, or is he without an heyre? Why hath youre kynge then taken Gad in? wherefore doth his people dwell in his cities? Beholde therefore, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I will bringe a noyse off warre in to Rabath off the Ammonites. Lahel shalbe desolate, and hir cities brent vp: and the Israelites shall be lordes ouer those, that had the in possession afore, saith the LORDE. Hesebon shall mourne, for it shal be roted out off the grounde, saith the LORDE. The cities off Rabath shall erie out, and gyrd the selues with sack cloth: they shall mourne, and runne aboute the walles: for their kynge shall be led awaye prisoner: yee his preestes and prynces with him.

Wherefore trustest thou in the water streames, that flowe to and fro, o thou feare doughter: and thyngest thou art so safe (by reason off thy treasure) that no man shal come to the?

Beholde, I will bringe a feare vpon the, saith the LORDE God off hostes, from all those that be aboute the: so that ye shall be seated euery man from another, and no man shall gather them together agayne, that be fled. But after that, I will bringe the Ammonites also out off captiue agayne.

Vpon the Edomites hath the LORDE off hostes spoken on this maner: "Is there no more wysdome in Theman? Is there no more good counsell amonge his people? Is their wysdome then turned cleue to naught? Get you hencee, turne youre backes, crepe downe in to the depe, O ye cistesyns off Dedan.

For I will bringe destructio vpon Esau, yee and the daye off his visitacion. Yff the grape gatherers came vpon the, shulde they not leaue some grapes? Yff the night robbers came vpon the, shulde they not take so moch, as they thought were ynough?

But I will make Esau bare, and discouer his secretes, so that he shall not be able to hyde them. His sede shalbe waisted awaye, yee his brethren and his neighbours, ad he himself shall not be left behinde.

Thou shalt leaue thy fatherlesse children behinde the, and I will kepe them and thy wydowes shall take their comforth in me. For thus hath the LORDE spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were ynmete to drinke of the cuppe, haue drunken with the first: and thyngest thou then to be fre?

No, no: thou shalt nether be quyte nor fre, but thou must drynke also: For why, I haue sworne by my self (saith the LORDE) that Bosra shall become a wyldernes, an open shame, a laughinge stocke and cursyng: and hir cities shalbe a continuall deserte.

For I am perfectly informed of the LORDE, that he hath sent a message all ready vnto the Heithen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for lo: "I will make the but small amonge the Heithen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Thy hie stomack & the pryde of thy herte haue discaued the, because thou wilt dwell in the holes of stony rockes, and haue the hie mountaynes in possession. Neuertheles though thy nest were as hie as the Aegles, yet wil I cast the downe, saith the LORDE. Morouer

Idumea shall be a wilderness: "who so goeth by it, shalbe abashed, and wondre at all hir miserable plagues. Like as Sodom, Gomor and the cities that laye there aboute, were turned vpsyde downe (saith  $\text{f}$  LORDE) so shal no body dwell in Idumea, and no man shal haue his habitacion there. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasaunt meadowes of Iordane vnto  $\text{f}$  grene pastures of Ethā, so wil I dryue him,  $\text{t}$  make him runne agaynst her. But who is the yonge man that I will ordene therto? Who is like, vnto me? What is he that wil stryue with me? What shepherde maye stonde in my hondes?

Then shal the hertes of the worthies in Edom be "as the herte of a woman trauelinge of childe. Vpon Damascus, Hemath and Arphad shall come confucion, for they shall heare euell tydings: they shal be tossed to and fro like the see that can not stonde still. Damascus shalbe sore afrayde,  $\text{t}$  shal fle, tremblinge shal come vpon her. Sorowe and payne shal ouer take her as a woman trauelinge of childe. But how shulde so worshipfull and glorious a cite be forsaken? Heare therefore: hir yonge men shal fall in the stretes, and all hir men of warre shal be takē awaye in that tyme, saith the LORDE of hoostes. I will kyndle a fyre in the walles of Damascus, which shal cosume the palace of Benadad.

$\text{E}$  As for Cedar and the kyngdome of Hasor,  $\text{d}$  whom Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon smote downe, the LORDE hath spoken thus vpon them: Arise, and get you vp vnto Cedar, and destroye the people towarde the east. Their Camels shalbe stollen,  $\text{t}$  the droues of their catell dryuen awaye.

Morouer, these that be shauen wil I scatere towarde all the wyndes,  $\text{t}$  bringe them to destruction: Yee  $\text{t}$  that thorow their owne familiers, saith the LORDE. Hasor also shall be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an euerlastinge wilderness: so that no body shal dwell there, and no man shal haue there his habitacion.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE  $\text{f}$  spake to the prophet Jeremy concernynge Elam, in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil breake the bowe of Elam, and take awaye their strength: and vpon Elam I wil bringe the foure wyndes from  $\text{f}$  foure quarters of heauen,  $\text{t}$  wil scatere them agaynst the same foure wyndes. And there shal be no people, but some of Elam shal fle vnto them.

For I wil cause Elam be afraied of their enemies,  $\text{t}$  of them that seke their lyues:  $\text{t}$  wil bringe vpō them the indignacion of my wrath, saith the LORDE. And I wil persecute them with the swearde so longe til I haue brought them to naught. I wil set my stole in Elam, I wil destroye both the kinge  $\text{t}$   $\text{f}$  prynces from thence, saith the LORDE. out of the north there shal come a people agaynst her, which shal make hir londe so waiste, that no body shal dwell therein: nether man ner beast, for they shall fle and departe from thence. In those dayes ⁊ at that tyme (saith the LORDE) <sup>a</sup> the childre of Israel shall come, they ⁊ the children of Iuda, wepinge ⁊ makinge haist, ⁊ shal seke the LORDE their God. They shall axe the waye to Sion, thither shall they turne their faces, ⁊ come, and hange vpon the, in a couenaunt that neuer shal be broken.

<sup>b</sup> My people hath bene a lost flocke, my shepherdes haue disceaued them, ⁊ haue made them go astraye vpon the hilles. They haue gone from the mountayne to the litle hill, ⁊ forgotten their folde. All they ⁊ came vpon them, haue deuoured the: ⁊ their enemies sayde: We haue made no faute agaynst them, for they haue displeased the LORDE, yee euen the LORDE which is the bewtie of their rightuousnes, ⁊ ⁊ defended their fathers. Yet shal ye fle from Babilon, ⁊ departe out of ⁊ londe of the Caldees, and ye shall be as the rammes that go before the flocke. <sup>c</sup> For lo, I will wake vp an hoost of people from ⁊ northern londe, ⁊ bringe them vpon Babilon: these shal laye sege to it, ⁊ wyne it: Their arrowes shal not mysse, like as a connynge archer shuteh not wronge. And the Caldees shalbe spoyled, ⁊ all they that spoyle them, shalbe satisfied, saith the LORDE: <sup>d</sup> because ye were so chearfull ⁊ glad, to treade downe myne heretage, ⁊ fulfilled youre pleasures, as the calues in the grasse: ⁊ triumphed ouer them like the bulles, when ye had gotten the victory. Your mothers shalbe sore confounded, and they that bare you, shal come to shame. She shall be the leest set by amonge the nacions, voyde, waiste, ⁊ dried vp. No man shal be able to dwell there, for the feare of ⁊ LORDE, but she shal be whole desolate. All they that go by Babilon, <sup>e</sup> shall stonde still, ⁊ be abashed, ⁊ shal wondre at all hir playes.

⁊ hir walles shall come downe, for it shalbe the vengeance of the LORDE. <sup>g</sup> Yee vēgeaunce shalbe taken of her, ⁊ as she hath done, so shal she be dealt withall. They shal rote out the sower from Babilon, ⁊ him ⁊ handleth the sickle in haruest. For feare of the swearde of the enemye, euery man shall get him to his owne people, ⁊ euery man shal fle to his owne londe. Israel is a scatred flocke, the Lyons haue dispersed them. <sup>h</sup> First the kinge of the Assirians deuoured them, last of all this Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon hath brusled all their bones.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will viset the kinge of Babilon ⁊ his kingdome, <sup>i</sup> as I haue visited the kinge of the Assirians: and will bringe Israel agayne to his pleasaunt pasture, that he maye fede vpon Charnel ⁊ Basan, and be satisfied vpon the mount of Ephraim ⁊ Galaad. In those dayes and at the same tyme (saith the LORDE) <sup>j</sup> yf the offence of Israel be sought for, there shal none be founde: Yf men enquire for the synne of Iuda, there shal be none: for I wil be mercifull vnto them, whom I suffre to remayne ouer.

Go downe (o thou avenger) in to the enemies londe, ⁊ viset them that dwell therein: downe with them, and smyte them vpon the backes, saith the LORDE: do acordinge to all, that I haue commaunded the. There is gone aboute the londe a crie of a slaughter ⁊ greate murthur, namely on this maner: How happeneth it, that the hammer of the whole worlde is thus broken ⁊ brusled in sonder? How chaunceth it, that Babilon is become a wildernes amonge the Heithen on this maner? I my self haue layed wayte for the, ⁊ thou art taken: vnawares art thou trapped ⁊ snared: for why, thou hast prouoked ⁊ LORDE vnto anger: The LORDE hath opened his house of ordinance, ⁊ brought forth the weapons of his wrath. For the thinge that is done in the londe of the Caldees, it is the LORDE of hostes worke.

These thinges shal come vpon her at the last, they shal breake in to hir preuy chābres, they shal leaue her as bare as stones, that be layed together vpon heapes. They shall so destroye her, ⁊ nothinge shal be left. They shal slaye all hir mightie souldyers, and put them to death. Wo be vnto the, for the daye ⁊ tyme of their visitacion is at hounde. Methinke I heare already a crie, of them that be fled ⁊ escaped out of the londe of Babilon, which shewe in Sion the vengeance of the LORDE oure God, the vengeance of his temple: Yee a voyce of them, that crie agaynst Babilon: Call vp all the archers agaynst Babilon, pynch youre tentes rounde aboute her, that none escape. <sup>a</sup>Recompence her, as she hath deserued: and acordinge as she hath done, so deale with her agayne: for she hath set vp her self agaynst the LORDE, agaynst ⁊ holy one of Israel. Therefore shal hir yonge men fall downe in the stretes, ⁊ all hir men of warre shal be roted out in ⁊ daye, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I speake vnto the (o thou proude) saith the LORDE God of hostes: for thy daye shal come, euē the tyme of thy visitaciō. And the proude shal stomble ⁊ fall, ⁊ no man shal helpe him vp.

 I wil burne vp his cities with fyre, ⁊ it shal consume all that is rounde aboute him.

⁊ Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: The children of Israel ⁊ Iuda suffre violence together. All they that haue them in captiuyte, kepe them fast, ⁊ wil not let them go: but their avēger ⁊ redemer is mightie, whose name is the LORDE of hostes: he shal manteyne their cause, he shal make the londe shake, ⁊ iudge them that dwell therein, one with another.
 The swearde shall come vpon the Caldees (saith the LORDE) vpon them that dwell in Babilon, vpon their prynces, ⁊ vpō their wyse mē: The swearde vpon their soithsayers, (as for those, they shall become fooles.) The swearde vpō their worthies, so that they shal stonde in feare: The swearde vpon their horsmen and charettes, ⁊ vpon all the comon people that dwell vnder thē: so that they all shal become like women: The swearde vpon their treasure, so that it shal be stollen awaye:
 ⁊ The swearde vpon their waters, so that they shalbe dried vp: For the londe worshippeth ymages, ⁊ delyteth in straunge wondrefull thinges. Therefore shal wilde beestes, Apes ⁊ Estriches dwell therein: for there shal neuer man dwell there, nether shal eny man haue his habitation there for euer more. <sup>b</sup>Like as God destroyed Sodom ⁊ Gomorre, with the cities that laye there aboute, saith the LORDE: So shal noman dwell there also, nether shal eny mā haue there his habitation.

 Beholde, there shal come a people from the north, with a greate bonde of men, ⁊ many kinges shal stonde vp from the endes of the earth: They beare bowes ⁊ buclers, cruell are they ⁊ vmercifull.

Their voyce roareth like the raginge see, they ryde vpon horses, ⁊ come weapened to fight agaynst the: O Babilon. As soone as the kinge of Babilon heareth tell of them, his hondes shal waxe feable: Sorowe and heynes shall come vpon him, as a woman trauefinge with childe. Beholde, <sup>c</sup>like as the Lyon commeth vp from the pleasaunt meadowes of Iordane vnto the grene pastures of Ethan, so wil I dryue thē forth, and make them runne agaynst her. But whom shal I chose out, ⁊ ordene to such thinge? <sup>d</sup>For who is like me, or who wil stryue with me? or what shepherde maye stonde agaynst me? Therefore heare the counsel that the LORDE hath geuen vpon Babilon, and the deuycce that he hath taken vpon the londe of the Caldees. The leest amōge the people shal teare them in peces, ⁊ loke what pleasaunt thinge they haue:
 they shal laye it waist. The noyse at ⁊ wynnyng of Babilon shal moue the earth, ⁊ the crie shalbe herde amonge the Gētiles.

The li. Chapter.

⁊ THUS hath the LORDE sayde: Beholde, I wil rayse vp a perloous wynde fanners, to fanne her out, ⁊ to destroye hir londe: for in the daye of hir trouble they shal be aboute her on euery syde. Morouer, the LORDE hath sayde vnto the bowe men, ⁊ to them ⁊ clymme ouer the walles in brest plates:

 Ye shal not spare hir yonge mē, kyll downe
 all hir hoost. Thus the slayne shal fall downe in the londe of the Caldees, and the wounded in the stretes. <sup>e</sup>As for Israel ⁊ Iuda, they shall not be forsakē of their God, of the no, though they haue fylled all their londe full of synne. <sup>f</sup>Fle awaye from Babilon, euery

By the reason of wysdome, all men are become fooles. <sup>m</sup> Confounded be all the casters of ymages: for <sup>n</sup> y thinge that they make, is but disceate, <sup>o</sup> y hath no breath. Vayne is it, <sup>p</sup> y worthy to be laughed at: <sup>q</sup> y in the tyme of visitacion it shal perish.

D Neuertheles, the porcion of Iacob is none soch: but he that made all thinges, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes, he is the rodde of his enheritaunce. Thou breakest my weapens of warre, <sup>r</sup> y yet thorow the I haue scatred the nacions <sup>s</sup> y kyngdomes: Thorow the haue I scatred horse <sup>t</sup> y horse man, yee the charettes, <sup>u</sup> y soch as sat vpon them: Thorow the I haue scatred man <sup>v</sup> y woman, olde and yonge, bachelor <sup>w</sup> y mayden. Thorow the I haue scatred the shepherde <sup>x</sup> y his flocke, the husbond man <sup>y</sup> y his catell, the prynces <sup>z</sup> y the rulers. Therefore wil I rewarder the cite of Babilon <sup>aa</sup> y all hir citesyns the Caldees, with all the euell which they haue done vnto Sion: Yee that ye youre selues shall se it, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I come vpon the (thou noysome hill) saith the LORDE, thou that destroyest all londes. I wil stretch out my honde ouer the, <sup>ab</sup> y cast the downe from the stony rockes: <sup>ac</sup> y wil make the a brente hill, so that nether corner stones, ner pinnacles, ner foundation stones shalbe taken eny more out of the, but waist <sup>ad</sup> y desolate shalt thou lie for euermore, saith the LORDE.

Set vp a tokē in the londe: blowe the <sup>ae</sup> trompettes amonge the Heithen, prouoke the nacions agaynst her, call the kyngdomes, of Ararat, Menni <sup>af</sup> y Ascanes agaynst her: nombre out Taphsar agaynst her, bringe as greате a sorte of horses agaynst her, as yf they were greshoppers. Prepare agaynst them <sup>ag</sup> y people of the Meedes with their kynges, prynces <sup>ah</sup> y all their chefe rulers, yee and the whole loude that is vnder them.

The londe also shal shake <sup>ai</sup> y be afrayed, when the deucey of the LORDE shall come forth agaynst Babilon: to make the londe of Babilon so waist, that no mā shal dwell eny more therin. The Worthies of Babilon shal leaue the batell, <sup>aj</sup> y kepe them selues in stronge holdes, their strength hath fayled them, they shalbe like women. Their dwellinge places shal be brent vp, their barres shalbe broken. One purseuaunt shal mete another, yee one poste shal come by another, to bringe the kinge of Babilon tydinges: that his cite is taken in on euery syde, the foordes occupyde, the fennes brent vp, and the souldyers sore afrayed.

F For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: The daughter of Babilon hath bene in hir tyme like as a threszshinge floore, but shortly shal hir harness come. Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon hath deuoured and destroyed me, he hath made me an emptie vessel. He swallowed me vp like a Dragon, and fylled his bely with my delicates: he hath cast me out, he hath takē my substaunce awaye, & the thinge that was left me hath he caried vnto Babilon, saith the daughter, that dwelleth in Sion: Yee & my bloude also, vnto the Caldees, saith Ierusalem. Therfore thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil defende thy cause, & avenge the: I will drynke vp hir see, & drye vp hir water sprynges.

“Babilon shal become an heape of stones, a dwellinge place for dragons, a fearfulness & wondringe, because no man dwelleth there. They shall roare together like Lyons, & as the yonge Lyons when they be angrie, so shal they bēde them selues. In their heate I shal set drynke before thē, & they shalbe droncken for ioye: Then shal they slepe an euerlastinge slepe, & neuer wake, saith the LORDE. I shal carie them downe to be slayne like shepe, like wethers & gootes. O, how was Sessah wonne? O, how was the glory of y whole londe taken? how happeneth it, that Babilon is so wounded at amonge the Heithē? The see is rysen ouer Babilon, & hath couered her with his greates wawes. Hir cities are layed waist, the londe lieth vnbylded and voyde: it is a londe where no man dwelleth, & where no mā traueleth thorow. Morouer, I wil vyset Bel at Babilō: & the thinge that he hath swallowed vp, that same shal I plucke out of his mouth. The Gentiles also shall runne nomore vnto him, yee and the walles of Babilon shal fall.

“O my people, come out of Babilon, that euery man maye saue his life, from the fearfull wrath of the LORDE. Be not faynte herted, & feare not at euery rumoure that shalbe herde in the londe: for euery yeare bringeth new tydings, yee strange wickednes and lordshipe. And lo, the tyme commeth that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilō, and the whole londe shalbe confounded, yee and hir slayne shal lie in the myddest of her. Heauen and earth with all that is therein, shall reioyce ouer Babilon, when the destroyers shal come vpon her from the north, saith y LORDE.

Like as Babilō hath beaten downe and slayne many out of Israel, so shal there fall many, and be slayne in all hir kyngdome. Ye that haue escaped the sward, haist you, stōde not still, remembre the LORDE afarre of: and thinke vpon Ierusalem, for we were ashamed to heare the blasphemies: oure faces were couered with shame, because the straunge aleauntes came in to the Sanctuary of the LORDE. Wherefore beholde (saith the LORDE) the tyme commeth, that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and thorow the whole lōde they shal mourne and fall. “Though Babilon clymmed vp in to heauē, and kepte her power an hie: yet shal I sende her destroyers saith the LORDE.

A piteous crie shal be herde from Babilon, and a greates mysery from the londe of the Caldees: when the LORDE destroyeth them, and when he dryeth out the hie stomack & proude boostinge, where with they haue bene as furious, as the wawes of greates water floudes, and made greates crakes with their wordes. For the destroyers shall come vpon her (euen vpon Babilon) which shal take hir worthies, and brake their bowes: for God is disposed to avenge him self vpon them, & sufficiently to recompence thē. Yee (saith the LORDE) I will make their prynces, their wyse men, their chefe rulers & all their worthies, dronckē: so that they shal slepe an euerlastinge slepe, and neuer wake: Thus saith the kinge, whose name is y LORDE of hoostes.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: The thicke wall of Babilon shal be broken, and hir proude gates shalbe brente vp. And the thinge that the Gētiles and the people haue wrought with greates trauayle and laboure, shal come to naught, and be consumed in the fyre.

This is the charge that Ieremy gaue vnto Sarias the sonne of Nerias, the sonne of Maasia, when he wente towarde Babilon with Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, in the fourth yeare of his reigne. Now this Sarias was a peaceable pryncce. Ieremy wrote in a booke, all the misery that shulde come vpon Babilon, yee and all these sermons that be written agaynst Babilon, and gaue Sarias this charge: When thou comest vnto Babilon, se that thou rede all these wordes, and saye: O LORDE, thou art determed to rote out this place, so that nether people ner catell shal dwell there eny more, but to lie waist for euer: and when thou hast redde out the boke, bynde a stone to it, and cast it in the myddest of Euphrates, and saye: "Euē thus shal Babilon synke, ⁊ be thrust downe with the burthen of trouble, that I will bringe vpon her: so that she shal neuer come vp agayne. Thus farre are y<sup>e</sup> preachinges of Ieremy.

The liij. Chapter.

A SEDECHIAS was xxj. yeare olde, when he was made kynge, <sup>a</sup> ⁊ he raigned xj. yeare in Ierusalem. His mothers name was Hamithal, Ieremies doughter of Lobna. He lyued wickedly before the LORDE enen as Ioachim dyd. Wherefore the LORDE was angrie at Ierusalem ⁊ Iuda, so longe till he had cast thē out of his presence. And Sedechias fel from the kynge of Babilon. <sup>c</sup> But in y<sup>e</sup> ix. yeare of his raigne, In the tēth Moneth, the tenth daye of the Moneth it happened, that Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon with all his hooste came before Ierusalem, ⁊ beseged it, ⁊ made them bulworkes rounde aboute it. And this beseginge of the cite endured vnto the xj. yeare of kynge Sedechias.

And in the fourth Moneth, the ix daye of the Moneth, there was so greate honger in the cite: that there were no more vitayles for the people of the londe. <sup>d</sup> So all the souldyers brake awaye, and fled out of the cite by night, thorow the waye of the porte betwene the two walles by the kynges garden. Now y<sup>e</sup> Caldees had cōpassed the cite rounde aboute, yet wente these men their waye towarde the wilderness.

And so the Caldees folowed vpon them, and toke Sedechias the kinge in the felde of Iericho, when his hoost was runne from him. So they caried the kynge awaye prisoner to Reblatha, vnto the kinge of Babilon in the londe of Hemath, <sup>e</sup> where he gaue iudgment vpon him.

The kinge of Babilō also caused Sedechias sonnes be slayne before his face, yee ⁊ put all the prynces of Iuda to death at Reblatha. Morouer he put out the eyes of Sedechias, caused him be bounde with cheynes, to be caried vnto Babilon: ⁊ let him lie in preson, till he dyed.

Now y<sup>e</sup> tenth daye of the fyfth Moneth in the xix yeare of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, Nabusaradan the chefe captayne and the kinge of Babilons seruantes came vnto Ierusalem, ⁊ brent vp the house of the LORDE. He brent vp also the kinges palace, all the houses ⁊ all the gorgeous buyldinges in Ierusalē. And the whole hoost of the Caldees y<sup>e</sup> were with the chefe captayne, brake downe all the walles of Ierusalem rounde aboute.

As for the poore people ⁊ soch folke as yet was left in the cite, which also were fallen to the kinge of Babilon, yee ⁊ what people as yet remayned: Nabusaradan the chefe captayne caried them awaye prisoners. But y<sup>e</sup> poore people of the countre, dyd Nabusaradan the chefe captayne leaue in the londe, to occupie the vynyards ⁊ feldes. The Caldees also brake the brasen pilers, that were in the house of the LORDE, yee the seate and the brasen lauer that was in the house of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE: ⁊ caried all the metall of them vnto Babilon. They toke awaye also the Cauldrons, shouels, flesh hokes, sprinklers, spones ⁊ all the brasen vessell that was occupide in the seruyce: with the basens, colepannes, sprinklers, pottes, candilstickes, spones, and cuppes: wherof some were of golde, and some of syluer.

The chefe captayne toke also the two pilers, the lauer, the xij brasen bullockes y<sup>e</sup> stode vnder y<sup>e</sup> seate, <sup>f</sup> which kinge Salomon made in the house of the LORDE: ⁊ all the vessell conteyned so moch metall, that it might not be weyed. For euery piler was xviij cubites hie, ⁊ the rope that went aboute it, was xij cubites, ⁊ foure fingers thick and rounde: Now vpon the rope were brasen knoppes, ⁊ euery knoppe was fyue cubites hie: ⁊ vpon the knoppes were whopes, ⁊ pomgranates rounde aboute of clene brasse.

After this maner were both the pilers fashioned with the pomgranates, wherof there were an hundreth and xcvi, which hanged vpon the whoopes rounde aboute. The chefe captayne also toke Sarias y<sup>e</sup> hie prest, ⁊ Sophonias that was chefe next him, and the thre keepers of the treasury. He toke out of the cite a chamberlayne which was a captayne of the souldyers, ⁊ seuen men that were the kinges seruauntes, which were founde in the cite: ⁊ Sepher a captayne that vsed to muster the men of warre: with lx men of the countre that were taken in the cite. These Nabusaradan the chefe captayne toke, ⁊ caried them to the kinge of Babilon vnto Reblatha: and the kinge of Babilon caused them to be put to death at Reblatha in the londe of Hemath. And thus Iuda was ledde awaye captiue, out of his owne londe.

This is the summe of the people, whom Nabuchodonosor ledde awaye captiue.

35 In the seuenth yeare of his reigne, he caried awaye of ȝ Iewes, thre thousande thre and twenty. In the xviij yeare Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Ierusalem eight hunderth and xxxij personnes. In the xxij yeare of Nabuchodonosor Nabusaradan the chefe captayne, toke awaye seuen hundreth xlv Iewes presoners. The whole summe of all the presoners, is foure thousande and sex hundreth.

"In the xxxvij yeare after that Ioachim the kinge of Iuda was caried awaye in the xxv daye of the xij Moneth, Euſmerodach kinge of Babilon (the same yeare ȝ he reigned) gaue Ioachim the kinge of Iuda his pardon, and let him out of preson, and spake louyngly to him: And set his trone aboue ȝ trones of the other kinges that were with him in Babilon. He chaunged also the clothes of his preson, yee and he att with him all his life longe. And he had a cōtinuall lyuynge geuen him of the kinge of Babilon, euery daye a certayne thinge alowed him, all the dayes of his life, vntill he dyed.

* 2 Re. 4. b. 4 Re. 15. a.

She wepeth sore in the night, so that ȝ teares runne downe hir chekes: for amonge all hir louers, there is none, that geueth her eny comforte: yee hir nexte frendes abhorre her, ⁊ are become hir enemies.

Iuda is taken presoner, because she was defyled: ⁊ for seruyng so many straunge goddes, she dwelleth now amonge the Heithen. She fyndeth no rest, all they that persecuted her, toke her, and so she dwelleth amonge hir enemies.

The stretes of Sion mourne, because no man commeth more to the solempne feastes: All hir gates are desolate, hir prestes make lamentation, hir maydens are carefull, and she herself is in greate heynesne.

Hir enemies are fallen vpon hir heade, ⁊ haue put her to shame: because the LORDE hath chastened her for hir greate wickednes: "hir children are ledde away captiue before their enemye.

All the bewtie of the daughter of Sion is awaye, hir prynces are become like wethers, that fynde no pasture. They are dryue awaye before their enemye, so that they haue no more power.

Now doth Ierusalem remembre the tyme of hir misery ⁊ disobedience, yee the ioye ⁊ pleasure y she hath had in tymes past: seyng hir people is brought downe thorow the power of their enemye, ⁊ there is no man for to helpe her: hir enemies stode lookinge at her and laugh hir Sabbath dayes to scorne.

Ierusalem synned euer more ⁊ more, therefore is she come in decaye. All they that had her in honoure, despise her: for they haue sene hir fylthinesse. Yee she sigheth, and is ashamed of herselfe.

Hir skyrtes are defyled, she remēbred not what wolde folowe: therefore is hir fall so greate, and there is no mā to comforte her. O LORDE, cōsidre my trouble, for myne enemye hath the vpper honde.

The enemye hath put his honde to all the precious things that she had, yee euen before hir eyes came the Heithen in and out of the Sanctuary: whom thou (neuertheles) "hast forbydden to come within thy congregacion.

All hir people seke their bred with heynesne, ⁊ loke "what precious thinge euery man hath, that geueth he for meate, to saue his life. Considre (O LORDE) and se, how vyle I am become.

O ye all that go fore by, beholde and se, yf there be eny sorowe like vnto myne, wher with the LORDE hath troubled me, in the daye of his fearefull wrath.

From aboue hath he sent downe a fyre, in to my bones and chastened me: he hath layed a net for my fete, and throwne me wyde open: he hath made me desolate, so that I must euer be mournynge.

The yocke of my transgression is come at the last, with his honde hath he taken it vp, and put it aboute my neck. My strength is gone: the LORDE hath deliuered me in to those hondes, wherout I can not quyte myself.

The LORDE hath destroyed all the mightie men, that were in me. He hath proclaimed a feast, to slaughter all my best mē. The LORDE hath troden downe the daughter of Iuda, like as it were in a wyne presse.

Therefore do I wepe, and myne eyes gusshe out of water: "for the cōforter that shulde quycken me, is farre fro me. My children are dryuen awaye, for why? the enemye hath gotten the ouer honde.

Sion casteth out hir hōdes, and there is no man to comforte her. The LORDE hath layed the enemies rounde aboute Iacob, and Ierusalem is as it were a menstruous womā, in the myddest of them.

The LORDE is righteous, for I haue prouoked his countenance vnto anger. O take hede all ye people, and considre my heynesne: My maydens and my yonge men are led awaye in to captiuite.

I called for my louers (but they begyled me:) for my prestes and counclers, but they perished: euen while they sought for meate, to saue their lyues.

Considre (O LORDE) how I am troubled, my wombe is disquieted, my herte turneth awaye in me, and I am full of heynesne. The swearde hurteth me without, and within I am like vnto death.

They heare my mournynge, but there is none that wil comforte me. All myne enemies haue herde of my trouble, and are glad therof, because thou hast done it. But thou shalt brynge forth the tyme, when they also shal be like vnto me.

From the shall come all their aduersite: thou shalt plucke them awaye, euē as thou hast plucked me, because of all my wickednesse. For my sorow is very greate, and my herte is heuy.

The ij. Chapter.

ALAS, how hath y LORDE darekened the daughter of Sion, so sore in his wrath? As for the honour of Israel, he hath casten it downe from heauen: "How happeneth it, that he remembred not his owne fote stole, when he was angrie?

2 The LORDE hath cast downe all the glory of Iacob without eny fauoure: All the stronge places of the daughter Iuda hath he broken in his wrath, & throwne them downe to the grounde: hir kyngdome & hir prynces hath he suspended.

3 In the wrath of his indignacion he hath broken all the horne of Israel: he hath with drawe his right honde from the enemye: yee a flame of fyre is kyndled in Iacob, & hath consuned vp all rounde aboute.

7 He hath bent his bowe like an enemye, he hath fastened his right honde as an aduersary: and euery thinge that was pleasauit to se, he hath smyten it downe. He hath poured out his wrath like a fyre, in to the tabernacle of the daughter Zion.

7 The LORDE is become, like as it were an enemye, he hath cast downe Israel & all his places: yee all his stronge holdes hath he destroyed, and fylled the daughter of Iuda with moch sorow and heynesse.

13 Hir tabernacle (which was like a garden of pleasure) hath he destroyed: hir hie solēpne feastes hath he put downe. "The LORDE hath brought it so to passe, that the hie solempne feastes and Sabbathes in Zion, are clene forgottē. In his heuy displeasure hath he made the kyng & prestes to be despised.

1 The LORDE hath forsaken his owne aulter, & is wroth with his owne Sanctuary, & hath geuen the walles of their towres in to the hondes of the enemye. Their enemies made a noyse in the house of the LORDE, as it had bene in a solempne feast daye.

7 The LORDE thought to breake downe the walles of the daughter Zion, he spred out his lyne, & drewe not in his honde, till he had destroyed them. Therefore mourne the turrets and the broken walles together.

13 Hir portes are casten downe to the grounde, hir barres are broken & smyten in sonder: hir kyng & prynces are caried awaye to the Gētiles.<sup>b</sup> They haue nether lawe ner prophetes, ner yet eny vision from the LORDE.

1 The Senatours of the daughter Zion sit vpon the grounde in sylence, they haue strowed aszshes vpon their heades, and gyrded them selues with sack cloth. The maydens of Ierusalem hange downe their heades to the grounde.

13 Myne eyes begynne to fayle me thorow wepinge, my body is disquieted, my leuer is poured vpon the earth, for the greate hurte of my people, seynge the children and babes dyd sowne in the stretes of the cite.

Even when they spake to their mothers: where is meate and drynke? for whyle they so sayde, they fell downe in the stretes of the cite, like as they had bene wounded, and some dyed in their mothers bosome.

What shal I saye of the (O thou daughter Ierusalem) to whom shal I lickē the? To whom shal I cōpare the (o thou daughter Zion) to comforte the withall? Thy hurte is like a mayne see, who maye heale the?

Thy prophetes haue loked out vayne & folish thinges for the,<sup>a</sup> they haue not shewed the of thy wickednesse, to kepe the from captiuyte: but haue ouerladen the, and thorow falsede scatred the abrode.

All they that go by the, clappe their hondes at the: hissing and wagginge their heades vpon the daughter Ierusalem, and saye: is this the cite that men call so fayre, wherin the whole londe reioyseth?

All thine enemies gape vpon the, whisperinge and bytinge their teth, sayenge: let vs denoure, for the tyme that we loked for, is come: we haue founde and sene it.

The LORDE hath fulfilled the thinge, that he was purposed to do: and performed that he had deuysed longe agoo: he hath destroyed, and not spared. He hath caused thine aduersary to tryumpe ouer the, and set vp the horne of thine enemye.

Let thine hert crie vnto the LORDE, O thou cite of the daughter Zion: 'let thy teares rūne downe like a ryuer daye & night: rust not, & let not the aple of thine eye leaue of.

Stonde vp, and make thy prayer in the first watch of the night, poure out thine hert like water before the LORDE: lift vp thine hondes, for the lyues of thy yonge children, that dye of hunger in the stretes.

Beholde (O LORDE) & considere, why hast thou gathered me vp so clene? Shal the women then eate their owne frute, euen children of a spanne longe? Shal the prestes and prophetes be slayne thus in the Sanctuary of the LORDE?

Yonge & olde lye behinde the stretes vpon the grounde, my maydens & yonge men are slayne with the swearde: whom thou in the

The iij. Chapter.

I AM the mā, that (thorow the rodd of his wrath) haue experiēce of misery.

He droue me forth, and led me: yee in to darknesse, but not in to light.

Agaynst me only he turneth his honde, ⁊ layeth it euer vpon me.

My flesh ⁊ my skynne hath he made olde, and my bones hath he brussed.

He hath buylded rounde aboute me, ⁊ closed me in with gall and tranayle.

He hath set me in darknesse, as they that be deed for euer.

He hath so hedged me in, that I can not get out, ⁊ hath layed heuy lynckes vpon me.

Though I crie ⁊ call piteously, yet heareth he not my prayer.

He hath stoppd vp my wayes with foure squared stones, ⁊ made my pathes crokod.

He layeth waite for me like a Bere, and as a lyon in a hole.

He hath marred my wayes, and brokē me in peces, he hath layed me waist altogether.

He hath bent his bowe, and made me as it were a marck to shute at.

The arrowes of his quyuer hath he shot, euen in to my reynes.

I am laughed to scorne of all my people, they make songes vpon me all ⁊ daye lōge.

He hath fylled me with bytternesse, ⁊ geuen me wormwod to drynke.

He hath smytten my teth in peces, ⁊ rolled me in the dust.

He hath put my soule out of rest, I forget all good thinges.

I thought in my self: I am vndone, there is no hope for me in the LORDE.

O remembre yet my misery and my trouble, the wormwod and the gall.

Yee thou shalt remēbre them, for my soule melteth awaye in me.

Whye I cōside these thinges in my hert, I get a hope agayne.

Namely, that the mercies of the LORDE are not clene gone, ⁊ that his lounge kyndnesse ceaseth not.

His faithfulness is greate, and renneth itself as the mornynge.

The LORDE is my porcion (saith my soule) therefore wil I hope in him.

O how good is the LORDE vnto thē, that put their trust in him, and to the soule that seketh after him?

O how good is it with stilnesse to wate and tarie, for the health of the LORDE?

O how good is it for a man, to take the yock vpon him from his youth vp?

He sitteth alone, he holdeth him still, and dwelleth quietly by him self.

He layeth his face vpon the earth, yf (per case) there happen to be eny hope.

He offreth his cheke to the smyter, he will be content with reprobous.

For the LORDE wil not forsake for euer.

But though he do cast of, yet (acordinge to ⁊ multitude of his mercies) he receaueh to grace agayne.

For he doth not plage, ⁊ cast out the children of men from his herte.

To treade all the presoners of the earth vnder his fete.

To moue the iudgment of man before the most highest.

To condemne a man in his cause: The LORDE hath no pleasure in soch thinges.

What is he then that saith: there shulde somthinge be done without the LORDES cōmaundement?

Out of the mouth of the most highest goeth not euell and good.

Wherefore then murmureth the luyinge man? let him murmoure at his owne synne.

Let vs lōke well vpon oure owne waies, ⁊ remembre oure selues, and turne agayne to ⁊ LORDE.

Let vs lift vp oure hertes with oure hondes vnto the LORDE, that is in heauen.

We haue bene dyssemblers ⁊ haue offended, wilt thou therefore not be intreated?

Thou hast couered vs in thy wrath, ⁊ persecuted vs, thou hast slayne vs without eny fauoure.

Thou hast hyd thy self in a cloude, that oure prayer shulde not go thorow.

Thou hast made vs outcastes, and to be despysed amonge the Heithen.

v All oure enemies gape vpon vs.
v Feare and snare is come vpon vs, yee despite and destruction.

v Whole ryuers of water gyszshe out of myne eyes, for the greate hurte of my people.

v Myne eyes runne, and can not ceasse, for there is no rest.

v O LORDE, when wilt thou loke downe frō heauen, and consider?

v Myne eye breaketh my herte, because of all the daughters of my cite.

v Myne enemies hunted me out sharply like a byrde, yee and that with out a cause.

v They haue put downe my life in to a pitte, and layed a stone vpon me.

v They poured water vpon my heade, then thought I: now am I vndone.

v I called vpon thy name (O LORDE) out of the depe pitte.

v Thou hast herde my voyce, ⁊ hast not turned awaye thine eares from my sighinge and crienge.

v Thou hast enclnyed thy self vnto me, whē
I called vpon the, ⁊ haist sayde: feare not.

v Thou (O LORDE) hast mayntened the cause of my soule, and hast redemed my life.

v O LORDE, thou hast sene my blasphemers, take thou my cause vpon the.

v Thou hast well considred how they go aboute to do me harme, ⁊ that all their counsels are agaynst me.

v Thou hast herde their despytefull wordes (O LORDE) yee and all their ymaginacions
agaynst me.

v The lippes of myne enemies, ⁊ their deuyces that they take agaynst me, all the daye longe.

v Thou seist also their sittinge downe and their rysinge vp, they make their songes of nothinge but of me.

v Rewarde them (O LORDE) accordinge to the workes of their hondes.

v Geue them ⁊ thinge, that their owne herte is afraied of: euen thy curse.

v Persecute them, (O LORDE) with thy indignacion, ⁊ rote them out from vnder the heauen.

The iiii. Chapter.

Q HOW is the golde become so dymme?
N How is the goodly coloure of it so sore changed? and the stones of ⁊ Sanctuary thus scatred in the corner of euery strete?

The children of Sion that were all waye in honoure, ⁊ clothed with ⁊ most precious golde:
how are they now become like the erthen vessels which be made with the potters honde?

The Lamyas geue their yonge ones suck with bare brestes: but the daughter of my people is cruel, and dwelleth in the wyldernesse: like the Estriches.

The tonges of the suckinge children, cleue to ⁊ rofe of their mouthes for very thirst. The yonge children axe bred, but there is noman, that geueth it them.

They that were wonte to fayre delicately, perishe in the stretes: they that afore were brought vp in purple, make now moch of donge.

The synne of the daughter of my people is become greater, then ⁊ wickednesse of Sodome, that sodely was destroyed,<sup>c</sup> and not taken with hondes.

Hir absteyners (or Nazarees) were whyter then ⁊ snowe or mylke: their coloure was fresh read as the Corall, their beutie like the Saphyre.

But now their faces are very black:<sup>d</sup> In so moch, that thou shuldest not knowe them in the stretes. Their skynne cleueth to their bones.
It is wythered, and become like a drye stock.

They that be slayne with the swearde, are happier, then soch as dye of hunger, and perishe awaye famishinge for the frutes of the felde.

The womē (which of nature are pitefull)
hondes: that they might be their meate, in ⁊ miserable destruction of the daughter of my people.

The LORDE hath perfourmed his heuy wrath:<sup>f</sup> he hath poured out the furiousnes of his displeasure. He hath kindled a fyre in Sion, which hath consumed the foundations therof.

Nether the kinges of the earth, ner all ⁊ inhabitours of the worlde, wolde haue beleued, that the enemy ⁊ aduersary shulde haue come in at the gates of the cite of Ierusalem.

Which neuertheles is come to passe for ⁊ synnes of hir prophetes, and for the wickednes of hir prestes, that haue shed innocentes bloude within her.

So that these blynde men wēte stomblinge in the stretes, and stayned them selues with bloude, which els wolde touche no bloudy cloth.

But they cried vnto euery mā: fle the staynyng, awaye, get you hēce, touch it not. Yee (sayde they) ye must be brent, ye must dwell amonge the Gentiles, ⁊ byde no longer here.

The countenance of the LORDE hath banyshed them, ⁊ shal neuer loke more vpon them: For they them selues nether regarded the prestes, nor pitied their elders.

Wherefore yet oure eyes fayle vs, whyle we loke for vayne helpe: seynge we be euer waitynge vpon a people, that can do vs no good.

They laye so sharpe waite for vs, that we can not go safe vpon the stretes: for oure ende is come, oure dayes are fulfilled, oure ende is here.

Oure persecuters are swifter then the Aegles of the ayre: they folowed vpon vs ouer the mountaynes, and layed wait for vs in y<sup>e</sup> wilderness.

The very breth of oure mouth:<sup>a</sup> euen the anoynted LORDE himself shalbe takē in oure synnes, of whom we saye: Vnder his shadowe we shalbe preserued amonge the Heithen.

And thou (O daughter Edom) that dwellest in the londe of Hus, be glad and reioyce: for the cuppe shal come vnto the also, which whē thou suppest of, thou shalt be dronckē.

Thy synne is wel punished (O thou daughter Sion) he shall not suffre the to be caried awaye eny more. But thy wickednesse (O daughter Edom) shall he vyset, and for thy synnes sake, he shal lede the in to captiuyte.

The v. Chapter.

CALL to remēbraunce (O LORDE) what we haue suffred, cōsidre and se oure cōfucion. Oure enheritaunce is turned to the straungers, ⁊ oure houses to the aleauntes. We are become carefull and fatherlesse, and oure mothers are as the wydowes. We are fayne to drynke oure owne water for moneye, and oure owne wod must we bye with moneye. Oure neckes are vnder persecucion, we are weery, and haue no rest.

Afore tyme we yelded oure selues to the Egipcians, and now to the Assirians, only that we might haue bred ynough. Oure fathers (which now are gone) haue synned, ⁊ we must beare their wickednesse. Seruauentes haue the rule of vs, and no man delyuereth vs out of their hōdes. We must get oure lyuynge with the parell of oure lyues, because of the drouth of the wildernesse.

Oure skynne is as it had bene brent in an ouen, for very sore longer. The wyues are rauished in Sion, ⁊ the maydens in the cities of Iuda. The prynces are hanged vp with the honde of the enemies, they haue not spared the olde sage men, they haue taken yonge mens lyues from them, and the boyes are hanged vp vpon trees. The elders syt no more vnder the gates, and the yonge men vse no more playenge of Musick. The ioye of oure herte is gone, oure mery quere is turned in to mourninge. The garlande of oure heade is fallen: alas, that euer we synned so sore.

Therefore oure hert is full of heuynesse, ⁊ oure eyes dymme: because of y<sup>e</sup> hill of Sion that is destroyed. In so moch, that the foxes runne vpon it. But thou (O LORDE) that remainest for euermore, and thy seate worlde with out ende: Wherefore wilt thou still forget vs, and forsake vs so longe? O LORDE: Turne thou vs vnto the, ⁊ so shal we be turned. Renue oure daies as in olde tyme, for thou hast now banished vs longe ynough, and bene sore displeased at vs.

The Prophet Baruch.

What Baruch conteyneth.

Chap. I.

Baruch readeth the boke before the kynge and all the people, which sende money to Ierusalem.

Chap. II.

They knowlege, that they haue deserued punyshment: God promyseth them forgeuenesse.

Chap. III.

They praye hartely beinge in preson, and he exorteth them to amende.

Chap. IIII.

A sermon to the people, with an exortacion to pacience.

Chap. V.

He conforteth them, and sheweth the vocacion of the Heithen.

Chap. VI.

A copie of the epistole, that Ieremy sent to the Iewes, which were led awaye presoners vnto Babilon.

THESE are the wordes of the boke, that Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia, the sonne of Sedechias, the sonne of Sedei, the sonne of Helchia, wrote at Babilon in the fifth yere the seuēth daye of the moneth: "what tyme as the Caldees wanne Ierusalem and brent it.

The first Chapter.

AND Baruch dyd rede the wordes of this boke, that Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim kynge of Iuda might heare: and in the presence of all the people, that were come to heare the boke: yee and before all the noble kinges sonnes, before ſ lordes of the counsell and elders: and before the whole people, from ſ lowest vnto the hiest: before all them that dwelt at Babilon, by ſ water of Sodi. Which when they herde it, wepte, fasted, and prayed before the LORDE.

B They made a colleccion also of money, accordinge to euery mans power, and sent it to Ierusalem vnto Ioachim the sonne of Helchia the sonne of Salon prest, with ſ other prestes: and to all the people which were with him at Ierusalē, what tyme as they had gotten the ornaments of the temple of ſ LORDE (that were taken awaye out of the temple) that they might brynge them agayne in to the londe of Iuda, the x. daye of the moneth Siban:

namely, syluer vessel, (which Sedechias the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda had made.) After that Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon had takē Iechonias, with all his prynces, lordes, and all the people, and led them captiue from Ierusalem vnto Babilon.

And they sayde: "Beholde, we haue sent you money, to bye you burntofferynge and incense withall: make you vneleuended bred, & offere for synne vpon the aulter of the LORDE oure God. "And praye for the prosperite of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and of Balthasar his sonne: ſ their dayes maye be vpon earth, as the dayes of heauen: that God also maye geue vs strength, and lighten oure eyes: that we maye lyue vnder the defence of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and vnder the proteccion of Balthasar his sonne: that we maye longe do them seruyce, and fynde fauoure in their sight. Praye for vs also vnto the LORDE oure God, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and vnto this daye is not his wrath turned yet awaye from vs. And se that ye rede this boke (which we haue sent vnto you to be reheared in the temple of the LORDE) vpon the hie dayes, and at tyme conuenient.

Thus shal ye saye: "The LORDE oure God is rightuous, but we are worthy of cōfucion & shame: like as it is come to passe this daye, vnto all Iuda, ⁊ to euery one ŷ dwelleth at Ierusalem: to oure kinges, prynces, prestes, prophetes ⁊ to oure fathers. We haue synned before the LORDE oure God, we haue not put oure trust in him, ner geuen him credence: we haue not obeyed him, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in the commaundementes that he gaue vs. Sens the daye that he brought oure forefathers out of the londe of Egipte vnto this present daye, we haue bene euer a mysbeleuyng and an vnfaithful people vnto ŷ LORDE oure God: destroyenge oure selues vnto, and shrenckinge backe, that we shulde not heare his voyce.

¶ Wherefore there are come vpon vs greate plagis ⁊ dyuerse curses, <sup>a</sup>like as the LORDE deuysed by Moses his seruaut: which brought oure forefathers out of the lode of Egipte, to geue vs a lode, that floweth with mylke and hony, like as it is to se this daye. Neuertheles, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, accordinge to all the wordes of the prophetes, whom he sent vnto vs and to oure rulers: but euery man folowed his owne mynde and wicked ymaginacion: to offre vnto straunge goddes, and to do euell in the sight of the LORDE oure God.

The ij. Chapter.

¶ FOR the which cause the LORDE oure God hath performed his deuycē, <sup>b</sup>wherof he certified vs, and oure heades that ruled in Ierusalē: yee and oure kynges, oure princes, with all Israel and Iuda. And soch plagis hath ŷ LORDE brought vpō vs, as neuer came to passe vnder the heauē: like as it is fulfilled in Hierusalem, accordinge as it is written in the lawe of Moses: <sup>c</sup>that a man shulde eate ŷ flesh of his owne sonne, ⁊ the flesh of his owne daughter. Morouer, he hath deliyuered them in to the hondes of all the kinges, ŷ are rounde aboute vs (to be confounded and desolate) ⁊ scatred thē abrode in all londes ⁊ naciōs. Thus are we brought beneth ⁊ not aboue, for we haue synned against the LORDE oure God, ⁊ not bene obedient vnto his voyce. <sup>d</sup>Therefore ŷ LORDE oure God is righteous, ⁊ we with oure fathers (as reason is) are brought to opē shame, as it is to se this daye. And as for these plagis ŷ are come vpon vs allready, ŷ LORDE had deuyced thē for vs: yet wolde we not praye vnto ŷ LORDE oure God, ŷ we might euery mā turne frō his vngodly wayes. So ŷ LORDE hath caused soch plagis to come vpon vs, for he is righteous in all his workes, which he hath comaunded vs: which we also haue not done, ner harkened vnto his voyce, for to walke in ŷ comaundementes of ŷ LORDE, ŷ he had geuē vnto vs.

And now o LORDE God of Israel, thou <sup>e</sup>that hast brought thy people out of the londe of Egipte with a mightie honde, with tokens and wōdres, with thy greate power ād outstretched arme: and hast gotten thy self a name, as it is come to passe this daye: O LORDE oure God, <sup>f</sup>we haue synned, we haue done wickedly, we haue behaued oure selues vngodly in all thy righteousnesses. Turne thy wrath frō vs (we beseke the) for we are but a few left amonge the Heithen, where thou hast scatred vs. Heare oure prayers (o LORDE) ⁊ oure peticiōs, <sup>g</sup>bringe vs out of captiuyte, for thine owne sake: get vs fauoure in the sight of thē, which haue led vs awaye: ŷ all lōdes maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE oure God, and that Israel and his generacion calleth vpon thy name.

<sup>h</sup>O LORDE, loke downe frō thy holy house vpon vs: enclyne thine eare, ⁊ heare vs. For the deed, ŷ be gone downe to their graues, ⁊ whose soules are out of their bodies, <sup>i</sup>ascribe vnto the LORDE nether prayse ner rightuousmakynge: but the soule that is vexed for the multitude of hir synnes, which goeth on heuely and weakly, whose eyes begynne to fayle: yee soch a soule ascribeth prayse and rightuousnesse vnto the LORDE. <sup>j</sup>O LORDE, we poure out oure prayers before the, and requyre mercy in thy sight, O LORDE oure God: not for eny godlynesse off oure forefathers, but because thou hast sent out thy wrath ⁊ indignacion vpon vs: accordinge as thou dydest threaten vs, by thy seruantes the prophetes, sayenge:

<sup>k</sup>Thus sayeth the LORDE: Bowe downe youre sholders and neckes, and serue the kynge of Babilon, so shal ye remayne still in the londe, that I gaue vnto youre fathers. Yff ye will not do this, ner heare the voyce of ŷ LORDE youre God, to serue the kynge of Babilon: I shall destroye you in the cities of Iuda, within Ierusalem and without. I will also take from you the voyce off myrth and the voyce of ioye, the voyce of the brydegrome and the voyce of the bryde, ad there shal no man dwell more in the londe. But they wolde not herken vnto thy voyce, to do the kyng of Babilon seruyce: and therefore hast thou performed the wordes, that thou spakest by thy seruantes the prophetes: namely, that the bones of oure kynges and the bones of oure fathers shulde be traslated out of their place.

And lo, now are they layde out in the heate of  $\hat{y}$  Sonne,  $\tau$  in the colde of  $\hat{y}$  night, ad deed in greate mysery: with hunger, with swearde, with pestilence  $\tau$  are clene cast forth. As for the tēple wherein thy name was called vpon thou hast layde it waist, as it is to se this daye:  $\tau$   $\hat{y}$  for the wickednes of the house of Israel  $\tau$  the house of Iuda. O LORDE oure God, thou hast intreated vs after all thy goodnes  $\tau$  according to all  $\hat{y}$  greate louinge mercy of thyne, like as thou spakest by thy seruante Moses, in the daye when thou didest cōmaūde him, to wryte thy lawe before the children of Israel, sayenge: Yf ye will not herke vnto my voyce,  $\tau$  the shal this greate multitude be turned in to a very smal people, for I wil scatre the abroad. Not withstōdinge I am sure, that this folke will not heare me: for it is an hardnecked people. Then shal they prayse me in the lōde of their captiuyte,  $\tau$  thynke vpon my name. Then shall they turne them frō their harde backes,  $\tau$  from their vngodlynes: Then shal they remembre the thynges,  $\hat{y}$  happened vnto their forefathers, which synned agaynst me. So will I bringe them agayne in to the londe, which I promised with an ooth vnto their fathers: Abrahā, Isaac  $\tau$  Iacob:  $\tau$  they shal be lordes of it, yee I wil increace the, and not minysh the. And I wil make another couenāt with them: soch one as shal endure for euer: namely,  $\hat{y}$  I will be thy God, and they shalbe my people: and I wil nomore dryue my people the children off Israel, out of the londe  $\hat{y}$  I haue geue the.

The iij. Chapter.

AND now o LORDE allmightie, thou a God of Israel: oure soule  $\hat{y}$  is in trouble,  $\tau$  oure sprete  $\hat{y}$  is vexed, crieth vnto the: heare vs (o LORDE)  $\tau$  haue pite vpon vs, for thou art a mercifull God: be gracious vnto vs, for we haue synned before  $\hat{y}$ . Thou endurest for euer, shulde we the vtterly perishe? O LORDE almightie, thou God of Israel: Heare now  $\hat{y}$  prayer of  $\hat{y}$  deed Israelites  $\tau$  of their childrē, which haue synned before  $\hat{y}$ ,  $\tau$  not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE thy God, for the which cause these plagues hange now vpō vs. O LORDE, remēbre not  $\hat{y}$  wickednes of oure forefathers, but thinke vpō thy power  $\tau$  name now at this tyme: for thou art  $\hat{y}$  LORDE oure God,  $\tau$   $\hat{y}$  (o LORDE) wil we prayse. For thou hast put thy feare ī oure hartes, to  $\hat{y}$  intēt  $\hat{y}$  we shulde call vpon thy name,  $\tau$  prayse  $\hat{y}$  in oure captiuyte: and  $\hat{y}$  we might turne from the wickednesse of oure forefathers,  $\hat{y}$  synned before the.

Beholde, we are yet this daye in oure captiuyte, where as thou hast scatred vs, to be an abhominacion, curse, and synne: like as it hath happened vnto oure fathers also, because of all their wickednesse and departyng from the.

O Israel, heare the commaundementes of life: pōnde them well with thine eares, that thou mayest lerne wysdome. But how happeneth it Israel, that thou art in thine enemies lōde? thou art waxen olde in a straūge countre, and defyled with the deed. Why art thou become like them, that go downe to their graues? <sup>a</sup> Euē because thou hast forsaken the well of wysdome. For yf thou haddest walked in the waye of God, truly thou shuldest haue remayned still safe ī thine owne londe.

<sup>b</sup> O lerne then where discrecion is, where vertu is, where vnderstōdinge is: that thou mayest knowe also frō whence cōmeth longe life, <sup>c</sup> a necessary lyuynge, the light of the eyes  $\tau$  quyetnes. Who euer fōude out hir place? or who came euer in to hir treasures?

Where are  $\hat{y}$  prynces of the Heithen become, and soch as ruled the beestes vpon the earth? They that had their pastyme with the foules of the ayre, they that hoorded vp syluer and golde (wherin men trust so moch) and made no ende of their gatheringe? What is worth of them, that coyned siluer, and were so carefull, and coude not bringe their workes to passe? They be rote out, and gone downe to hell, and other men are come vp in their steade: Younge men haue sene light, and dwelt vpon earth: but the waye of reformation haue they not knowne, ner vnderstonde the pathes therof: neither haue their children receaued it, yee right farre is it fro thē. It hath not bene herde of in the lōde of Canaan, nether hath it bene sene at Theman.

D The Agarenes sought after wisdomē, but that which is earthly, like as the marchauntes of the lōde do. They of Theman are conynge also, ⁊ they labour for wisdomē ⁊ vnderstandinge: but ⁊ waye of true wisdomē they knowe not, nether do they thinke vpon the pathes therof. O Israel, how greate is the house of God? and how large is the place of his possession? "Greate is he, and hath none ende: hye and vmeasurable. What is become of those famouse giauntes, that were so greate of bodyes, and so worthy men of warre? Those had not the LORDE chosen, nether haue they founde the waye of reformation, therefore were they destroyed: and for so much as they had no wisdomē, they perished because of their foolishnesse.

E Who hath gone vp in to heauen, to take wisdomē there, ⁊ brought her downe fro the cloudes? Who hath gone ouer the see to fynde her, ⁊ hath chosen her aboue golde, and so brought her hither? No man knoweth the wayes of wisdomē, nether is there eny ⁊ can seke out hir pathes. But he that woteth all thynges, knoweth her, ⁊ he hath founde her out with his fore knowlege. "This same is he which prepared the earth at the begynnyngē, ⁊ fylled it with all maner of foules ⁊ beestes. When he sendeth out the light, it goeth: ⁊ whē he calleth it agayne, it obeyeth hi with feare. The starres kepe their watch, ⁊ geue their light, yee and ⁊ gladly. When he calleth them, they saye: here we be. And so with chearfulness they shewe light vnto him ⁊ made thē. This is oure God, ād there shall none other be copared vnto him: It is he, ⁊ hath founde out all wisdomē, ⁊ hath geuen her vnto Iacob his seruauit, ⁊ to Israel his beloued. "Afterwarde dyd he shewe himself vpon earth, and dwelt amonge men.

The iiii. Chapter.

THIS is the boke off the commaundemētes of God, and the lawe ⁊ endureth for euer. All they ⁊ kepe it, shall come to life: but soch as forsake it, shall come to death. Turne the o Iacob, and take holde of it: waike by this waye, thorow his brightnesse and shyne. Geue not thyne honoure to another, and thy worshipec to a straunge people. "O Israel, how happie are we, seige that God hath shewed vs soch thynges as are pleasaunt vnto him? Be of good cheare, thou people of God, o thou awiciēt Israel. Now are ye solde amonge the Heithen, howbeit not for youre vtter destruccion: but because ye prouoked God the LORDE to wrath and displeasure, therefore were ye deliuered vnto youre enemies: For ye displeased the euerlastinge God that made you, offerynge vnto denels and not God. Ye haue forgottē him that brought you vp, ād youre nurse haue ye greued, o Ierusalem.

When she sawe that the wrath off God was commynge vpon you: she sayde: Herkē o ye that dwell aboute Sion, for God hath brought me in to greate heynnesse: ād why? I see the captiuite of my people, of my sonnes and daughters, which the euerlastyngē God will brynge vpon them. With ioye dyd I norish them, but now must I leaue them with wepyngē and sorow.

Let no man reioyce ouer me wyddowē ād forsaken: which for the synnes off my children, am desolate of euery man. For why, they departed from the lawe of God: they wolde not knowe his rightuousnes, ner walke in the waye off his cōmaundementes: and as for the pathes off the treuth and godlynesse, they had no lust to go in them.

C O ye dwellers aboute Sion: come, and let vs call to remembrance the captiuite, that the euerlastinge God hath brought vpon my sonnes and my daughters. He hath brought a people vpon them from farre, an incurteous people, and of a straunge lāguage: which nether regarde the olde, ner pyte the yonge.

These haue caried awaye the deare beloued of my wyddowes, leauyngē me alone, both desolate and childlesse. But alas, what can I helpe you? Now he ⁊ hath brought these plages vpon you, delyuer you also fro the bondes of youre enemies.

Go youre waye (O my children) go youre waye: for I am desolate and forsaken. I haue put of the clothinge of peace, and put vpon me the sackcloth off prayer, and for my tyme I will call vpon the most hiest. Be off good cheare, o my children: "crie vnto the LORDE, and he shal delyuer you from the power of the prynces, youre enemies.

For verely, I haue euer a good hope off youre prosperous health: yee a very gladnesse is come vpon me from the holy one, because of the mercy that ye shall haue offoure euerlastinge Sauoure.

D With mournynge and wepinge dyd I let you go fro me, but with ioye and perpetuall gladnesse, shall the LORDE brynge you agayne vnto me. Like as the neighbours of Sion sawe youre captiuite from God, Euē so shal they also se shortly youre health in God, which shal come on you with greate honoure and euerlastinge worshipec.

E O my children, suffre paciētly the wrath that shal come vpon you, For the enemy hath persecuted the, but shortly thou shalt se his destruccion, and shalt treade vpon his necke. My derlinges haue gone rough harde wayes, for they are led awaye as a flocke that is scatred abrode with the enemies. But be of good cōforte (o my children) ¶ crie vnto the LORDE: For he that led you awaye, hath you yet in remembraunce: and like as ye haue bene mynded to swarue from youre God, so shal ye now endeouore youre selues x. tymes more, to turne agayne, and to seke him. For he that hath brought these plagis vpō you, shal brynge you euerlastinge ioye agayne with youre health. Take a good herte vnto the, o Ierusalē: for he which gaue ¶ that name, exorteth the so to do.

"The wicked doers that now put the to trouble, shall perish: and such as haue reioysed at thy fall, shalbe punyshed. The cities whom thy children serue, and that haue caried awaye thy sonnes, shal be correcte. For like as they be now glad of thy decaye, so shal they mourne in their owne destruccion. The ioye off their multitude shalbe taken awaye and their cheare shalbe turned to sorowe. For a fyre shal fall vpon them from the euerlastinge God, longe to endure: and it shalbe inhabited of deuels for a greate season.

The v. Chapter.

O IERUSALEM, loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde the ioye, that commeth vnto the from God. For lo, thy sonnes, (whom thou hast forsakē, and that were scatred abrode) come gathered together from the east and west, reioysinge in the worde of the holy one, vnto the honoure off God.

Put of thy mournynge clothes (o Ierusalem) and thy sorow, and decke the with the worshipec and honoure, that commeth vnto the from God, with euerlastinge glory. God shal put the cloake off rightuousnesse vpon the, and set a crowne off euerlastinge worshipec vpon thine heade: for vpon the wil God declare his brightnes, that is vnder the heauen: Yee an euerlastinge name shalbe geuen the of God, with peace of rightuousnesse, ¶ ¶ honoure of Gods feare.

B Arise o Ierusalem, stōde vp on hye: loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde thy children gathered from the east vnto the west: which reioyce in the holy worde, hauynge God in remembrance. They departed from the on fote, and were led awaye of their enemies: but now shal the LORDE bringe them caried with honoure, as children off ¶ kyngdome. For God is purposed to brynge downe all stoute moūtaynes, yee and all hye rockes, to fylle the valleys, ¶ so to make them eauen with the grounde: ¶ Israel maye be diligēt to lyue vnto ¶ honoure of God. The woddes ¶ all pleasaunt trees shal ouersadowe Israel, at the cōmaundement of God. For hyther shal God brynge Israel with ioyfull myrth, and in the light of his magesty: with the mercy and rightuousnesse, that cōmeth of himself.

A copie off the epistle, that Ieremy the prophet did sende vnto the Iewes, which were led awaye presoners by the kynge of Babilō. Wherin he certifieth them of the thinge, that was cōmaunded him of God

The vi. Chapter.

BECAUSE of the synnes that ye haue done agaynst God, ¶ ye shal be led awaye captiue vnto Babilon, euen off Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon. So when ye be come in to Babilon, ye shall remayne there many yeares, and for a longe season: namely, vij. generacions: ¶ after that wil I bringe you awaye peaceably from thence. Now shal ye se in Babilō, goddesses of golde, of syluer, of wodd and of stone: borne vpon mens sholders, to cast out a fearfulness before the Heithen. But loke that ye do not as the other: be not ye afayed, and let not the feare of them ouercome you.

¶ Therefore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde & before, saye ye in youre hertes: O LORDE, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped? Myne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the tymbre of those goddesses, y<sup>e</sup> carpēter hath polished them: yee gylted be they, & layed ouer with syluer, yet are they but wayne thinges, & can not speake. Like as a wench y<sup>e</sup> loueth peramours is trynly deckte, euen so are these made & hanged with golde. Crownes of golde verely haue their goddesses vpon their heades: so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, & put it to their owne vses: yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, & trymme their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and decke their goddesses therewith. Yet can not these goddesses deliuer them selues from rust and mothes. <sup>b</sup>Whē they haue couered them with clothyng of purple, they wype their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof their is moch amōge thē. One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he were iudge of the countre: yet can he not slaye soch as offende him. Another hath a swearde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murtherers.

¶ By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddesses: therefore se y<sup>e</sup> ye nether worships them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel y<sup>e</sup> a man vseth, is nothinge worth when it is broken, euen so is it with their goddesses. When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, thorow the fete of those that come in. And like as y<sup>e</sup> dores are shut in roude aboute vpō him, y<sup>e</sup> hath offended the kinge: Or as it were a deed body kepte besyde the graue: Euen so the prestes kepe the dores with barres and lockes, lest their goddesses be spoyled with robbers. They set vp cādels before thē (yee verely and y<sup>e</sup> many) wherof they can not se one, but euen as blockes, so stonde they in the temple. It is sayde, y<sup>e</sup> the serpentes and wormes, which come off the earth, gnawe out their hertes, eatinge them & their clothes also, and yet they fele it not. Their faces are blacke, thorow the smoke y<sup>e</sup> is in the temple. The oules, swalows & byrdes fle vpon them, yee and the cattles runne ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddesses, therfore feare them not. The golde that they haue, is to make them beutifull: for all that, excepte some body dight off their rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast in to a founne, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no breth off life within them. They must be borne vpon mens sholders, as those that haue no fete: wherby they declare vnto men, that they be nothinge worth. Confounded be they then, that worships them. For yf they fall to the ground, they can not ryse vp agayne of thē selues: Yee though one helpe them vp and set them right, yet are they not able to stonde alone: but must haue proppes set vnder them, like deed men. As for the thinge that is offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, & abuse it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, but vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe & the mēstruous laye hondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddesses, therfore be not ye afayde of them. From whence cometh it thē, that they be called goddesses? The women syt before the goddesses of syluer, golde and wodge, and the prestes syt in their temples, hauynge open clothes, whose heades and beerdes are shauen, and haue nothīge vpon their heades: roaringe and cryenge vpon their goddesses, as men do at the feast, when one is deed.

The prestes also take awaye the garments of the ymages, and decke their wyues & children withall. Whether it be good or euell y<sup>e</sup> eny man do vnto them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kynge, ner put him downe. In like maner they maye nether geue riches, ner rewarde euell. Though a man make a vowe vnto them & kepe it not, they wil not require it. They can not restore a blynde mā to his sight, ner helpe eny mā at his nede. They cā shewe no mercy to the wyddowe, ner do good to y<sup>e</sup> fatherles. Their goddesses of wodd, stone, golde & syluer, are but euen as other stones, y<sup>e</sup> be hewē of y<sup>e</sup> mountayne. They y<sup>e</sup> worships thē, shal be cōfounded. How shulde they then be taken for goddes? yee how darre men call thē goddes? And though the caldees worshipped thē not, hearinge y they were but domme ⁊ coud not speake: Yet they them selues offre vnto Bel, and wolde fayne haue him to speake: as who saye, they coude fele, y maye not mone. But when these mē come to vnderstōdinge, they shall forsake them, for their goddes haue no felinge. A greате sorte off women gyrded with coardes, syt in the stretes, ⁊ burne olyue beries. Now yf one off them be conueyed awaye, ⁊ lye with eny soch as come by: she casteth hir neghburesse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner hir coorde broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne ād lost: How maye it thē be thought or sayde, y they are goddes? Carpenters ⁊ goldsmythes make thē, nether be they eny other thinge, but euen what the worke men wil make of them. Yee the goldsmithes them selues that make thē, are of no longe cōtynuaunce: How shulde then the thīges that are made of them, be goddes? Vayne therefore are the thinges (yee very shame is it) that they leaue behinde thē for their posterite. For as soone as there cōmeth eny warre or plage vpon thē, then the prestes ynagyn, where they maye hyde thē selues with thē. How can men thynke then, that they be goddes, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner delyuer thē fro mysfortune? For seynge they be but of wodde, of stone, of syluer and of golde: all people ⁊ kynges shal knowe hereafter, that they be but vayne thinges: yee it shalbe openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mēs hōdes, ⁊ that God hath nothings to do with thē. They can set no kyng in the londe ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the londe frō wronge: For they are not able to do so moch as a crowe, that flyeth betwixte heuen and earth.

Whē there happeneth a fyre in to the house of those goddes of wodde, of syluer and of golde, the prestes wil escape ⁊ saue thē selues, but the goddes burne as the balkes therin. They can not withstōde eny kyng or batell: how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be goddes? Morouer, these goddes of wodde, of stone, of golde ⁊ syluer maye nether defende thē selues from theues ner robbers: yee y very wicked are stronger thē they. These strype them out off their apparell, that they be clothed withall, these take their golde ⁊ syluer frō thē, and so get thē awaye: yet cā they not helpe thē selues. Therefore it is moch better for a man, to be a kinge ⁊ so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wherin he y oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a dore in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therin: thē to be soch a vayne god. The Sōne, the Mone ⁊ all the starres when they geue their shyne ⁊ light, are obedient, ⁊ do men good: When the lightenyng glistereth, all is cleare: The wynde bloweth in euery countre, ⁊ whē God cōmaundeth the cloudes to go rounde aboute the whole worlde, they do as they are bydden: when the fyre is sent downe frō aboue ⁊ cōmaunded, it burneth vp hilles ād woddes: But as for those goddes, they are not like one off these thynges, nether in beuty ner strēgth. Wherefore mē shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seynge they cā nether geue sentence in iudgment, ner do men good. For so moch now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake enell ner good of kynges. They cā shewe no tokens in heauē for y Heithen, nether shyne as the Sōne, ner geue light as the Mone: yee y vnreasonable beastes are better then they: for they can get thē vnder the rofe, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therefore feare thē not. For like as a frayboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepeth nothings, euen so are their goddes of wod, of syluer ⁊ golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery byrdle sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is east in the darcke, Euen so is it with those goddes of wodde, syluer and golde. By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon thē, ād soone faydeth awaye, ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be cōsumed at the last, which shal be a greате cōfūcion of the londe. Blessed is the godly man, y hath no ymages ⁊ worshipeth none, for he shalbe farre from reprofe.

The first Chapter.

IT chaused, in the xxx. yeare the fifth daye off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the presoners by the ryuer off Cobar: where the heauens opened, and I sawe a vision of God. Now the fifth daye off the Moneth made out the fyfth yeare off kynge Ioachims captiuyte. At the same tyme came y<sup>e</sup> worde off the LORDE vnto Ezechiel the sonne off Buzi prest, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came vpon him. "And I looked: and beholde, a stormy wynde came out off the north with a greate cloude full of fyre, which with his glistre lightened all rounde aboute.

And in y<sup>e</sup> myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the licknesse of foure beastes, which were fashioned like a man: sauyng, that euery one had foure faces and foure wynges.

B Their legges were straight, but their fete were like bullockes fete, and they glistred, as it had bene fayre scoured metall. Vnder their wynges vpon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and their wynges were towarde the foure corners: yet were the wynges so, that one euer touched another. <sup>a</sup>When they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente straight forwarde.

Vpon the right side off these foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the face off a Lyon: But vpon the left side, they had the face off an ox and the face off an Aegle.

Their faces also and their wynges were spred out aboute: so that two wynges off one touched euer two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Euery one when it wente, it wente straight forwarde.

Where as the sprete led them, thither they wente, and turned not aboute in their goynge.

The fashion and countenaunce of the beestes was like hote coales off fyre, euen as though burnynge cresshettes had bene amonge the beestes: and the fyre gaue a glistre, and out off the fyre there wente lighteninge. Whē ſ beestes wēte forwarde ⁊ backwarde, one wolde haue thought it had lightened. Now whē I had well considered the beestes, I sawe a worke off wheles vpon the earth with foure faces also like the beestes.

¶ The fashion ⁊ worke of the wheles was like the see. The foure wheles were ioyned and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forwarde, they wente all foure, and turned thē not aboute i their goinge. They were large, greate and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodies were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whē the beestes wēte, the wheles wente also with them: And when the beestes lift them selues vp from ſ earth, the wheles were lift vp also. Whyther so euer the sprete wente, thither wente they also, ⁊ ſ wheles were lift vp ⁊ folowed thē, for ſ sprete of life was in the wheles. When ſ beestes wēte forth, stode still, or lift them selues vp from the earth: then the wheles also wente, stode still, ⁊ were lift vp, for ſ breth off life was in the wheles.

¶ Aboue ouer ſ heades of the beestes there was a firmament, which was fashioned as it had bene off the most pure Christall, ⁊ that was spred out aboue vpon their heades: vnder the same firmament were their wynges layed abrode, one towarde another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beest. And when they wente forth, I herde the noyse off their wynges, like the noyse of greate waters, as it had bene the voyce off the greate God, and a russhinge together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they stode still, they let downe their wynges. Now when they stode still, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboue their heades.

Aboue the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the fashion off a seate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Apon the seate there sat one like a mā. I behelde him, and he was like a cleare light, as it had bene all off fyre with in from his loynes vpwarde.

And beneth when I loked vpon him vnder ſ loynes, me thought he was like a shyninge fyre, that geueth light on euery syde. Yee the shyne and glistre ſ lightened rounde aboute, was like a raynbowe, which in a raynie daye apareth in the cloudes. Euē so was the similitude, wherin the glory off the LORDE apared. Whē I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and herkened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

The ij. Chapter.

¶ THEN sayde he vnto me: Stonde vp ⁊ vpon thy fete (O thou sonne of mā) and I will talke with the. And as he was commonyng with me, the sprete came in to me, and set me vp vpon my fete: so that I mareked the thinge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Beholde, thou sonne off man: I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those runnagates and obstinate people: for they haue takē parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye fro me: both they, ⁊ their forefathers, vnto this daye.

Yee I will sende ſ vnto a people ſ haue rough vysages and stiff stomackes: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himself hath spoken, ſ whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde housholde) they maye knowe yet that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

Therefore (thou sonne off man) feare thē not, nether be afrayed off their wordes: for they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise ſ. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a frauwerde housholde.

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obediēt or not, for they are obstinate. Therefore (thou sonne of man) obeye thou all thinges, that I saye vnto ſ, and be not thou stiffnecked, like as they are a stiffnecked housholde. Open thy mouth, and eate that I geue the.

So as I was lokinge vp, beholde, there was sent vnto me an hande, wherin was a closed boke: and the hande opened it before me, and it was written within and without, full off carefull mourninges: alas, and wo.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ THEN sayde he vnto me: thou sonne of mā, eate that, what so euer it be: Yee eate that closed boke, and go thy waye, and speake vnto the children off Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he gaue me the boke for to eate, and sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thy bely shal eate, and thy bowels shalbe fylled with  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  boke, that I geue the.

<sup>a</sup>Then dyd I eate the boke, and it was in my mouth sweter then hony.

And he sayde vnto me: thou sonne of mā, get the soone vnto the house off Israel,  $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ d <sup>b</sup>shewe the  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  wordes, that I cōmaunde the: for I sende the not to a people that hath a straūge, vnkowne or harde speache, but vnto the house off Israel: Not to many nacions, which haue diuerse speeches and harde languages, whose wordes thou vnderstōdest not: Neuertheles, <sup>c</sup>yf I sent the to those people, they wolde folowe the: But the house off Israel wil not folowe  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ , for they wil not folowe me: <sup>d</sup>Yee all the house off Israel haue stiff foreheades and harde hertes. Beholde therefore, I will make thy face preuayle agaynst their faces, and harden thy foreheade agaynst their foreheades: so that thy foreheade shall be harder then an Adamāt or flynt stone: <sup>e</sup>that thou mayest feare them  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  lesse, and be lesse afrayed off them, for they are a frauwerde housholde.

33 He sayde morouer vnto me: thou sonne off man, take diligent hede with thine eares, to  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  wordes that I speake vnto the, fasten them in thine herte: and go to the presoners off thy people, speake vnto them,  $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ d saye on this maner:

Thus the LORDE God hath spokē: Whether ye heare, or heare not. With that, the sprete toke me vp. And I herde the noyse of a greate russhinge and remouynge off the most blissed glory off the LORDE out off his place.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that rushed one agaynst another, yee and the ratlynge off the wheles, that were by them, which russhinge  $\text{\textcircled{a}}$  noyse was very greate.

<sup>f</sup>Now when the sprete toke me vp, and caried me awaye, I wente with an heuy and a soroufull mynde, but the honde off  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE comforted me right soone.

And so in the begynnynge off the Moneth Abib, I came to the presoners, that dwelt by the water off Cobar, <sup>g</sup>and remayned in that place, where they were: and so continued I amonge them seuen dayes, beinge very sory.

¶ And when the seuen dayes were expyred, the LORDE sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, <sup>h</sup>I haue made the a watch man vnto the house of Israel: therfore take good hede to the wordes, and geue them warnynge at my commaundement.

Yff I saye vnto the, concernynge the vngodly mā, that (without doute) he must dye, and thou geuest him not warnynge, ner speakest vnto him, that he maye turue from his euell waye, and so to lyue: Then shall the same vngodly man dye in his owne vnrightuousnes: but his bloude will I requyre off thyne honde. Neuertheles, yff thou geue warnynge vnto the wicked, and he yet forsake not his vngodlynesse: then shall he dye in his owne wickednesse, but thou hast discharged thy soule.

Now yf a righteous mā go frō his righteousnesse, and do the thinge that is euell: I will laye a stomblinge blocke before him, and he shall dye, because thou hast not geuen him warnynge: Yee dye shall he in his owne synne, so that the vertue, which he did before, shall not be thought vpon: but his bloude will I requyre of thine honde.

Neuertheles, yf thou exhorte the righteous, that he synne not, and so  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  righteous do not synne: Then shall he lyue, because he hath receaued thy warnynge, and thou hast discharged thy soule. And there came the hōde off the LORDE vpon me, and he sayde vnto me: Stonde vp, and go in to the felde,  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  I maye there talke with the.

So when I had rysen vp, and gone forth in to the felde: <sup>i</sup>Beholde, the glory off the LORDE stode there, like as I sawe it afore, by the water off Cobar.

<sup>j</sup>Then fell I downe vpon my face, and  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  sprete came in to me, which set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde thus vnto me: Go thy waye, and sparre thy self in thyne house. Beholde (O thou sonne off man) there shall chaynes be brought for the, to bynde the withall, so that thou shalt not escape out off the. And I will make thy tuiuge cleue to the rofe off thy mouth, that thou shalt be domme, and not be as a chider with them: for it is an obstinate housholde.

But when I speake vnto the, then open thy mouth, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: who so heareth, let him heare: who so will not, let him leaue: for it is a frauwarde housholde.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THOU sonne off man: take a tyle stone, and laye it before the, and descrybe vpon it the cite off Ierusalem: how it is beseged, how bulworkes and ströge diches are grauen on euery syde off it: descrybe also tentes, and an hoost off men rounde aboute it.

Morouer, take an yron panne, and set it betwixte the & y cite in steade off an yron wall. Then set thy face towarde it, besege it, and laye ordinaunce agaynst it, to wyinne it. This shal be a token vnto the house off Israel. But thou shalt slepe vpon thy left syde, and laye the synne of the house off Israel vpon the.

Certaine dayes apoynted, thou shalt slepe vpon that syde, and beare their synnes.<sup>a</sup> Neuertheles I will apoynte the a tyme (to put off their synnes) and the nombre off the daies: Thre hundreth & xc. dayes must thou beare the wickednesse off the house of Israel. When thou hast fulfilled these dayes, lye downe agayne, and slepe vpon thy right syde xl. dayes, and beare the synnes off the house of Iuda.

B A daye for a yere,<sup>a</sup> a daye (I saye) for a yere, will I euer laye vpon the. Therefore set now thy face agaynst that beseged Ierusalem, and discouer thine arme, that thou mayest prophecie agaynst it.

Beholde, I will laye chaynes vpon the, that thou shalt not turne the from one syde to another, till thou hast ended the dayes of thy sege.

Wherefore, take vnto the wheate, barly beanes, growell sede, milium and fitches: and put these together in a vessell, and make the loaves of bred therof, accordinge to the nombre of the dayes that thou must lye vpon y syde: that thou mayest haue bred to eate, for thre hundreth and XC. dayes.

And the meate that thou eatest, shall haue a certayne waight apoynted: Namely, twentie sycles every daye. This apoynted meate shalt thou eate daylie, from the begynnyng to the ende.

C Thou shalt drynke also a certayne measure off water: Namely, the sixte parte of an Hin shalt thou drynke daylie from the begynnyng to the ende. Barly cakes shalt thou eate, yet shalt thou first strake the ouer with mas donge, y they maye se it. And with that, sayde the LORDE: 'Euen thus shal the children of Israel eate their defyled bred in the myddest off the Gentiles, amonge whom I will scatre them.

Then sayde I: Oh LORDE God, Beholde, my soule was yet neuer stayned: for fro my youth vp vnto this houre, I dyd neuer eate of a deed carcase, or of that which was slayne of wilde beestes, nether came there euer eny vnclene flesh in my mouth.

Where vnto he answered me, and sayde: Well than, I will graunte the to take cowes donge, for the donge off a man, and to strake the bred ouer with all, before the.

And he sayde vnto me: 'Beholde thou sonne off man, I will mynische all the prouision of bred in Ierusalem, so that they shall weye their bred, and eate it with scarcenesse. But as for water, they shall haue a very litle measure theroff, to drynke. And when they haue nomore bred uer water, one shal be destroyed with another, and famish awaye for their wickednesse.

The v. Chapter.

TAKE the then a sharpe knyfe (O thou sonne of man) namely, a rasoure. Take that, and shaue the hayre off thy heade and beard: Then take the scoales and the waight, and deuyde the hayre a sunder. And burne the thirde parte therof in the fyre in the myddest off the cite, and cut the other thirde parte in peces with a knyfe.<sup>a</sup> As for the thirde parte that remayneth, cast it in the wynde, and then shewe the bare knyfe.

Yet afterwarde take a litle off the same, & bynde it in thy cote lappe. Then take a curtesy of it, and cast it in the myddest of y fyre, and burne it in the fyre. Out of the same fyre shall there go a flame, vpon the whole house of Israel.

B Morouer, thus sayde the LORDE God: This same is Ierusalem. I set her in the middest of the Heithen and nacions, that are rounde aboute her, but she hath despised my iudgmētes more then y Gentiles the selues, and broken my cōmaundementes more then the nacions, that lye rounde aboute her: For they haue cast out myne ordinaunces, and not walked in my lawes. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so much as ye with youre wickednesse farre exceede the Heithē, that dwell rounde aboute you: (For ye haue not walked in my lawes, nether haue ye kepte myne ordinaūces) Therfore thus saith ȝ LORDE God :

I will also come vpon the, for in the myddest of the will I syt in iudgmēt, in the sight of the Heithen, and will handle the of soch a fashion, as I neuer dyd before, and as I neuer wil do from that tyme forth, and that because of all thy abhominacions. <sup>a</sup> For in the the fathers shal be fayne to eate their owne sonnes, and the sonnes their owne fathers. Soch a courte will I kepe in the, and the whole remnaunt will I scatre in to all the wyndes.

C Wherefore, as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) seynge thou hast defyled my Sanctuary, with all maner off abhominacions and with all thy shamefulfull offences: For this cause wil I also destroye the. Myne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the.

<sup>b</sup> One thirde parte within the, shall die of the pestilence and of hunger: Another thirde parte shall be slayne downe rounde aboute the, with the swearde: The other thirde parte that remaineth, wil I scatre abrode towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out the swearde after them. Thus wil I perfourme my indignacion and set my wrath agaynst them, and ease my self. So that when I haue fulfilled myne anger agaynst them, they shall knowe, that I am the LORDE, which with a seruent gelousy haue spoken it.

D Morouer I will make the waist and abhorred, before all the Heithen that dwell aboute the, and in the sight off all them, that go by the: so that when I punysh the in my wrath, in myne anger, and with the plage off my whote displeasure: thou shalt be a very abhominacion, shame, a gasinge and wondrous stocke, amonge the Heithen that lye aboute the.

Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, and it shal come to passe, when I shute amonge them the perious dartes of hōger, which shalbe but death: <sup>c</sup> Yee therfore shall I shute them, because I wil destroye you. I will encrease hunger, and mynish all the prouysion off bred amonge you.

Plages and mysery will I sende you, yee and wilde beestes also to destroye you. Pestilence and bloudsheddinge shall come vpon you, and the swearde wil I bringe ouer you. Euen I the LORDE, haue sayde it.

The bi. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, <sup>d</sup> turne thy face to the mountaynes of Israel, that thou mayest prophecie vnto them, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes off Israel: Thus hath the LORDE God spoken to the mōutaynes, hilles, valleys and dales:

Beholde, I will brynge a swearde ouer you, and destroye youre hie places: I wil cast downe youre altuers, and breake downe youre temples. Your slayne men wil I laye before youre goddes, and the deed carcases off the children off Israel wil I cast before their ymages, youre bones wil I strowe rounde aboute youre altuers, and dwelling places.

The cities shalbe desolate, <sup>e</sup> ȝ hillchapels layed waist: youre altuers destroyed, <sup>f</sup> ȝ broken: youre goddes cast downe, and taken awaye, youre tēpels layde eauē with the groūde, youre owne workes clene roted out. Your slayne men shall lie amonge you, that ye maye lerne to knowe, how <sup>g</sup> ȝ I am the LORDE. Those <sup>h</sup> ȝ amōge you haue escaped the swearde, wil I leaue amonge the Gentiles, for I wil scatre you amonge the nacions. <sup>i</sup> And they that escape from you, shall thinke vpon me amonge the heithen, where they shalbe in captiuyte.

As for that whorish and vnfaithfull herte of theirs, wherwith they runne awaye fro me, I will breake it: yee <sup>j</sup> ȝ put out those eyes off theirs, that committe fornicacion with their Idols.

Then shall they be ashamed, and displeased with their selues, for the wickednesses ād abhominacions, which they haue done: and shal lerne to knowe, how that it is not in vayne, that I the LORDE spake, to bringe soch mysery vpon them.

The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: <sup>k</sup> Smyte thine bondes together, and stampe with thy fete, and saye: Wo worth all the abhominacions and wickednesses of the house of Israel, for because of thē, they shal perish with the swearde, with hōger and with pestilence. Who so is farre off, shall dye off the pestilence: he that is nye at hande, shall perish with the swearde: and <sup>l</sup> ȝ other that are beseged, shall dye of hunger.

Thus wil I satisfie my wrothfull displeasure vpōn them. And so shall ye lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē your slayne men lye amonge your goddes, and aboute your aulters: vpon all hie hilles and toppes off mountaynes, amonge all grene trees, amonge all thicke okes: euen in the places, where they dyd sacrifice to all their Idols. I will stretch myne honde out vpon them, & will make the londe waiste: So that it shall lye desolate and voyde, from the wilderness off Deblat forth, thorow all their habitacions: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The vij. Chapter.

A THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: The I call, O thou sonne off man. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the londe off Israel: The ende cometh, yee verely the ende cometh vpon all the foure corners off the earth.

But now shall the ende come vpon the: for I will sende my wrath vpon the, and wil punysh the: accordinge to thy wayes, and rewarde the after all thy abhominaciōs. <sup>a</sup> Myne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the: but rewarde the, accordinge to thy wayes, and declare thy abhominacions. Then shall ye knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, one mysery and plage shall come after another: the ende is here. The ende (I saye) that waiteth for the, is come already, & houre is come agaynst the, that dwellest in the londe.

B The tyme is at honde, the daye of sediciō is hard by, & no glad tidings vpon the mountaynes. Therefore, I will shortly poure out my sore displeasure ouer the, and fulfill my wrath vpon the. I will iudge the after thy wayes, and recompence the all thy abhominacions.

<sup>b</sup> Myne eye shal not ouersee the, nether wil I spare the: but rewarde the after thy wayes, and shewe thy abhominacions: to lerne you for to knowe, how & I am the LORDE, & smytheth. Beholde, the daye is here, the daye is come, the houre is runne out, the rodde florisheth, wyfulnesse waxeth grene, malicious violēce is growne vp, and the vn-godly waxen to a staff. Yet shall there no complaynt be made for them, ner for the trouble that shall come of these thinges.

The tyme cometh, the daye draweth nye:

<sup>e</sup> Who so byeth, let him not reioyce: he that selleth, let him not be sorry: for why, <sup>f</sup> Trouble shall come in the myddest off all rest: so that the seller shall not come agayne to the byer, for nether off them both shall lyue. For the vision shal come so greatly ouer all, & it shal not be hyndered: No mā also with his wickednesse shall be able to saue his owne life.

The trompettes shall ye blowe, and make you all ready, but no man shall go to the batell, for I am wroth with all the whole multitude.

The swearde shalbe without, pestilence and hunger within: so that who so is in the felde, shalbe slayne with the swearde: <sup>g</sup> and he that is in the cite, shall perish with hunger and pestilence.

And soch as escape and fle from amonge them, shal be vpon the hilles, like as the doues in the felde: euery one shalbe afayed, because off his owne wickednesse.

They shall not satisfie their hongrie soules, <sup>j</sup> nether fyll their emptie belies therwith: For it is become their owne decaye thorow their wickednesse: because they made therof, not only costly Ieweles for their pompe and pryde, <sup>k</sup> but also abhominable ymages and Idols. For this cause will I make them to be abhorred. Morouer, I will geue it in to & hondes off the straungers to be spoyled: and to & wicked, for to be robbed, and they shall destroye it.

My face wil I turne from the, my Treasury shall be defyled: for the theues shall go in to it, and suspende it. I wil make clene rydaunse, for the londe is whole defyled with vnrighteous iudgment of innocent bloude, & the cite is full off abhominacions.

Wherefore, I will bringe the most cruell <sup>l</sup> tyrauntes from amonge the Heithen, to take their houses in possession. I will make the pompe off the proude to cease, and they shal take in their Sanctuary. When this trouble cometh, they shal seke peace, but they shal haue none. One myschefe and sorowe shal folowe another, and one rumoure shal come after another: Then shall they seke visions in wayne at their prophetes. <sup>a</sup> The lawe shal be gone from the prestes, and wysdome from the elders. The kyngs shall mourne, the princes shalbe clothed with heynesse, and <sup>h</sup> hōdes off the people in the londe shall tremble for feare. I will do vnto them after their owne waies, <sup>1</sup> acordinge to their owne iudgements will I iudge them: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The viij. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the sixte yeaere, the fifth daye of the sixte Moneth I sat in my house, and the lordes off the councell off Iuda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there vpo me.

And as I loked vp, I sawe as it were a licknesse off fyre from his loynes downwarde, <sup>b</sup> and from his loynes vpwarde it shyned maruelous cleare.

This symilitude stretched out an honde, and toke me by the hayrie lockes off my heade, and the sprete lift me vp betwixte heauen and earth: and God brought me in a vision to Ierusalem, in to the court off the inwarde porte that lieth towarde the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all thinges in his power, was very wroth.

And beholde, the glory off the God off Israel was in the same place: <sup>c</sup> euē as I had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, O lift vp thine eyes, and loke towarde the north. Then lift I vp myne eyes towarde the north, and beholde: Besyde the porte northwarde, there was an aluter made vnto the ymage off prouocation in the very entrynge in.

And he sayde furthermore vnto me: Thou sonne off man, Seist thou what these do? Seist thou the greates abhominacions that the house off Israel commytte in this place? which ought not to be done in my sanctuary?

But turne the aboute, and thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And with that brought he me to the court gate: and whē I loked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, dygge thorow the wall. And when I dygged thorow the wall, beholde, there was a dore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy waye in, <sup>1</sup> loke what wicked abhominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off wormes <sup>1</sup> beastes, all Idols and abhominacions of <sup>h</sup> house off Israel paynted euerychone rounde aboute the wall.

<sup>a</sup> There stode also before the ymages lxx. lordes off the councell off the house off Israel: and in the myddest off them stode Iaasania the sonne off Saphan: And euery one off them had a censure in his honde, <sup>1</sup> out off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a cloude.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, <sup>a</sup> hast thou sene what the Senatours off the house off Israel do secretly, euery one in his chambre? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the worlde. And he sayde vnto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt se the greates abhominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the dore off the porte off the LORDES house, towarde the north. And beholde, there sat women mournyng for Thamus. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of mā? Turne <sup>h</sup> aboute, <sup>1</sup> thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And so he brought me in to the inwarde court off the LORDES house: <sup>1</sup> beholde, at the porte off the LORDES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the aluter, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their backs vpon the Temple of the LORDE, <sup>1</sup> their faces towarde the east, and these worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of man? Thinketh the house off Israel, that it is but a trifle, to do these abhominacions here? Shulde they fyll the londe full of wickednesse, and vndertake to prouoke me vnto anger? Yee <sup>1</sup> purposely to cast vp their noses vpon me? Therefore wil I also do some thinge in my wrothfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not ouerseem them, nether wil I spare them. <sup>1</sup> Yee and though they crye in myne eares with loude voyce, yet wil I not heare them.

The ii. Chapter.

A HE cried also with a loude voyce in myne eares, sayenge: Come here ye rulers of the cite, every man with his weapened honde to the slaughter. Then came there sixe men out of the strete of the vpper porte towarde the north, and every man a weapen in his honde to the slaughter. There was one amongst them, that had on him a lynnyng rayment, and a wryters ynckhorne by his syde.

These wente in, and stode beside the brasen altar: for the glory of the LORDE was gone awaye from the Cherub, and was come downe to the thresholde of the house, & he called the mā, that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him, and the writers ynckhorne by his syde, and the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye thorow the cite of Ierusalem, and set this marek ¶ Thau vpō the foreheades of them, that mourne, and are sory for all the abhominacions, that be done therein. And to the other, he sayde that I might heare: Go ye after him thorow the cite, slaye, ouersee none, spare none: <sup>a</sup> Kyll, & destroye both olde men and yonge, maydens, children, and wyues.

¶ But as for those, that haue this marek ¶ Thau vpō them: se that ye touch them not, and begynne at my Sanctuary. Then they begane at the elders, which were in the Temple, for he had sayde vnto them: When ye haue defyled the Temple, and fylled the courte with the slayne, then go youre waye forth. So they wēte out and slewe downe thorow ¶ cite. Now when they had done ¶ slaughter, & I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, & cried, sayenge: O LORDE, wilt thou then destroye all the resydue of Israel, in thy sore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpō Ierusalem?

Then sayde he vnto me: The wickednesse of the house of Israel and Iuda is very greate: so that the lōde is full of bloude, and ¶ cite full of vnfaithfulness: <sup>a</sup> For they saye: Tush, ¶ LORDE regardeth not the earth, he seyth vs not. Therefore will I vpon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether will I spare them, but will recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades.

And beholde, the mā that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him, and thewriters ynckhorne by his syde: tolde all the matter how it happened, and sayde: LORDE, as thou hast commaunded me, so haue I done.

The 1. Chapter.

A ND as I loked, beholde, In the firmament that was aboute the Cherubins there appeared the similitude of a stole of Saphir vpō them: Then sayde he that sat therein, to him that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are vnder the Cherubins, and take thine honde full of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and cast them ouer the cite. And he crepte in, that I might se.

Now the Cherubins stode vpō the right syde of the house, when the man wēte in, and the cloude fylled the ynnermer courte. But the glory of the LORDE remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the thresholde of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloudes, and the courte was full of the shyne of the LORDES glory. Yee and the sounde of the Cherubins wynges was herde in to the forecourte, like as it had bene the voyce of the almightie God, when he speaketh. Now when he had bydden the man ¶ was clothed in lynnyng, to go and take the hote coales from the myddst of ¶ wheles, which were vnder the Cherubins: he wente and stode besyde the wheles. Then the one Cherub reached forth his honde from vnder the Cherubins, vnto ¶ fyre that was betwene the Cherubins, and toke therof, and gaue it vnto him (that had on the lynnyng rayment) in his honde: which toke it, and wente out. And vnder the wynges of ¶ Cherubins, there appeared the lieknes of a mā hōde: I sawe also foure wheles besyde the Cherubins, so that by euery Cherub there stode a whele. And the wheles were (to loke vpon) after ¶ fashion of ¶ precious stone of Tharsis: Yet (vnto the sight) were they fashioned ¶ like, as yf one whele had bene in another.

When they wente forth, they wēte all iiii together, not turnyng aboute in their goinge: But where the first wente, thither wente they after also, so that they turned not aboute in their goinge. Their whole bodies, their backes, their hōdes & wynges, yee & the wheles also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call ƿ wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Euery one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the seconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, & they were lifted vp aboue. This is the beest, that I sawe at the water of Cobar.

C Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles wente with them: & when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues vpwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. Shortly, when they stode, these stode also: And when they were lift vp, ƿ wheles were lift vp also with thē, for the sprete of life was in the wheles.

“Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the thresholde of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flackred with their wynges, and lift thē selues vp from the earth: so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the beest that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Euery one had foure faces, & euery one foure wynges, & vnder their winges, as it were mēs hondes. Now the figure of their faces was, euen as I had sene them, by the water of Cobar, & so was the countenance of thē: Euery one in his goinge wente straight forward.

The xi. Chapter.

MOROUER, the sprete of the LORDE lift me vp, & brought me vnto ƿ east porte of the LORDES house. And beholde, there were xxv men vnder the dore: amōge whom I sawe Iaasaniah the sonne of Asur, & Pheltias the sonne of Banias, the rulers of the people. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou sonne of man: These men ymagin myschefe, and a wicked counceyl take they in this cite, sayenge: Tush, there is no destruction at honde, let vs buylde houses: This Ierusalem is the cauldron, & we be the flesh. Therefore shalt thou prophecye vnto them, yee prophecye shalt thou vnto them, O sonne of man. And with that, fell the sprete of the LORDE vpon me, and sayde vnto me:

Speake, thus saith the LORDE: On this maner haue yee spokē (O ye house of Israel) and I knowe the ymaginaciōs of youre hertes. Many one haue ye murthered in this cite, & filled the stretes full of the slayne.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: B The slayne men that ye haue layed on the grounde in this cite, are the flesh, & this cite is the cauldron: <sup>1</sup> But I wil bringe you out of it: ye haue drawē out ƿ swearde, euc so wil I also bringe a swearde ouer you, saith ƿ LORDE God. I will dryue you out of this cite and deluyuer you in to youre enemies honde, & wil condemne you. Ye shal be slayne in all the coastes of Israel, I wil be avenged of you: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. This cite shal not be youre cauldron, nether shal ye be the flesh therein: but in the coastes of Israel wil I punysh you, that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: in whose commaundementes ye haue not walked, ner kepte his lawes: but ‘haue done after the customes of the Heithen, that lie rounde aboute you.

Now when I preached, Pheltias the sonne of Banias dyed. Then fell I downe vpo my face, & cried with a loude voyce: O LORDE God, wilt thou then vterly destroye all the remnaunt in Israel? And so the worde of the LORDE came to me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Thy brethren, thy kynsfolke, & ƿ whole house of Iuda, which dwell at Ierusalem, saye: They be gone farre from the LORDE, but the londe is geuen vs in possession. Therefore tell them, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil sende you farre of amōge the Gentiles, & scatere you amonge the nacions, & I wil halowe you but a litle, in the londes where ye shall come. Tell them also, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil gather you agayne out of the nacions, & bringe you from the countrees where ye be scatred, & I will geue you the londe of Israel agayne: & thither shal ye come. And as for all impedimentes, & all youre abhominacions: I will take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, & wil plante a new sprete within youre bowels. <sup>2</sup> That stony herte wil I take out of youre body, & geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commaundementes, and kepe myne ordinance, & do them: that ye maye be my people, and

I youre God. But loke whose hertes are disposed to folowe their abhominacions and wicked lyuynges: Those mens dedes will I bringe vpon their owne heades, saith the LORDE God. After this dyd the Cherubins lift vp their winges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. <sup>a</sup> So the glory of the LORDE wente vp from the myddest of the cite, <sup>b</sup> and stode vpon the mount of the cite towarde the east. But the wynde toke me vp, and in a vision (which came by the sprete of God) it brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge the presoners. Then the vision that I had sene, vanysched awaye fro me. So I spake vnto the presoners, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had shewed me.

The xij. Chapter.

THE wordes of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: 'Thou sonne of mā, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwerde housholde: which haue eyes to se, and yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare they not, for they are an obstinate housholde. Therefore (O thou sonne of man) make thy gere redy to flit, and go forth by fayre daye light, <sup>c</sup> y they maye se. Yee euē in their sight shalt thou go from thy place to another place: yf peraduenture they will conside, <sup>d</sup> y they be an vnobedient housholde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shalt thou beare out by fayre daye light, that they maie se: and thou thy self shalt go forth also at euē in their sight, as a mā doth whē he flitteth.

Dygge thorow the wall, that they maye se, and beare thorow it the same thinge, that thou tokest vp in their sight. As for thy self, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Hyde thy face that thou se not <sup>e</sup> y earth, for I haue made the a shewtokē vnto the house of Israel. Now as <sup>f</sup> y LORDE cōmaunded me, so I dyd: <sup>g</sup> y gere that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. At euen I brake downe an hole thorow the wall with my honde: and when it was darcke, I toke the gere vpō my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornynge, came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, <sup>h</sup> y frauwerde housholde axe the, and saye: what dost thou there? Then tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: This punysment toucheth the chefe rulers at Ierusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am youre shewtoken: like as I haue done, so shal it happen vnto you: Flyt shal ye also, and go in to captiuyte. <sup>i</sup> The chefest that is amonge you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe the wall, to carie stuff there thorow: He shal couer his face, that he se not the grounde, with his eyes.

My lynē will I sprede out vpon him, and catch him in my net, and carie him to Babylon, in the lōde of the Caldees: which he shal not se, and yet shal he dye there. As for all his helpers, and all his hoostes that be aboute him: I will scatere them towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them. <sup>j</sup> So when I haue scatred them amonge the Heithen, and strowed them in the londes: they shal knowe, that I am <sup>k</sup> y LORDE. But, I will leaue a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger and pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the Heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fear full treblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnesse and sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the londe, speake thou on this maner: Thus saith the LORDE God, to them that dwell in Ierusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke youre water with heynesse: Yee the londe with the fulnesse therof shalbe layde waiste, for <sup>l</sup> y wickednesse of them that dwell therein. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Yet came the worde of the LORDE vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, what maner of byworde is that, <sup>m</sup> which ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Tush, seynge that the daies are so slacke in commynge, <sup>n</sup> all the visiōs are of none effecte: Tell them therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: I will make that byworde to cease, so that it shall nomore be comonly vsed in Israel.

But saye this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that euery thinge which hath bene prophecied, shalbe fulfilled. There shall no vision be in wayne, nether eny prophecie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For it is I the LORDE, that speake it: and what so euer I ſpeake, it shal be performed, and not be slacke in commynge.

Yee euen in youre dayes (O ye frauwarde housholde) will I deneye some thinge, & bringe it to passe, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The house of Israel saye in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath sene, it will be many a daye or it come to passe: It is farre of yet, the thinge that he prophecietieth. Therefore saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: All my wordes shal nomore be slacke: Loke what I speake, that same shal come to passe, saith the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, Speake prophecie agaynst those prophetes, that preach in Israel: & saye thou vnto them that prophecie out of their owne hertes: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORDE God: "Wo be vnto those folish prophetes, that folowe their owne sprete, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the foxes vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gappes, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, <sup>a</sup>that mē might abyde the parell in the daye of the LORDE. Wayne thinges they se, & tell lies, to mayntene their preachings withall. The LORDE (saye they) hath spokē it, when in very dede the LORDE hath not sent them. Wayne visiōs haue ye sene, & spokē false prophecies, when ye saye: the LORDE hath spoken it, where as I neuer sayde it.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: Because youre wordes be wayne, & ye seke out lies: Beholde, I wil vpon you, saith ſ the LORDE. Myne hondes shal come vpon the prophetes, that loke out wayne thinges, and preach lies: they shal not be in the counsell of my people, ner written in the boke of the house of Israel, nether shal they come in the londe of Israel: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE God. And that for this cause: 'they haue disceaued my people, & tolde them of peace, where no peace was. One setteth vp a wall, & they dawbe it with lowse claye. 'Therefore tell them which dawbe it with vntempered morter, that it shall fall. For there shal come a greate shuwer of rayne, greate stones shall fall vpon it, & a sore storme of wynde shal breake it, so shal ſ wall come downe. Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the morter, that ye dawbed it withall? Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: I will breake out in my wrothfull displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shuwer of rayne, & hale stones in my wrath, to destroye withall.

As for ſ wall, that ye haue dawbed with vntempered morter, I wil breake it downe, & make it eauen with the grounde: so that the foundation therof shal remoue, & it shal fall, yee & ye youre selues shall perish in the myddest therof: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. Thus wil I perfourme my wrath vpon this wall, & vpon them that haue dawbed it with vntempered morter, and then will I saye vnto you: The wall is gone, & the dawbers are awaye. These are the prophetes of Israel, which prophecie vnto the cite of Ierusalem, & loke out visions of peace for them, where as no peace is, saith the LORDE God. Wherefore (o thou sonne of mā,) set thy face agaynst the daughters of thy people, which prophecie out of their owne hertes: & speake thou prophecie agaynst them, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: Wo be vnto you, that sowe pilowes vnder all arme holes, and bolsters vnder the heades both of yonge and olde, to catch soules withall. For when ye haue gotten the soules of my people in youre captiuyte, 'ye promyse them life, and dishonoure me to my people, for an hand full of barley, & for a pece of bred: when ye kyll the soules of them that dye not, & promyse life to them, that lyue not: Thus ye dyssemble with my people, ſ beleueth youre lies.

Wherefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil also vpon the pillowes, wherewith ye catch the soules in flyenge: thē will I take from youre armes, & let the soules go, that ye catch in flyenge. Your bolsters also wil I teare in peces, & deliyuer my people out of youre honde: so that they shal come no more in youre hōdes to be spoyled, & ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. Seinge ȳ with youre lyes ye discomferte the herte of the righteous, whom I haue not discomforted: Agayne: "For so moch as ye corage the honde of the wicked, so that he maye not turne from his wicked waye, & lyue: therefore shall ye spie out nomore vanyte, ner prophecie youre owne gessinges: for I wil deliyuer my people out of youre honde, that ye naye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THERE resorted vnto me certayne of ȳ elders of Israel, & sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, these men beare their Idols in their hertes, & go purposely vpon the stomblinge block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they then axe counsell at me? Therefore speake vnto them, & saye: thus saith the LORDE God: Euery man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herte, purposynge to stamble in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, to enquere eny thinge at me by him: vnto that man wil I the LORDE myself geue answer, accordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be snared in their owne hertes, because they be cleue gone fro me, for their Idols sakes.

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel: thus saith the LORDE God: "Be conuerted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youe faces from all youre abhominacions. For euery man (whether he be of the house of Israel, or a straunger, that sojourneth in Israel) which departeth fro me, and carieth Idols in his herte, purposinge to go still stomblinge in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, for to axe counsell at me thorow him: vnto ȳ man wil I the LORDE geue answer, by myne owne self.

I wil set my face agaynst that man, and wil make him to be an example for other, yee and a comon byworde: and wil rote him out of my people, that he maye knowe, how ȳ I am the LORDE. "And yf that prophet be disceaued, when he telleth him a worde: then I the LORDE myself haue disceaued that prophet, and wil stretch forth myne honde vpon him, to rote him out of my people of Israel: and they both shall be punyshed for their wickednesse.

Accordinge to ȳ synne of him that axeth, shal the synne of the prophet be: that ȳ house of Israel be led nomore fro me thorow erreure, and be nomore defyled in their wickednesse: but that they maye be my people, and I their God, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, when the londe synneth agaynst me, and goeth forth in wickednesse: I will stretch out myne hōde vpon it, and destroye all the prouysion of their bred, and sende derth vpon them, to destroye man & beast in the londe. "And though Noe, Daniel and Iob these thre men were amonge them, yet shal they in their righteousnesse deliyuer but their owne soules, saith the LORDE God.

Yf I bringe noysome beestes in to the londe, to waist it vp, and it be so desolate, that no man maye go therein for beestes: yf these thre men also were in the londe, as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal saue nether sonnes ner daughters, but be only deliyuered them selues: and as for the londe, it shal be waist.

Or, yf I bringe a swearde in to the londe, and charge it to go thorow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and beast in it, and yf these thre men were therein: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal deliyuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but only be saued them selues.

Yf I sende a pestilence in to the londe, and poure out my sore indignacion vpon it in bloude, so that I rote out of it both man and beast, and yf Noe, Daniel and Iob were therein: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal deliyuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but saue their owne soules in their righteousnesse.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: "Though I sende my foure trubulous plagues vpon Ierusalem: the swearde, hunger, perious beestes and pestilence, to destroye man and beast out of it: yet shal there a remnaunt be saued therein, which shal bringe forth their sonnes and daughters. Beholde, they shal come forth vnto you, and ye shall se their waye, and what they take in honde, ⁊ ye shal be cōforted, as touchinge all the plages that I haue brought vpon Ierusalem.

They shall comforte you, when ye se their waye and workes: and ye shal knowe, how ſ̄ it is not without a cause, that I haue done so agaynst Ierusalem, as I dyd, saieth the LORDE God.

The rb. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: What commeth of the vyne amonge all other trees? and of the wyne stocke, amōge all other tymbre of the groaue? Do mē take wodd of it, to make eny worke withall? Or maye there a nale be made of it, to hange eny thinge vpon? Beholde, it is cast in the fyre to be brent, the fyre consumeth both the endes of it, the myddest is brent to aszshes. Is it mete then for eny worke? No.

Seinge then, that it was mete for no worke, beinge whole: moch lesse maye there eny thinge be made of it, when the fyre hath consumed and brent it. And therefore thus saieth the LORDE God: Like as I cast the vyne in to the fyre for to be brent, as other trees of the wod: Euen so wil I do with them that dwell in Ierusalem, and set my face agaynst them: they shall go out from the fyre, and yet the fyre shall consume them. Then shal ye knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I set my face agaynst them, and make the loude waist: because they haue so sore offended, saieth the LORDE God.

The rbi. Chapter.

AGAYNE, the worde of the LORDE spake vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Ierusalem their abhominacions, and saye: thus saieth the LORDE God vnto Ierusalem: Thy progeny and kynred came out of the londe of Canaan, thy father was an Amorite, thy mother a Cethite. In ſ̄ daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, ſ̄ stringe of thy nauel was not cut of: thou wast not bathed in water to make the clene: Thou wast nether rubbed with salt, ner swedled in cloutes: No man regarded the so moch, as to do eny of these thinges for ſ̄, or to shewe the soch fauoure, but thou wast vtterly cast out vpon ſ̄ felde, yee despised wast thou in the daye of thy byrth.

Then came I by the, and sawe the troden downe in thine owne bloude, ⁊ sayde vnto the: thou shalt be poured from thine owne bloude, frō thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be clensed. <sup>a</sup> So I planted the, as the blossom of thy felde: thou art growen vp, ⁊ waxē greate: thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt beutie, thy brestes are come vp, thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore.

Now when I wente by ſ̄, ⁊ loked vpon the: beholde, thy tyme was come, yee euē the tyme to wowe the. Then spred I my clothes ouer the, to couer thy dishonestie: <sup>b</sup> Yee I made an ooth vnto the, ⁊ married my self with the (saieth the LORDE God) ⁊ so thou becamest myne owne. Then waszshed I the with water, ⁊ poured thy bloude from the. I anoynted the with oyle, I gaue the change of raymentes, I made the shues of Taxus lether: I gyrthed ſ̄ aboute with white sylcke, I clothed the with kerchues, I decked the with costly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spāges vpō thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thine eares, ⁊ set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou deckte with syluer ⁊ golde, ⁊ thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of needle worke ⁊ of dyuerse colours.

Thou didest eate nothinge but symnels, honny ⁊ oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou ⁊ beutifull, yee euen a very Quene wast thou: In so moch, that thy beuty was spoken of amonge the Heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpō the, saieth the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidēce in thine owne beuty, ⁊ played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten the a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by the, ⁊ hast fulfilled their desyres: Yee thou hast taken thy garmētēs of dyuerse colours, ⁊ deckte thine aulters therwith, <sup>c</sup> where vpon thou mightest fulfill thine whordome, of soch a fashion, as neuer was done, ner shalbe. The goodly ornamētēs ⁊ Iewels which I gaue the of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou takē, ⁊ made the mēs ymages therof, and committed whordome withall.

Thy garmentes of dyuerse colours hast thou taken, and deckte them therwith: myne oyle ⁊ incense hast thou set before them. My meate which I gaue the, as synnells, oyle ⁊ hony: (to fede the withall) that hast thou set came also to passe, saith the LORDE God:

 C Thou hast takē thine owne sonnes ⁊ daughters, whom thou haddest begotten vnto me: ⁊ and these hast thou offred vp vnto them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whordome of thine (thinkest thou) that thou slayest my children, and geuest them ouer, to be brēt vnto them? And yet in all thy abominacions and whordome, thou hast not remembered the dayes of thy youth, how naked and bare thou wast at that tyme, ⁊ troden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickednesses (wo wo vnto the, saith ⁊ LORDE) thou hast buylded thy stewes and brodel houses in euery place: yee at the heade of euery strete hast thou buylded the an aulter. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorred: thou hast layed out thy legges to euery one that came by, and multiplied thine whordome. ⁊ Thou hast committed fornicacion with the Egipcians thy neighbours, which had moch flesh: ⁊ thus hast thou vsed thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde ouer the, and wil mynish thy stoare of fode, and delyuer the ouer in to the willes of the Philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abhominable waye. ⁊ Thou hast played the whore also with the Assirians, which might not satisfie the: Yee thou hast played the harlot, ⁊ not had ynough. Thus hast thou still cōmitted thy fornicacion from the londe of Canaan vnto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I circuncide thine herte (saith the LORDE God) seinge thou doest all these thinges, thou precious whore:
 buyldinge thy stewes at the heade of euery strete, and thy brodel houses in all places?
 Thou hast not bene as an other whore, ⁊
 maketh booste of hir wynnyng: but as a wife ⁊ breaketh wedlocke, ⁊ taketh other in steade of hir huszbōde. Giftes are geuen to all other whores, but thou geuest rewardes vnto all thy louers: ⁊ offrest them giftes, to come vnto the out of all places, ⁊ to committe fornicaciō with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other women: yee there hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest giftes vnto other, ⁊ no rewarde is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therfore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast spēt thy moneye, ⁊ discovered thy shame, thorow thy whordome with all thy louers, and with all the Idols of thy abhominacions in the bloude of thy children, whom thou hast geuen them: ⁊ Beholde therfore, I wil gather together all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee ⁊ all them whom thou fauourest, and euery one that thou hatest: ⁊ and will discouer thy shame before thē, that they all maye se thy fylthines.

Morouer, I wil iudge the as a breaker of wedlocke and a murthurer, and recompence the thine owne bloude in wrath and gelousy.
 I wil geue the ouer in to their power, that shal breake downe thy stewes, and destroye thy brodel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy fayre ⁊ beutifull Jewels shal they take from the, and so let the syt naked ⁊ bare: ⁊ Yee they shal bringe the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, ⁊ slaye the downe with their swardes. They shall burne vp thy houses, and punysh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I make thy whordome to cease, so that thou shalt geue out no mo rewardes.

Shulde I make my wrath to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and nomore to be displeased? seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrath in all these thinges? Beholde therfore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saith the LORDE God: how be it, I neuer dyd vnto the, according to thy wickednesse and all thy abhominacions. Be-holde, all they ⁊ vse comon prouerbes, shall vse this prouerbe also agaynst the: Soch a mother, soch a daughter.

Thou art euen thy mothers owne daughter, that hath cast of hir houszbonde and hir children: Yee thou art the sister of thy sisters, which forsoke their huszbōdes and their children. ⁊ Your mother is a Cethite, and youre father an Amorite. Thine eldest sister is Samaria, she and hir daughters that dwel vpō

But thy yongest sister that dwelleth on thy right hōde, is Sodoma and hir daughters. Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abhominations: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.

As truly as I lye, saith the LORDE God: Sodoma thy sister with hir daughters, hath not done so euell, as thou and thy daughters. Beholde, the synnes of thy sister Sodoma were these: Pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and Idilnesse: these things had she and hir daughters. Besydes that, they reached not their honde to the poore and nedy, but were proude, and dyd abhominable thinges before me: <sup>a</sup>therfore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. Nether hath Samaria done half of thy synnes, yee thou hast exceded them in wickednesse: In so moch that in comparison of all the abhominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therfore beare thine owne shame, thou that in synne hast ouercome thy sisters: seinge thou hast done so abhominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therfore (I saye) and beare thine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women.

As for their captiuyte, namely the captiuyte of Sodoma and hir daughters: the captiuyte of Samaria and hir daughters: I wil bringe them agayne, so will I also bringe agayne thy captiuyte amōge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion vpon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comforte them.

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir daughters: Samaria and hir daughters with thy self & thy daughters, shalbe brought agayne to youre olde estate. Whē thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light: thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the Philistynes with all that lye rounde aboute them, brought the to shame and confucion: that thou mightest beare thine owne fylthynges and abhominacion, saith the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: I shulde (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despyed the ooth, and broken the couenaunt. Neuertheles, I wil remembre the couenaunt, that I made with the in thy youth, in so moch that it shall be an euerlasting couenaunt: So that thou also remembre thy wayes, and be ashamed of thē: then shalt thou receaue of me thy elder and yonger sisters, whom I wil make thy daughters, and that besyde thy couenaunt. <sup>d</sup>And so I wil renue my couenaunt with the, & thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE: that thou mayest thincke vpō it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore: when I haue forgeuen the, all that thou hast done, saith the LORDE God.

The xviij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto <sup>a</sup> me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: put forth a dareke speakyng and a parable, vnto the house of Israel, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: There came a greate Aegle with greate wynges, yee with mightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a branch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it in to the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a branch of the londe, and planted it in a frutefull grounde, he brought it vnto greate waters, & set it as a wyllye tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greate wyne stocke, but lowe by the grounde: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, & spred out braunches.

But there was another Aegle, a greate one, which had greate wynges and many fethers: and beholde, & <sup>b</sup>rotes of this vyne had an hūger after him, and spred out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Neuertheles it was plāted vpon a good grounde besyde greate waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saith the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prospere? shal not his rotes be plucked out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythered and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shall it prospere therfore? Shall it not be dried vp and withered, yee euen in the shutinge out of his blossomes, as soone as <sup>c</sup>y east wynde bloweth?

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: 'Speke to that frauwarde housholde: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the kinge of Babilon came to Ierusalem, and toke the kinge & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the kinges sede, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an ooth of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subieccion, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him, & sent his Embassitours in to Egipte, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shulde that prospere? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in y place where the kinge dwelleth, that made him kinge: whose ooth he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hath broken. Nether shall Pharao with his greates hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast vp diche, and set vp bulworkes to destroye moch people. For seinge he hath despised the ooth, and broken the couenaunt (where as he yet gaue his honde therupon) and done all these thinges, he shall not escape.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne ooth that he hath despised, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade.<sup>a</sup> I will cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I cary him, there will I punysh him, because of the greates offence that he made me. As for those y fle from him out of y hoost, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. The residue shalbe scatred towards all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I will also take a branch from an hie Cedre tre, and will set it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greates Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shall knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vp: that I haue dried vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to flourish: Euen I the LORDE y spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The xviij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes,<sup>a</sup> and the childres teth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saith y LORDE God, ye shal vse this byworde nomore in Israel.

<sup>a</sup> Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is y sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. Yf a man be godly, and do the thinge that is equall & right, (he eateth not vpon the hilles: he lifeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he medleth with no menstruous woman: he greueth no body: he geueth his detter his pledge agayne: he taketh none other mans good by violence: he parteth his mete with the hongrie: he clotheth the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon vsury: he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdraweth his honde from doinge wronge: he hādleth faithfully betwixte man & man: he walketh in my commaundementes, & kepeth my lawes, & performeth thē faithfully):<sup>b</sup> This is a righteous mā, he shal surely lyue. saith the LORDE God.

Yf he now get a sonne, that is a murthurer,<sup>c</sup> a shedder of bloude: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all)<sup>d</sup> he eateth vpon the hilles: he defyleth his neighbours wife: he greueth the poore and nedey: he robbeth and spoyleth: he geueth not the detter his pledge agayne: he lifeth vp his eyes vnto Idols, & medleth with abhominable thinges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? He shal not lyue. Seinge he hath done all these abhominacions, he shal dye: his bloude shalbe vpon him.

Now yf this man get a sonne also, that seith all this fathers synnes, which he hath done: and feareth, nether doth soch like:

C Namely, he eateth not vpon the mountaynes: he lifeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he vexeth no man: he kepeth no mans pledge: he nether spoyleth, ner robbeth eny man: he dealeth his meate with the hungrie: he clotheh the naked: he oppresseth not the poore: he receaueth no vsury, ner eny thinge ouer: he kepeth my lawes, and walketh in my commaundementes: This man shal not dye in his fathers synne, but shall lyue without fayle. As for his father: because he oppressed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wyckedly amonge his people: lo, he is deed in his owne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherefore thē shulde not this sonne beare his fathers synne? Therefore: because the sonne hath done equyte and right, hath kepte all my commaundementes, and done them: therefore, shall he lyue in dede.

The same soule ſynneth, shall dye. The sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, neither shal the father beare the sonnes offence. The rightuousnes of the rightuous shall be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf ſynngodly will turne awaye, from all his synnes that he hath done, and kepe all my commaundemētes, and do the thinge ſynngodly: doutles he shal lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they shall not be thought vpon: but in his rightuousnes that he hath done, he shal lyue. <sup>2</sup>For haue I eny pleasure in the death of a synner, saith the LORDE God? but rather that he conuert, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the rightuous turne awaye from his rightuousnes, and do iniquyte, accordinge to all the abhominations, that ſynngodly mā doth: shal he lyue? All the rightuousnes that he hath done, shall not be thought vpon: but in the fawte that he hath offended withall, and in the synne that he hath done, he shal dye.

And yet ye saye: 'Tush, the waye of ſynngodly is not indifferēt. Heare therefore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a rightuous mā turneth awaye from his rightuousnes, and medleth with synngodlynes: he must dye therein: Yee for the synngodlynes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne: <sup>3</sup>when the wicked man turneth awaye from his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth the thinge which is equall and right: he shal saue his soule alyue. For in so much as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all the synngodlynes, that he hath vsed, he shall lyue, and not dye.

And yet saith the house of Israel: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not equall. Are my wayes vnright, o ye house of Israel? Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil iudge every man, accordinge to his wayes. O ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE God. 'Wherefore, be conuerted, and turne you clemente from all youre wickednesse, so shal there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye frō you all youre synngodlynesse, that ye haue done: make you new hertes and a new sprete. Wherefore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel? seynge I haue no pleasure in ſynngodly death of him that dyeth, saith the LORDE God. Turne you then, and ye shal lyue.

The xix. Chapter.

BUT mourne thou for the prynces off Israel, <sup>2</sup> and saye: Wherefore laye thy mother that lyoness, amonge the lyons? and nourished hir yonge ones amonge the lyons whelpes? One of hir whelpes she brought vp, and it became a lyon: it lerned to spoyle, and to deuoure folke. The Heithen herde of him, and toke him in their nettes, and brought him in chaynes vnto the londe of Egipte.

Now when the damme sawe, that all hir hope and comfort was awaye, she toke another of hir whelpes, and made a lyon of him: which wente amonge the lyons, and became a fearece lyon: lerned to spoyle and to deuoure folke: he destroyed their palaces, and made their cities waist: In so much that the whole londe and euery thinge therein, were vtterly desolate, thorow the very voyce of his roaringe.

Then came the Heithen together on euery syde out of all countrees agaynst him, layed their nettes for him, and toke him in their pytte. <sup>3</sup> So they bounde him with chaynes, and brought him to the kinge of Babilon: which put him in preson, that his voyce shulde nomore be herde vpon the mountaynes of Israel. waters: hir stalkes were so stronge, that men might haue made staues therof for officers: she grew so hie in hir stalkes.

So when men sawe that she exceeded y<sup>e</sup> heith and multitude of hir braunches, she was roted out in displeasure, and east downe to the grounde. The East wynde dryed vp hir frute, hir stronge stalkes were broken of, withered and brent in the fyre. But now she is planted in the wilderness, in a drye and thurstie grounde. This is a piteous and miserable thinge.

The xx. Chapter.

IN the xvij yeare the x daye of the v Moneth, it happened, that certayne of the elders of Israel came vnto me for to axe counsell at the LORDE, and sat them downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to axe eny thinge at me? As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE,) I will geue you no answer. Wit thou not reprove them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reprove them? Shewe them the abhominacions of their forefathers, & tell thē: Thus saith the LORDE God: <sup>a</sup>In the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde vpon the sede of the house of Iacob, & shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: Yee when I lifte vp myne honde ouer thē, and sayde: I am the LORDE youre God, euen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them out of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had prouyded for them, which floweth with myleke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lōde amonge all other: Then sayde I vnto them: <sup>b</sup>Cast awaye euery man the abhominacions that he hath before him, and defyle not youre selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE youre God.

But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not folowe me: to cast awaye euery man the abhominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made me to poure my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the Heithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. Now when I had caried them out of the londe of Egipte, and brought them in to the wilderness: <sup>c</sup>I gaue them my commaundementes, & shewed thē my lawes: which who so kepeth shal lyue in them. I gaue them also my holy dayes, to be a token betwixte me and them, and thereby to knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haloweth them. And yet the house of Israel rebelled agaynst me in the wilderness, they wolde not walke in my commaundementes, they haue cast awaye my lawes: (which who so kepeth shulde lyue in them,) and my Sabbath daies haue they greatly vnhalowed.

<sup>d</sup>Thē I made me to poure out my indignacion vpon them, & to cōsume them in the wilderness. Yet I wolde not do it, for my names sake: lest it shulde be dishonoured before the Heithē, from the which I had caried them awaye. But I swore vnto them in the wilderness, that I wolde not bringe them in to the londe, which I gaue them: a londe that floweth with myleke & hony, & is a pleasure of all londes: & <sup>e</sup>y because they refused my lawes, & walked not in my cōmaundementes, but had vnhalowed my Sabbathes, for their herte was gone after their Idols. Neuertheles myne eye spared thē, so <sup>f</sup>y I wolde not vtterly slaye thē, & cōsume thē in the wilderness. Morouer, I sayde vnto their sonnes in <sup>g</sup>the wilderness: <sup>h</sup>walke not in the statutes of youre forefathers, kepe not their ordinaunces, and defyle not youre selues with their Idols, for I am the LORDE youre God. But walke in my statutes, kepe my lawes & do them, halowe my Sabbathes: <sup>i</sup>for they are a token betwixte me & you, that ye maye knowe, how <sup>j</sup>y I am the LORDE. <sup>k</sup>Notwithstōdinge, their sonnes rebelled against me also: they walked not in my statutes, <sup>l</sup>they kepte not my lawes to fulfill them (which he that doth shal lyue in them) nether halowed they my Sabbath dayes. Thē I made me agayne to poure out my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them in the wilderness. Neuertheles I with drewe my honde for my names sake, lest it shulde be vnhalowed amonge the Heithē, before whom I had brought them forth. I lift vp myne honde ouer them also in the wilderness, that I wolde scatre them amonge the Heithen, and strowe them amonge the nacions: because they had not kepte my lawes, but cast asyde my commaundementes, vnhalowed my Sabbathes, and lift vp their eyes to their fathers Idols. Wherefore I gaue them also commaundementes not good, & lawes thorow the which they shulde not lyeue, <sup>a</sup> & I vnhalowed them in their owne giftes: (when I appoynted for my self all their first borne) to make them desolate: that they might knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

¶ Therefore (O thou sonne of man) tell the house of Israel, thus saith the LORDE God: Besyde all this, youre forefathers haue yet blasphemed me more, and greatly offended agaynst me: For after I had brought them in to the londe, <sup>b</sup> I promysed to geue them, when they sawe euery hie hill & all the thicke trees: they made there their offringes, and prouoked me with their oblacions, makinge swete sauoures there, & poured out their drinke offeringes. Then I axed them: what haue ye to do with all, that ye go thither? And therefore is it called the hie place vnto this daye. Wherefore, speake vnto the house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Ye are euen as vncleue as youre forefathers, <sup>c</sup> & committe whordome also with their abhominaciōs. In all youre Idols, where vnto ye bringe youre oblacions, & to whose honoure ye burne youre children: ye defyle youre selues, euen vnto this daye: how darre ye thē come, and axe eny question at me? O ye housholde of Israel? As truly as I lyeue (saith the LORDE God) ye get no answer of me: & as for the thinge that ye go aboute, it shal not come to passe, where as ye saye: we wil be as the Heithen, & do as other people in the londe, wot & stone wil we worshipec.

¶ As truly as I lyeue (saith the LORDE God) I myself, wil rule you with a mightie honde, with a stretchedout arme, and with indignacion poured out ouer you: & wil bringe you out of the nacions and londes, wherin ye are scatred: and gather you together with a mightie hōde, with a stretchedout arme & with indignacion poured out vpon you: & wil bringe you in to the wilderness of the people, & there I will reason with you face to face. Like as I punished youre forefathers in the wilderness, so wil I punish you also, saith the LORDE God. I wil bringe you vnder my iurisdiction, and vnder the bonde of the couenant. The forsakers also and the transgressours wil I take from amonge you, & bringe them out of the londe of youre habitation: as for the londe of Israel, they shal not come in it: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

¶ Go now then (saith the LORDE God) ye house of Israel, cast awaye, and destroye euery man his Idols: then shal ye heare me, and nomore blaspheme my holy name with youre offrynges and Idols. But vpon my holy hill, euē vpon the hie hill of Israel shal all the house of Israel and all that is in the londe, worshipec me: <sup>d</sup> and in the same place will I fauoure them, and there will I requyre youre heauceoffringes, and the firstlinges of youre oblacions, with all youre holy thinges.

I wil accepte youre swete sauoure, when I bringe you from the nacions, and gather you together out of the londes, wherin ye be scatred: that I maye be halowed in you before the Heithen, and that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brought you in to the londe of Israel: yee in to the same lōde, that I swore to geue vnto youre fore fathers. There shal ye call to remembrance youre owne wayes and all youre ymaginacions, wherin ye haue bene defyled: <sup>e</sup> and ye shal be displeased with youre owne selues, for all youre wickednes, that ye haue done. And ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: when I entreate you after my name, not after youre wicked wayes, ner accordinge to youre corrupte workes: o ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of <sup>f</sup> LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of mā, set thy face toward the south, & speake to the south wynde, and saye to the wodde toward the south: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil kyndle a fyre in the, <sup>g</sup> & shal cōsume the Then sayde I: O LORDE, they wil saye of me: "Tush, they are but fables, that he telleth.

The xxi. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face towarde Ierusalem, speake agaynst the Sanctuary, ⁊ prophecie agaynst the londe of Israel, saye to the lode of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, ⁊ wil drawe my swearde out of y sheath, ⁊ rote out of y both the righteous ⁊ the wicked. Seinge then that I will rote out of the both the righteous ⁊ wicked, therefore shal my swearde go out of his sheath, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue drawn my swearde out of the sheath, ⁊ it shal not be put in agayne.

Mourne therefore (o thou sonne of man) y thy loynes crack withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherfore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydings that commeth, at the which all hertes shal melt, all hondes shal be letten downe, all stomackes shal faynte, and all knees shall waxe feble. Beholde, it commeth ⁊ shal be fulfilled, saith the LORDE God.

B Agayne, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecie, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: speake, the swearde is sharpened ⁊ wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, ⁊ scoured y it maye be bright. "O, the destroyenge staff of my sonne, shal bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to y dighting, y good holde maye be takē of it. This swearde is sharpened ⁊ dight, y it maye be geuen in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou sonne of man) and howle, for this swearde shal smyte my people, ⁊ all the rulers in Israel, which with my people shall be slayne downe to the grounde thorow this swearde. Smyte thou vpō thy thee, for, wherfore shulde not the plage ⁊ staff of iudgmēt come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, ⁊ smyte thine hōdes together: make the swearde two edged, yee make it thre edged, y man-slayers swearde, that swearde of the greates slaughter, which shal smyte them, euen in their prey chambers: to make them abaszshed ⁊ faynte at the hertes, ⁊ in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bright and sharpe is it, how wel dight ⁊ mete for y slaughter? Get the to some place alone, ether vpon the right honde or on the lefte, whither so euer thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes together also, and satisfie my wrothfull indignacion: Euen I the LORDE haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORDE came yet vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two stretes, that the swearde of y kinge of Babilō maye come. Both these stretes shall go out of one londe. He shal set him vp a place, at the heade of the strete shal he chose him out a corner. Make y a strete, that the swearde maye come towarde Rabath of the Ammonites, and to the stronge cite of Ierusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shall stonde in the turnyng of the waye, at the heade of the two stretes: 'to axe counsell at the soyslayers, casting the lottes with his arowes, to axe counsell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyer. But the soysayenge shall poynte to the right syde vpon Ierusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greates noyse, to crie out Alarum, to set batell-rammes agaynst the gates, to graue vp dyches, ⁊ to make bulworkes.

Neuertheles, as for y soysayenge, they shal holde it but for vanite, euen as though a iest were tolde them: Yee and they them selues remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be takē and wonne. Therefore saith the LORDE God: For so moch as ye youre selues sheve youre offence, and haue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre workes men maye se youre synnes: Yee in so moch (I saye) that ye youre selues haue made mencion therof, ye shalbe taken by violence.

O thou shameful wicked gyde of Israel, whose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shall haue an ende: Thus saith the LORDE God: take awaye the mytre, and pnt of the crowne, and so is it awaye: the humble is exalted, and the proude brought lowe. Punysh, punysh, yee punysh them will I. and destroye them: and that shall not be fulfilled, vntill he come, to whom the iudgment belongeth, and to whom I haue geuē it. And thou (o sonne of man) prophesye, & speake: <sup>a</sup>Thus saith the LORDE God to the children of Ammon, & to their blasphemy, speake thou: The swerde, the swerde, is drawen forth alreedy to the slaughter, & scourd that it glistreth (because thou hast loked the out vanities, & prophecied lyes) <sup>y</sup> it maye come vpon thy necke, like as vpo the other vngodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put vp agayne in to the sheath, yet will I punysh the, in the londe where thou wast norished & borne, and poure my indignacion vpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wrath, and deluyer the vnto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and thy bloude shall be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembraunce. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

<sup>a</sup> MOROUER, the worde of <sup>y</sup> LORDE came vnto me, & sayde: Thou sonne of man, wilt thou not reprove this bloud-thurstie cite? Shewe the their abhominaciōs, & tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: O thou cite, <sup>y</sup> sheddest bloude in <sup>y</sup> myddest of the, <sup>y</sup> thy tyme maye come also: and makest the Idols to defyle the withall. Thou hast made thy self gilty, in <sup>y</sup> bloude <sup>y</sup> thou hast shed: & defyled <sup>y</sup> i <sup>y</sup> ydols, which thou hast made. Thou hast caused thy daies to drawe nye, & made the tyme of thy yeares to come. Therefore will I make <sup>y</sup> to be confounded amōge the Heithē, & to be despised in all the lōdes, whether they be nye or farre frō the: they shal laugh <sup>y</sup> to scorne, thou <sup>y</sup> hast gottē the so foule a name, & art full off myschefe. <sup>b</sup>Beholde, the rulers of Israel haue brought euery man his power, to shed bloude in the. In the haue they despised father & mother, in the haue they oppressed the straūger, in the haue they vexed the wyddowe & the fatherlesse. Thou hast despyed my Sanctuary, and vnhalowed my Sabbath. <sup>c</sup>Murthers are there in the, that shed bloude, &

In <sup>y</sup> haue they discouered their fathers shame, in the haue they vexed women in their sicknesse. <sup>d</sup>Euery mā hath dealete shamefully with his neyghbours wife, & abhominably defyled his daughter in lawe. In the hath euery man forced his owne sister, <sup>e</sup>euē his fathers daughter: Yee giftes haue bene receaued in the, to shed bloude. Thou hast taken vsury & encrease, thou hast oppressed thy neyghbours by extorcion, and forgotten me, saith the LORDE God. Beholde, I haue smytten thy hondes vpo thy couetousnesse, that thou hast vsed, and vpon the bloude which hath bene shed in the. Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende them selues, in the tyme that I shall bringe vpon the? Euen I the LORDE that speake it, will bringe it also to passe.

<sup>f</sup>I will scatere the amonge the Heithen, & strowe the aboute in the lōdes, and will cause thy fylthynesse to ceasse out off the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the Heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse.<sup>g</sup> All they that shulde be brasse, tynne, yro & leade, are in the fyre become drosse. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as ye all are turned in to drosse, beholde: I will brynge you together vnto Ierusalem, like as syluer, brasse, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the fornace, and the fyre blown there vnder to melt them: Euen so will I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wrath and indignacion. I will brynge you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted therin.

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shall ye also be melted therin: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue poured my wrath vpon you.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Thou sonne of mā, tell her: Thou art an vu clene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wrath: <sup>h</sup>thy prophetes that are in the, are sworne together to deuoure soules, like as a roaringe Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddowes in y. Thy prestes breake my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. "They put no dyfference betwene the holy and vnholy, nether discernen betwene the cleue and vnclene: they turne their eyes from my Sabbathes, and I am vnhalowed amonge them.

"Thy rulers in the are like rauyshinge wolues, to shed bloude, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophetes, they dawbe with vntempered claye, they se vanities, and prophecie lies vnto them, sayenge: the LORDE God sayeth so, where as the LORDE hath not spoken. The people in the londe vseth wicked extorcio and robbery. "They vex the poore and nedy: and oppresse the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vp the hedge, and set him self in the gappe before me in the lodes behalfe, y I shulde not vtterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. Therfore wil I poure out my cruell displeasure vpon them, and burne them in the fyre of my wrath: their owne wayes will I recompence vpō their heades, saith the LORDE God.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, there were two womē, that had one mother: "These (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egipte. There were their brestes brussed, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest of them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and daughters. Their names were, Samaria, and that was Oola: and Ierusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whorynge, when I had takē her to me. She was set on fyre vpon hir louers the Assirians, which had to do with her: "euen the prynces and lordes, that were deckte in costly aray: fayre yonge men, lusty ryders of horses.

Thus thorow hir whordome, she cleued vnto all the yonge men off Assiria: Yee she was made vpon them, and defyled herself with all their Idols. Nether ceased she frō the forniciaciō, that she vsed with the Egipcians: for in hir youth they laye with her, they brussed the brestes of hir maydenheade, and poured their wordome vpon her. "Wherfore, I deliuered her in to y hōdes of hir louers, euen the Assirians, whom she so loued. "These discovered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and daughters, and slewe her with the swearde: An euell name gat she of all people, and they punyshed her.

"Hir sister Ooliba sawe this, and destroyed herself with inordinate loue, more then she, and exceded hir sister in whordome: she loued y Assirians (which also laye with her) namely, the prynces and greate lordes, that were clothed with all maner of gorgious apparell, all lusty horsmen and fayre yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled a like. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymages off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with fayre gyrdles aboute them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, lokyng all like prynces (after y maner of the Babiloniās and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Immediately, as soone as she sawe them, she brent in loue vpon them, and sent messaūgers for them in to the londe of the Caldees.

Now when the Babiloniās came to her, they laye with her, and defyled her with their whordome, and so was she poluted with them. And when hir lust was abated from them, hir whordome and shame was discovered and sene: then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister also. Neuertheles she vsed hir whordome euer the longer the more, and remembered the dayes off hir youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the londe off Egipte: she brent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like y flesh of Asses, and their sede like the sede off horses. Thus thou hast renewed the fylthyngesse of thy youth, when thy louers bressed thy pappes, and marred thy brestes in Egipte.

Therefore (o Ooliba) thus saith y LORDE God. I will rayse vp thy louers (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Assirians:

all yonge and fayre louers: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good horsmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, charettes, ⁊ a greate multitude of people: which shal be harnesssed aboute the on euery syde, with brestplates, sheldes and helmettes. I will punyssh ⁊ before them, yee they thē selues shal punyssh the, acordinge to their owne iudgmēt. I will put my gelousy vpon the, so that they shall deale cruelly with the. They shal cut of thy nose and thine eares, and the remnaunt shall fall thorow the swearde. They shall carry away thy sonnes and doughters, ⁊ the resydue shalbe brent in the fyre. They shal strype the out of thy clothes, ⁊ cary thy costly Lewels awaye with them.

D Thus will I make an ende off thy fylthynesse ⁊ whordome, which thou hast brought out of the lōde of Egipte: so that thou shalt turne thine eyes nomore after them, ⁊ cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egipte. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will deluyuer ⁊ in to the hōdes of them, whom thou hatest: yee enen in to the hōdes of them, with whō thou hast fulfilled thy lust, which shall deale cruelly with ⁊: All thy labour shall they take with them, and leaue the naked and bare, and thus the shame of thy filthy whordome shal come to light. All these thinges shal happen vnto the, because of thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled thy self. Thou hast walked in the waye of thy sister, therefore will I geue the hir cuppe in thy honde.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou shalt drynke off thy sisters cuppe, how depe ⁊ farre so euer it be to the botome. Thou shalt be laughed to scorn, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off dronckennes and sorowe, for the cuppe of thy sister Samaria is a cuppe of destruction ⁊ waistinge: the same shalt thou drynke, and suppe it out euē to ⁊ dregges, yee thou shalt eate vp the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: For enen I haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

E Therefore thus saith ⁊ LORDE God: For so much as thou hast forgottē me, ⁊ east me asyde, so beare now thine owne fylthynesse ⁊ whordome. The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: Thou sonne of mā, wilt thou not reproue Oola ⁊ Ooliba? Shewe thē their abhominaciōs: namely, ⁊ they haue brokē their wedlocke, ⁊ stayned their hōdes with bloude: yee euen with their Idols haue they committed aduoutry, ⁊ offred them their owne children (to be deuoured) whō they had borne vnto me. <sup>a</sup> Yee ⁊ this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sactuary in that same daye, ⁊ haue vnhalowed my Sabbath. For when they had slayne their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. Lo, this haue they done in my house. Besyde all this, thou hast sent thy messaungers for men out of farre cōitrees: and whē they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy self off the best fashion: thou satest vpō a goodly bed, ⁊ a table spred before the: wher vpon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

Then was there greate cheare with her, ⁊ <sup>f</sup> the men ⁊ were sent frō farre cōitrees ouer the deserte: vnto these they gaue braceletes vpon their hondes, ⁊ set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doute, these wil vse their harlotry also with yōder olde whore. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Oola ⁊ Ooliba, those filthy women.

<sup>d</sup> O ye all that loue vertue and rightuousnes, iudge thē, punyssh them: as aduouters and murderers ought to be iudged and punyshed. For they are breakers off wedlocke, and the bloude is in their hondes. Wherefore thus saith the LORDE God: bringe a greate multitude off people vpon them, and make them be scatred and spoyled: these shal stone them, and gorre them with their swerdes. They shal slaye their sonnes and doughters and burne vp their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all soch fylthynes out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vnclēnesse. And so they shall laye youre fylthynesse vpon youre owne selues, and ye shalbe punyshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: ⁊ ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xliiij. Chapter.

I N the ix. yeaere, in the x. Moneth, the <sup>a</sup> x. daye off the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off man, wryte vp the name off this daye, yee euē ſ̄ houre of this present daye: when the kynge of Babilon ſet himſelf agaynſt Ieruſalē. <sup>a</sup> Shewe ſ̄ obſtinate houſholde a parable, ⁊ ſpeake vnto thē: Thus ſayeth the LORDE God: Get the a pot, ſet it on, ⁊ poure water in to it: put all the peeces together in it, all the good peeces: the loyne and the ſhulder, ⁊ ſyll it with the beſt bones. Take one off the beſt ſhepe, ⁊ an heape off bones withall: let it boyle well, ⁊ let the bones ſeyth well therein.

With that, ſayde the LORDE God on this maner: <sup>b</sup> Wo be vnto the bloudy cite of ſ̄ pot, wherupon the ruſtyneſſe hāgeth, and is not yet ſcourd awaye. Take out the peeces that are in it, one after another: there nede no lottes be caſt therfore, for the bloude is yet in it. Vpon a playne drye ſtone hath ſhe poured it, and not vpon the grounde, that it might be couered with duſt. And therfore haue I letten <sup>B</sup> her poure hir bloude vpon a playne drye ſtony rocke, becauſe it ſhulde not be hid, and that I might bringe my wrothfull indignacion and vengeance vpon her.

Wherfore, thus ſaieth ſ̄ LORDE God: O, wo be vnto that bloudthurſtie cite, for whō I wil prepare a heape off wodde: beare thou ſ̄ bones together, kyndle thou the fyre, ſeeth the fleſh, let all be well ſoddē, that the bones maye be ſuckte out. Morouer, ſet the pot emptye vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hote: that the fylth and ruſtyneſſe maye be conſumed. But it will not go off, there is ſo moche off it: the ruſtyneſſe muſt be brent out. Thy filthineſſe is abhominable, for I wolde haue clenſed the, but thou woldeſt not be clenſed. Thou canſt not be poured from thine vncleaneſſe, till I haue poured my wrothfull indignacion vpon the. Euen I the LORDE haue ſo deuſed: Yee it is come therto alreedy, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not ſpare, I will not be intreated: but accordinge to thy wayes and imaginations, thou ſhalt be punyſhed, ſaieth the LORDE God.

<sup>C</sup> And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, ſayenge: Thou ſonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleaſure off thine eyes with a plague: yet ſhalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy chekes therfore: thou mayeſt mourne by thy ſelf alone, but vſe no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, and put on thy ſhues vpon thy fete, couer not thy face, and eate no mourners bred. So I ſpake vnto the people by tymes in the morninge, and at euen my wyfe dyed: then vpon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was cōmaunded. And ſ̄ people ſayde vnto me: wilt thou not tell vs, what that ſignifieth, which thou doeſt? I answered them, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, ſayge: Tell the houſe of Iſrael, thus ſaieth ſ̄ LORDE God: beholde, I wil ſuſpēde my Sanctuary: euē the glory of youre power, the pleaſure of youre eyes, and the thinge that ye loue: youre ſonnes and daughters whom ye haue left, ſhal fall thorow the ſwerde.

Like as I haue done, ſo ſhall ye do alſo: <sup>D</sup> Ye ſhal not hyde youre faces, ye ſhal eate no mourners bred: youre bonettes ſhal ye haue vpon youre heades, ⁊ ſhues vpon youre fete. Ye ſhal nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre ſynnes ye ſhal be ſorowfull, and one repēt with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre ſhewtokē. For loke as he hath done, ſo (when this commeth) ye ſhall do alſo: that ye maye lerne to knowe, that I am ſ̄ LORDE God. But beholde, O thou ſonne of man: In the daye when I take from them their power, their ioye and honoure, the luſt off their eyes, the burthē of their bodies: namely, their ſonnes and daughters: Thē ſhall there one eſcape, and come vnto the, for to ſhewe the. In that daye ſhal thy mouth be opened to him, which is eſcaped, that thou mayeſt ſpeake, and be nomore domme: Yee and thou ſhalt be their ſhewtokē, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Thē xrv. Chapter.

<sup>A</sup> THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, ſayenge: Thou ſonne of man, ſet thy face agaynſt ſ̄ Ammonites, <sup>a</sup> prophecy vpon them, and ſaye vnto the Ammonites: Heare the worde off the LORDE God, Thus ſaieth the LORDE God: For ſo moche as thou ſpeakest ouer my Sanctuary: A ha, I trow it be now ſuſpēded: and ouer the londe of Iſrael, I trow it be now deſolate: yee and ouer the houſe of Iuda, I trow they be now led awaye preſoners: Beholde, I will deluyr ſ̄ to the people of the eaſt, ſ̄ they maye haue the in poſſeſſion: theſe ſhal ſet their caſtels and houſes in the. mylke. As for Rabath, I wil make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepefolde: and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: In so moch as thou hast clapped with thine hondes, and stamped with thy fete, yee reioursed in thine herte ouer the londe of Israel with despyte: beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the also, and delyuer the, to be spoyled off the Heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out off all londes: yee I will make the be layed waist, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith ꝑ LORDE God: "For so moch as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off Iuda, it is but like as all other Gētiles be: Therefore beholde, I will make the cities off Moab weaponlesse, and take awaye their strength: their cities and chefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the cōntre: As namely. Betiesimoth, Baalmeō and Cariathaim: these will I open vnto thē off the east, ꝑ they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shal no more be had in remēbrance amonge the Heithen. Euen thus will I punysh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: "Because that Edom hath avenged & eased himself vpon the house off Iuda, therefore thus saith the LORDE: I will reach out myne honde vpon Edom, and take awaye man and beest out off it. From Themā vnto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. Thorow my people of Israel, wil I avenge me agayne vpon Edō: they shal hādle him, accordinge to my wrath and indignaciō, so that they shal knowe my vengeance, saith the LORDE God.

Thus saith ꝑ LORDE God: "For so moch as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeance with despitemfull stomackes, and off an olde euell will set them selues to destroye: Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnaunt off the see coast to perish. A greate vengeance will

I take vpon them, and punysh them cruelly: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which haue avenged me off them.

The xxi. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the xi. yeaere, the first daye off the Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Thou sonne of man, Because that Tyre hath spoken vpon Ierusalem: A ha, now I trow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I haue destroyed my bely full. Yee therefore saith ꝑ LORDE God: Beholde O Tyre, I will vpon the, I wil bringe a greate multitude off people agaynst ꝑ, like as whē the see aryseth with his wawes: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hange vp their nettes by the see syde. Euen I haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God. The Gētiles shal spoyle her: hir daughters vpon the felde shal perish with the swearde, ꝑ they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will brynge hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kyng off Babilon & a kyng of kynges) from the North, vpon Tyre, with horses, charettes, horsmen and with a greate multitude of people. Thy daughters that are in the londe, shal he slaye with ꝑ swearde: But agaynst ꝑ, he shall make bullworkes & graue vp dyches aboute the, & lift vp his shyld agaynst ꝑ. His slynges & batelrāmes shal he prepare for thy walles, & with his weapēs breake downe thy towres. The dust of his horses shal couer ꝑ, they shalbe so many: thy walles shal shake at the noyse of ꝑ horse men, charettes & wheles: when he cōmeth to thy portes, as men do in to an open cite. With the hōffes off his horse fete, shal he treade downe all thy stretes.

He shal slaye thy people with the swearde, & breake downe the pilers of thy strength. They shal waiste awaye thy riches, & spoyle thy marchaūdis. Thy walles shal they breake downe, & destroye thy houses of pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymbre & foundations, shall they cast in the water. I wil make a bare stone off the yee, a dryenge place for nettes, and shalt neuer be buylded agayne: For euē I & LORDE haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God: thus hath the LORDE God spoken concernynge Tyre: The Iles shall be moued at the noyse off thy fall, & at the crye of the slayne, & shal be murthured in the. All kyngeſ off the see shall come downe from their seates regall: they shal laye awaye their robes, and put off their costly clothinge: Yee with tremblinge shal they be clothed, they shall syt vpon the grounde: they shal be affrayed at thy sodane fall, and be abashed at the.

They shal mourne for the, and saye vnto the: O thou noble cite, & hast bene so greatly occupied off olde, & thou that hast bene the strongest vpon the see with thine inhabitours off whom all men stode in feare: How art thou now so vtterly destroyed? Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Iles, yee and the Iles them selues shall stonde in feare at thine ende. For thus sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I brynge the depe vpon the, & greate waters maye couer the: Then will I cast the downe vnto them, that descende in to & pytte: vnto a people that hath bene lōge deed, and set the in a londe & is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graues, so & no mā shal dwell more in the. And I wil make the to be no more in honoure, in the lōde of the lyuyng. I wil make an ende off the, & thou shalt be gone. Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou not be founde for euermore, saith & LORDE God.

The xxij. Chapter.

A THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off mā, make a lamentable cōplaynte vpon Tyre, & saye vnto Tyre, which is a porte off the see, & occupieth with moch people:<sup>a</sup> and many Iles: thus speaketh & LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite, thy borders are in the myddest of the see, and thy buylders haue made the maruelous goodly. All thy tables haue they made of Cipre trees off the mount Senir. Frō Libanus haue they takē Cedre trees, to make the mastes: & the Okes of Basan to make the rowers.

Thy boordes haue they made of yuery, & of costly wod out of the Ile of Cethiū. Thy sale was of whyte small nedle worke out off the londe of Egipte, to hāge vpon thy mast: & thy hanginges of yalow sylcke & purple, out of & Iles of Elisa. They of Sidō & Arnad were thy maryners, & the wysest in Tyre were thy shypmasters. The eldest and wysest at Gebal were they, that mended & stopped thy shippes.

All shippes off the see with their shippmē occupied their marchaundies in the. The Perses, Lydians and Lybians were in thynne hoost, and helped the to fight: these hanged vpon their shildes & helmettes with the, these set forth thy beuty.

They off Arnad were with thine hoost rōūde aboute thy walles, & were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: these hanged vpon their shildes rōūde aboute thy walles, and made the maruelous goodly. Tharsis occupied with the in all maner of wares, in syluer, yron, tynne and lead, and made thy market greate. Iauan, Tubal and Mesech were thy marchautes, which brought the men, & ornaments off metall for thy occupyenge. They off the house of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Marte, horse, horsmen and mules. They off Dedan were thy marchautes: and many other Iles that occupied with the, brought the wethers, elephāt bones and Paycockes for a present. The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyuerse workes, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet, with nedle worke, with whyte lynninge cloth, with sylcke and with Christall.

Iuda and the londe off Israel occupide with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, & triacle. Damascus also vsed marchaundies with the, in the best wyne and whyte woll: because thy occupyenge was so greate, and thy wares so many. Dan, Iauan, and Meusal haue brought vnto thy markettes, yron redy made, with Casia and Calamus, accordinge to thynne occupyenge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapestry worke and quyszhyms. Arabia & all the princes off Cedar haue occupied with the, in shepe, wethers and goates.

The marchautes off Seba and Rema haue occupied also with the, in all costly spices, in all precious stones and golde, which they brought vnto thy markettes. Haran, Chene and Eden, the marchauntes off Saba, Assiria and Chelmad, were all doers with y and occupied with the: In costly rayment, off yalow sylke and nedle worke, (very precious, ⁊ therefore packte ⁊ boude together with roapes) Yee and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off thy markettes. The shippes of Tharsis were the chefe off thy occupienge.

C Thus thou art full, and in greate worshipec, euen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were euer bringyng vnto the out of many waters. But y easte wynde shal ouer-bear the in to the myddest off the see: so y thy wares, thy marchaūdiēs, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy shipmasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comous shal perish in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The suburbs shal shake at the loude crie off thy shippmen. All whirry men, and all maryners vpon the see, shal leape out of their boates, and set them selues vpon the lode. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shal cast dust vpon their heades, and lye downe in the ashes. They shal shawe them selues, ⁊ put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

They shall mourne for the with hertfull sorow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shall wepe for the: Alas, what cite hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre is? When thy wares ⁊ marchaundies came frō the sees, thou gauest all people ynough. The kynges off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perished with the. All they that dwell in the Iles are abashed at the, and all their kynges are afraied, yee their faces haue chaunged coloure. The marchauntes off the nacions wondre at the, In that thou art so clene brought to naught, ⁊ comest nomore vp.

The xxviij. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell the prynce of Tyre: " Thus saith the LORDE God: because thou hast a proude hert and hast sayde: " I am a God, I haue my seate in the myddest off the see like a god: where as thou art but a man ⁊ not God, ⁊ yet stondest in thine owne cōceate, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thynekst thy selfe wyser then Daniel, that there is no secretes hyd from y. " With thy wisdome ⁊ thy vnderstōdinge, thou hast gottē the greate welthynesse, and gathered treasure of syluer ⁊ golde. With thy greate wisdome and occupienge, hast thou increased thy power, and because of thy greate riches thy hert is proude.

Therefore thus saith y LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast lift vp thine herte, as though thou werst God: beholde, I wil bringe enemies vpon the, euen the tyrantes of the Heithē: these shal drawe out their sweardes vpon thy beuty and wisdome, and shall defyle thy glory. They shal cast the downe to the pytte, so that thou shalt dye in the myddest off the see, as they that be slayne. Let se, yff thou wilt saye then (before thē that slaye y) I am God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the hondes of them that slaye the. Dye shalt thou, euen as the vncircumcised in the hōdes of y enemies: for I myself haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kynge off Tyre, ⁊ tell him: Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art a scale of a licknesse, full off wysdome ⁊ excellent beuty. Thou hast bene in y pleasaūt gardē off God: thou art decte with all maner of precious stones: with Ruby, Topas, Christall, Iacynete, Onyx, Iaspis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbūcle, ⁊ golde. Thy beuty ⁊ y holes y be in y were set forth in the daye of thy creacion. Thou art a fayre Cherub, stretched wyde out for to couer.

I haue set the vpon the holy mount off God, there hast thou bene, and walked amōge the fayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou hast bene right excellent, tyll wickednesse was founde in the. " Because off thy greate marchaundise, thy hert is full off wickednesse, ⁊ thou hast offended. Therefore wil I cast the from the mount of God, (O thou couering Cherub) and destroye the amōge the glisteringe stones. Thy hert was proude in thy fayre beuty, ⁊ thorow thy beuty thou hast destroyed thy wisdome. I wil cast ſ̄ downe to the grounde, ⁊ ſ̄ in ſ̄ ſight of kynges. Thou hast defyled thy Sæctuary, with the greäte wickednesse off thy onrighteous occupyenge. I wil bringe a fyre from the myddest of the, to consume the: ⁊ wil make the o ashes, in the sight of all thē ſ̄ loke vpon the. All they that haue bene acquainted with the amonge the Heithē, shal be abashed at the: seinge thou art so elene brought to naught, and comest no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst Sidō, Prophecie vpō it, and speake. <sup>D</sup> Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpō the, ⁊ get me honoure in the: that it maye be knowne, how that I am ſ̄ LORDE, when I punysh her, ⁊ get me honoure in her. For I will sende pestilence ⁊ bloud sheddinge in to hir stretes, so ſ̄ those which be slayne with the swerde, shal lye rounde aboute in the myddest of her: ⁊ they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She shal no more be a prickinge thorne, ⁊ an hurtinge brere vnto the house of Israel, ner vnto thē that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: when I gather the housholde of Israel together agayne, from the nacions amonge whom they be scatred: then shal I be sanctified in thē, in ſ̄ sight of the Gētiles: ⁊ they shal dwell in the lōde, ſ̄ I gaue to my seruauent Iacob. They shal dwell safely therin, <sup>a</sup> buylde houses, and plante vynyardes: Yee safely shal they dwell therin, when I haue punysed all those, that despyse them rounde aboute: and then shall they knowe, ſ̄ I am the LORDE their God.

The xxii. Chapter.

<sup>a</sup> IN the x. yeaere, vpon the xij. daye off the x. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: <sup>a</sup> O thou sonne off mā, set now thy face agaynst Pharao the kyng off Egipte, Prophecye agaynst him and agaynst the whole lōde of Egipte: Speake, and tell him, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, o Pharao thou kinge of Egipte, I wil vpō the, thou greate whall fysh, ſ̄ lyst in thy waters: Thou ſ̄ sayest: the water is myne, I haue made it myself. I wil put an hoke in thy chawes, ⁊ hāge all the fish in thy waters vpō thy skales: after ſ̄ I wil drawe the out of thy waters, yee ⁊ all the fish of thy waters that hange vpon thy skales.

I wil cast the out vpon the dry lōde with the fish of thy waters, so that thou shalt lye vpon the felde. Thou shalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but shalt be meate for the beestes of the felde, ⁊ for the foules off the ayre: that all they which dwell in Egipte, maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: because thou hast bene a staff of reede to the house of Israel. <sup>b</sup> When they toke holde of ſ̄ with their hōde thou brakest and prydest them on euery syde: and yff they leaned vpō the, thou brakest, ⁊ hurtdest the reynes of their backes. Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: beholde, I will brynge a swearde vpon the, and rote out of the both man and beast. Yee the londe of Egipte shalbe desolate and waist, ⁊ they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Because he sayde: the water is mine, I my self haue made it. Beholde therefore, I wil vpon the, ⁊ vpon thy waters: I will make the londe off Egipte waist and desolate, from the towre of Syenes vnto the borders of the Moriās londe: so that in xl. yeaeres there shall no fote off man walke there, nether fote of catell go there, nether shal it be inhabited. I wil make the londe of Egipte to be desolate amonge other waist countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeaeres, amonge other voyde cities: And I wil scatre the Egipcians amonge the Heithen and nacions.

Agayne, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Whē the xl. yeaeres are expyred, I wil gather the Egipcians together agayne, out off the nacions, amonge whō they were scatred, and wil bringe the presoners off Egipte agayne in to the londe off Pathures their owne natyue countre, that they maye be there a lowly small kyngdome: yee they shal be the smallest amonge other kyngdomes, lest they exalte them selues aboute the Heithen: for I wil so mynish them, that they shall nomore rule the Heithen. They shall nomore be an hope vnto the house off Israel, nether prouoke thē enymore to wickednesse, to cause them turne backe, and to folowe them: ⁊ they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE God.

C In the xxvij. yere, the first daye of the first Moneth, came ſ̄ worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon hath made his hoost, with greate trauayle and labour to come before Tyre: that euery heade maye be balde, and euery shulder bare. Yet hath Tyre geuen nether him ner his hoost eny rewarde, for ſ̄ greate trauayle ſ̄ he hath taken there. Therefore thus saith ſ̄ LORDE God: beholde I will geue the lode of Egipte vnto Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō, ſ̄ he maye take awaye all hir substaunce, robbe hir robberies, ād spoyle hir spoyle, to paye his hoost their wagies withall. I wil geue him the londe of Egipte for his labour, that he toke for me before Tyre. At the same tyme wil I cause the horne off the house of Israel to growe forth, ā open thy mouth agayne amonge them: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xxx. Chapter.

A MOROUER, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, prophecy ā speake: thus saith the LORDE God: "Mourne, wo worth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of ſ̄ LORDE is come: the darcke daye of ſ̄ Heithē, the houre is at honde, the swearde commeth vpon Egipte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egipte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundaciōs are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be afrayed, yee the Morians londe, Lybia ā Lydiā, all their comon people, ā Chub, ā all ſ̄ be confederate vnto thē, shal fall with thē thorow ſ̄ swearde.

B Thus saith ſ̄ LORDE: The maynteyners of the lode of Egipte shal fall, the pryde of hir power shal come downe: euē vnto the tower off Syenes shall they be slayne downe with the swearde, saith ſ̄ LORDE God: amonge other desolate countreies they shal be made desolate, ā amōge other waist cities they shalbe waisted. And they shal knowe, ſ̄ I am ſ̄ LORDE, when I kyndle a fyre in Egipte, ā when all hir helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messaungers go forth fro me in shippes, to make ſ̄ carelesse Morians afrayed: and sorowe shal come vpon them in the daye of Egipte, for doutles it shal come. Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil make an ende of the people of Egipte thorow the honde of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyrantes of the Heithen shalbe brought to destroye the londe. They shal drawe out their swearde vpon Egipte and fylle the londe full of slayne men. I wil drye vp their floudes of water, ād sell the lode in to the hondes of wicked people. The lode and all ſ̄ is therin, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Euē I the LORDE haue sayde it.

And thus saith the LORDE God: I wil destroye the Idols, and brynge the ymages of Noph to an ende. <sup>a</sup>There shal nomore be a prynce of Egypte, and a fearfulness will I sende in to the Egipcians londe. As for Patshures, I wil make it desolate, ād kyndle a fyre in Zoan. Alexandria will I punysh, ā poure my wrathfull indignaciō vpō Sin, which is the strength of Egipte. All the sustaunce of Alexandria will I destroye, and kyndle a fyre in Egipte.

Sin shalbe in greate heuynesse, Alexandria shalbe roted out, and Noph shall haue daylie sorowe. The best men off Heliopolis ā Bubasto shalbe slayne with the swearde, ād caried awaye captiue. At Taphnis the daye shalbe darcke, when I breake there the scepter of the londe of Egipte, and when ſ̄ pompe of hir power shal haue an ende. A cloude shal couer her, and hir daughters shalbe led awaye in to captiuyte. Thus wil I punysh Egipte, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

B It happened in the xi. yere, vpon the seuēth daye of ſ̄ first Moneth, ſ̄ the LORDES worde came vnto me, sayēge: Beholde, thou sonne of mā, I wil breake ſ̄ arme of Pharaō kynge of Egipte: and lo, it shal not be boude vp to be healed, nether shal eny playstre be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so strōge, as to holde a swearde. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil vpon Pharaō ſ̄ kinge of Egipte, ā brusse his strōge arme (yet is it but a broken one) ā wil smyte the swearde out of his honde.

As for the Egipcians, I wil scatere them amonge the Heithen, ā strowe thē in the londes aboute. Agayne I wil strength ſ̄ arme of the kinge of Babilō, ā geue him my swearde in his hōde: but I wil breake Pharaos arme, so ſ̄ he shal holde it before him piteously, like a wounded man.

The xxxi. Chapter.

MOROUER, it happened in the xi. yeare ſ̄ first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Thou sonne of man, speake vnto Pharaō the kynge of Egipte, ād to all his people: Whom art thou like in thy greatnesse? Beholde, Assur was like a Cedre tre vpō the mount of Libanus, with fayre braūches: so thicke, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hye. His toppe reached vnto the cloudes. The waters made him greate, and the depe set him vp an hye. Rōude aboute the rotes of him rāne there floudes of water, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therefore was he hyer thē all the trees of the felde, and thorow ſ̄ multitude of waters that he sent frō him, he optayned many and longe braunches. All foules of the ayre made their nestes in his braūches, vnder his bowes gēdred all the beastes of ſ̄ felde, & vnder his shadow dwelt all people. Fayre and beautifull was he in his greatnesse, and in the length of his braunches, for his rote stode besyde greate waters: no Cedre tre might hyde him. In the pleasaūt garden of God, there was no Fyrre tre like his braūches, the playne trees were not like ſ̄ bowes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be cōpared vnto him in his beuty: so fayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his braunches: In so moch, ſ̄ all the trees in the pleasaūt gardē of God, had envye at hī. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as he hath lift vp himself so hie, & stretched his toppe in to the cloudes, & seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil deluyuer him in to ſ̄ hondes of ſ̄ mightiest amōge ſ̄ Heithē, which shall rote him out. Acordige to his wickednes will I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, & the mighty men of the Heithen shall so scatre him, that his braunches shal lye vpon all mountaynes & in all valleys: his bowes shall be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the londe. Then all the people of the londe shal go from his shadowe, and forsake him. When he is fallē, all ſ̄ foules of ſ̄ ayre shal syt vpon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his braūches: so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shall attayne to his hyennesse, nor reach his toppe vnto the cloudes, nether shall eny tre off the water stonde so hye, as he hath done. For vnto death shall they all be deluyered vnder the earth, and go downe to ſ̄ graue, like other men.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: In the daye when he goeth downe to the graue, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I will couer the depe vpon him, I will staunch his floudes, and the greate waters shalbe restrayned. I shall cause Libanus to be soroufull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shall be smyttē. I wil make the Heithen shake at the sounde of his fall, when I cast him downe to hell, with them ſ̄ descende in to the pytte. All the trees of Eden, with all the chosē and best trees of Libanus, yee and all they that are planted vpon the waters, shal mourne with him also in the lower habitaciōs: for they shal go downe to hell with him, vnto thē that be slayne with the swerde, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amōge the Heithē. To whom shalt thou be lickened, that art so glorious & greate, amonge the trees off Eden? Yet art thou cast downe vnder ſ̄ earth (amonge the trees off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne with the swerde. Euen thus is it with Pharaō & all his people, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxij. Chapter.

IN the xij. yeare, the first daye of the xij. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpō Pharaō the kynge of Egipte, & saye vnto him: "Thou art reputed as a Lyon of the Heithen, & as a whalfish in the see. Thou castest thy waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters with thy fete, and stampst in their floudes. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: "I wil sprede my net ouer ſ̄, namely, a greate multitude of people : these shal dryne the in to my yarne, for I will cast the vpō the lōde, and let the lye vpō the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye syt vpō the : I wil geue all the beastes of the felde ynough off the. Thy flesh will I cast vpō the hilles, and fyll the valleys with thy hyennesse. I will water the londe with the abundaunce off thy bloude euen to the mōutaynes, ⁊ ⁊ valleys shal be full off the.

33 When thou art put out, I will couer the heauen, and make his starres dymme. I will sprede a cloude ouer the Sonne, ⁊ the Moone shal not geue hir light. All the lightes off heauen will I put out ouer the, and bringe darcknesse vpon thy londe, saith ⁊ LORDE God. I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when I bringe thy destruccion amōge the Heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges so afayed thorow ⁊, that their hayre shal stonde vp, whē I shake my swearde at their faces. Sodenly shal they be astonnyed, euery man in him self, at ⁊ daye of thy fall.

C For thus saith the LORDE God : the kyng of Babylons swearde shal come vpon ⁊, with ⁊ swearde of the worthies will I smyte downe thy people. All they that be mightie amouge the Gētiles, shal waist the proude pompe of Egipte, and brynge downe all hir people. All the catell also of Egipte wil I destroye, that they shal come nomore vpō the waters : so that nether māś fote ner beastes clawe, shal stere them eny more. Then wil I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to runne like oyle, sayeth the LORDE God : when I make the londe of Egipte desolate, and when ⁊ countre with all that is therein, shalbe layde waist : and whē I smyte all thē which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORDE. This is the mourninge, that the daughters off the Heithen shall make : Yee a sorrow and lamentaciō shal they take vp, vpon Egipte and all hir people, saith the LORDE God.

In the xij. yere, the xv. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me sayenge : Thou some of man. Take vp a lamentacion vpon the people of Egipte, and cast them downe, yee ⁊ the mightie people of the Heithē also, <sup>e</sup> euen with thē that dwell beneth : and with them that go downe in to the graue. Downe (how fayre so euer thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amōge those that be slayne with the swearde, shal they lye. The swearde is geuen alreedy, he shal be drawen forth and all his people. The mightie worthies and his helpers, ⁊ be gone downe and lye with the vncircumcised and with them that be slayne with ⁊ swearde : shal speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, ⁊ their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne ⁊ fell all with the swearde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His comōs are buried rounde aboute his graue : altogether wounded and slayne with the swearde, which men afore tyme brought feare in to ⁊ londe off the luyunge.

There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute : which all beyng wounded and slayne with the swearde, are gone downe vncircumcised vnder the earth, which neuertheles somtyme brought feare in to the londe off the luyunge : for the which they beare their shame, with the other that be gone downe to ⁊ graue.

35 Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amonge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which be vncircumcised, and with them that be slayne thorow the swearde : for seynge that in tymes past they made the londe off the luyunge afayed, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pytte, and lye amonge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesech also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amonge the vncircumcised, and them that be slayne with the swearde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the luyunge afayed.

Shulde not they then lye also amonge ⁊ worthies, and vncircumcised Giauntes ? which with their weapens are gone downe to hel : whose swearde are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their bones : because that as worthies, they haue brought feare in to ⁊ lōde of ⁊ luyunge ? Yee amōge the vncircumcised shalt thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swearde.

37 There is the lōde off Edom with hir kynges and prynces also, <sup>h</sup> which with their strēgh are layed by them that were slayne with the swearde, yee amonge the vncircumcised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Morouer, there be all the prynces of the north, with all the Sidoniās, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strength they are come to confucion, and lye there vncircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swearde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to ſ pytte. Now when Pharaο seyth this, he shal be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swearde: both Pharaο & all his hoost, saith ſ LORDE God. For I haue geuē my feare in the lōde of the lyuyng. But Pharaο & all his people shal lye amōge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swearde, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxij. Chapter.

A GAYNE, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Speake to the childrē of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swearde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their cōtre, and set him to be their watchman: ſ same man (whā he seyth the swearde come vpon the londe) shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

Yff a man now heare the noyse off the trompet & will not be warned, and the swearde come ād take him awaye: his bloude shall be vpō his owne heade: For he herde the sōnde of the trompet, and wolde not take bede, therefore his bloude be vpon him. But yff he will receaue warnyng, he shal saue his life. Agayne, yf the watch man se the swerde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so ſ the people is not warned: yff the swearde come then, and take eny man from amōge thē: the same shall be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre off the watchmans honde.

33 And now (O thou sonne of man) I haue made the a watchman ſ vnto the house of Israel: that where as thou hearest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. Yff I saye vnto the wicked: thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou geuest him not warnyng, that he maye be warre off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Neuertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shal he dye because off his synne, but thou hast deluyered thy soule.

Therefore (O thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Israel, Ye saye thus: Oure offences and synnes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored vnto life? Tell them: As truly as I lye (saith the LORDE God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked,ſ but moch rather that the wicked turne from his waye and lye. Turne you, turne you from youre vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israel. Oh, wherfore will ye dye?

Thou sonne off man, tell the children off thy people: ſ The righteousnes of the righteous shall not saue him, whan so euer he turneth away vnfaithfully: Agayne, the wickednesse of the wicked shal not hurte him, whan so euer he conuerteth from his vngodlynesse:

And ſ righteousnesse of the righteous shal not saue his life, when so euer he synneth. Yff I saye vnto the righteous, that he shall surely lye, and so he trust to his owne righteousnesse, and do synne: then shall his righteousnesse be nomore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Agayne, yff I saye to the wicked: ſ thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne frō his synnes, and do the thinge that is lafull and right: In so moch that the same wicked mā geueth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, walketh in the cōmaundementes off life, and doth no wrōge:

Then shall he surely lye, and not dye. Yee the synnes that he had done, shal neuer be thought vpon: For in so moch as he doth now the thyng that is lafull and right, he shall lye. And yet the children off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not right, where as their owne waye is rather vnright.

34 When the righteous turneth from his righteousnesse, and doeth the thyng that is wicked, he shall dye therefore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickednesse, doinge the thinge that is lafull and right, he shall lye therefore. ſ Yet ye saye: the waye of ſ

LORDE is not equall. O ye house of Israel, I wil iudge euery one of you after his wayes.

In the xij. yeaere, the v. daye of the x. Moneth of oure captiuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of Ierusalem, came vnto me, and sayde: ŷ cite is destroyed. Now the honde of the LORDE had bene vpon me the euenynge, afore this man (which was escaped) came vnto me, and had opened my mouth, vntyll the mornynge that he came to me: Yee he opened my mouth, so ŷ I was nomore domme. Then came the worde of ŷ LORDE vnto me, and sayde: Thou sonne off man, these that dwell in the waisted londe of Israel, saye: Abraham was but one man, ad he had the londe in possessiō: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therfore tell them: Thus saith the LORDE: In the bloude haue ye eaten, your eyes haue ye lift vp to Idols, and haue shed bloude: shal ye then haue the londe in possession?

Ye leane vpon youre swardes, ye worke abhominacions, euery one defyleth his neighbours wife: and shal ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou these wordes vnto thē: Thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, all ye that dwell in this wilderness, shall be slayne with the sward: what so is vpon the felde, will I geue vnto the beestes to be deuoured: those that be in stronge holdes and dennes, shall dye off the pestilēce. For I wil make the londe desolate and waiste, and ŷ pōpe off hir strength shall come to an ende. The mountaynes in Israel shal be so waiste that no man shall trauaile therby.

Then shall they lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē I make the lōde waiste and desolate, because off all their abhominacions, that they haue wrought. And thou sonne off man, the children off thy people ŷ talke of the, by the walles ad in the dores of their houses, sayenge one to another: come, let vs heare, what worde is gone forth from the LORDE: These come vnto the, after ŷ maner of a greate people: yee my people syt downe before the, and heare thy wordes, but they do not thereafter: For in their mouthes they shewe them selues, as though they were feruent, but their herte goeth after their owne couetous lucre. And as a balet ŷ hath a swete tune, ad is pleasūt to synge, so shalt thou be vnto them: thy wordes shal they heare, but they will not do thereafter. Whē this commeth to passe (for lo, it cometh in dede) then shal they knowe, that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

AND the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off mā, prophecy agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, prophecy, and speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Wo be vnto the shepherdes off Israel, that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede ŷ flockes?

Ye haue eaten vp the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the woll: the best fede haue ye slayne, but ŷ flocke haue ye not norished: The weake haue ye not holden vp, the sicke haue ye not healed: the broken haue ye not bounde together, the outcastes haue ye not brought agayne: ŷ lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly haue ye ruled thē. Thus are they scatred here and there without a shepherde: yee all the beastes off the felde deuoure them, and they go astraye.

My shepe go wandringe vpon all mōitaynes and vpon euery hille yee, they are scatred abroad in all feldes, and there is no man, that careth for them, or seketh after them.

Therefore o ye shepherdes, heare the worde off the LORDE, Thus sayeth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, for so moch as my shepe are robbed, and deuoured off all the wyld beestes off the felde, hauyng no shepherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therefore heare ŷ worde off the LORDE, o ye shepherdes: Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Beholde, I my self will vpon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their hondes, and make thē cease from fedyng of my shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues nomore: For I will deliuer my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will lōke to my shepe myself, and seke them. Like as a shepherde amōge the flocke seketh after the shepe that are scatred abrode, euen so will I seke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene scatred in the cloudy and darcke daye. I will bringe them out from all people, and gather them together out of all londes. I will bringe the in to their owne londe, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in all the places of the cowntre. I will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hie mountaynes off Israel shall their foldes be. There shal they lye in a good folde, and in a fat pasture shall they fede: euen vpon the mountaynes of Israel.

I will fede my shepe myself, and bringe them to their rest, sayeth the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seke: "soch as go astraye, wil I brynge agayne: soch as be wounded, wil I bynde vp: soch as be weake, wil I make stronge: soch as be fat and well lykinge, those will I preserue, and fede them with y thinge that is lauffull. And as for you (o my shepe) sayeth the LORDE God: I will put a difference amonge the shepe, <sup>b</sup> amonge the wethers and the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture with youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

Thus my shepe must be fayne to eate y thinge, that ye haue troden downe with youre fete, and to drynke it, that ye with youre fete haue defyled.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God vnto them: Beholde, I will seuer the fat shepe from the leane: for so much as ye haue shot the weake shepe ap<sup>o</sup> y sydes and shulders, and runne vpon them with youre hornes, so longe till ye haue vtterly scatred them abroad. I wil helpe my shepe, so y they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discerne one shepe from another. I wil rayse vp vnto them one only shepherd: "euen my seruau<sup>t</sup> Dauid, he shal fede the, and he shal be their shepherd. I the LORDE wil be their God, and my seruau<sup>t</sup> Dauid shal be their prince: Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Morouer, I wil make a couenaunt of peace with them, and dryue all euell beastes out of the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wilderness, and slepe in the woddess.

Good fortune and prosperite wil I geue them, and vnto all that be rounde aboute my hill. <sup>a</sup>A prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the wodge maye bringe forth their frutes, and y grounde hir increase. They shalbe safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brokē their yocke, and deluyered them out of the bondes of those, that helde them in subieccion.

They shal nomore bespoyled of the Heithen, ner deuoured with the beastes of the lode: but safely shal they dwell, and no man shall fraye them. I wil set vp an excellēt plāte for them, so y they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, nether beare the reprofe of y Heithen any more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that I the LORDE their God am with them, and y they (euen the house of Israel) are my people, saith the LORDE God. Ye men are my flocke, ye are the shepe of my pasture: and I am youre God, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxv. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of the LORDE <sup>a</sup> came vnto me, sayenge: Thou soune of man, turne thy face toward the mount Seir, prophecy vpon it, and saye vnto it: "Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, (o thou mount Seir) I will vpon the, I will reach out myne hōde ouer the, yee waist and desolate wil I make the. Thy cities wil I breake downe, and thou shalt lye voyde: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. <sup>c</sup>For so much as thou bearest an olde enemyte agaynst the children of Israel, and with a cruel honde hast made them afayed, what tyme as they were troubled and punyshed for their synne: Therefore, as truly as I lye (saith y LORDE God) I wil prepare the vnto bloude, yee bloude shal folowe vpon the: <sup>b</sup>seinge thou layest waite for bloude, therefore shall bloude persecute the. Thus wil I make the mount Seir desolate and waist, and bringe to passe, that there shall no man go thither, ner come from thence. His mountaynes wil I fyll with his slayne men: thy hilles, dales and valleys shal lye full of them, that are slayne with y swearde. I wil make the a perpetuall wilderness, so that noman shal dwell in thy cities: y ye maye knowe, how y I am the LORDE.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lye, I will hādle the accordinge to thy wrath and gelusy, like as thou hast dealt cruelly with them: that I maye be knowne amōge them, how I haue punyshed the. Yee and that thou also mayest be sure, that I the LORDE haue herde all thy despyteful wordes, which thou hast spokē agaynst the mountaynes of Israel, sayenge: Lo, they are made waist, and geuen vs to deuoure.

Thus with youre mouthes ye haue made youre boost agaynst me, yee  $\tau$  multiplied youre proude wordes agaynst me, which I haue herde altogether. #### The xxxvi. Chapter.

A THOU sonne of man, prophecie vpon the mountaynes of Israel,  $\tau$  speake: Heare the worde of the LORDE, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Because youre enemy hath sayde vpon you: A ha,  $\hat{y}$  hie euerlastyng places are now become ours: prophecie therfore,  $\tau$  speake: thus saith  $\hat{y}$  LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted  $\tau$  trodē downe on euery syde,  $\tau$  become a possession vnto  $\hat{y}$  resydue of  $\hat{y}$  Gētiles, which haue brought you in to mēs mouthes  $\tau$  vnto an euell name amonge  $\hat{y}$  people: Therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys  $\tau$  dales, to the voyde wildernesses  $\tau$  desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the resydue of the Heithē: Yee eūē thus saith the LORDE God: In the fyre of my gelusy haue I taken a deuycce, agaynst the resydue of the Gētiles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue takē in my lōde vnto thē selues for a possession: which also reioysed frō their whole herte with a despitteful stomacke, to waist it, and to spoyle it.

B Prophecy therfore vpon the londe of Israel, speake vnto  $\hat{y}$  mountaynes and hilles, to valleys and dales, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I deuysed in my gelusy and terrible wrath: For so moch as ye haue suffred reprove of the Heithen, therfore thus saith the LORDE God: I haue sworne, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre braunches, and bringe forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you wil I turne me, that ye maye be tyllend and sowed. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and  $\hat{y}$  decayed places shalbe repayed againe. I wil prouyde you with moch people and catell, which shal increase  $\tau$  bringe frute. I wil restore you also to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes thē euer ye had before: wherby ye shal knowe,  $\hat{y}$  I am the LORDE. Yee people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel) which shal haue the in possession, and thou shalt be their inheritaunce, so that thou shalt nomore be without them. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as they saye vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eate no mo men, nether destroye thy people any more, saith the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from hensforth. Thou shalt not beare the reprove of the nacions, ner cast out thine owne people anymore, saith the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne of mā, when the house of Israel dwelt vpon their owne grounde, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes  $\tau$  ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the vncleennesse of a menstruous woman. Wherefore I poured my wrothfull displeasure vpon them, because of the bloude that they had shed in the londe,  $\tau$  because of their Idols, wherwith they had defyled them selues. I scatred them also amonge the Heithen, so that they were strowed aboute in the lōdes. Accordinge to their wayes  $\tau$  after their owne inuencions, so dyd I punysh them.

E Now when they were gone vnto the Heithen, and come in amonge them, they dishonoured my holy name: so that it was sayde of them: Are these the people of God, & must go out of their owne londe? Then spared I my holy name, which & house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therefore tell & house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: I do not this for youre sakes (O house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amōge the Heithen, when ye came to them. Therefore, I wil halowe my greete name agayne, which amonge the Gētiles is euell spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amōge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saith & LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the Heithen, and gather you together out of all countrees, and bringe you agayne in to youre owne londe. <sup>6</sup>Then will I poure cleare water vpon you, & ye shalbe cleane: Yee from all youre vncleennesse and from all youre Idols shal I clesne you. A new herte also wil I geue you, & a new sprete wil I put in to you: As for that stony hert, I will take it out of youre body, and <sup>7</sup>geue you a fleszshy herte. I wil geue you my sprete amonge you, and cause you to walke in my commaudemētes, to kepe my lawes, and to fulfill them.

And so ye shall dwell in the londe, that I gaue to youre forefathers, & ye shal be my people, and I wil be youre God. I wil helpe you out of all youre vncleennesse, I wil call for the corne, and wil increase it, and wil let you haue no honger. I wil multiplie the frutes of the trees and & increase of the felde for you, so that ye shal beare no more reprofe of honger amōge the Heithē. Then shal ye remēbre youre owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginaciōs, which were not good: so that ye shal take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abhominacions.

J But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saith the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therefore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of youre synnes. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: what tyme as I shal clesē you from all youre offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repayre the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme laye waist, in the sight of all them, that wēte by. Then shal it be sayde: This waist lōde is become like a garden of pleasure, and the voyde, desolate and brokē downe cities, are now stronge, and fensed agayne. Then the residue of the Heithen that lye rounde aboute you, shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which repayre that was broken downe, and plante agayne, that was made waist. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, & wil do it in dede.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil yet once be founde agayne of & house of Israel, & do this for them: <sup>1</sup>I shal increase them as a flocke of men. Like as the holy flocke and the flocke of Ierusalem are in the hie solempne feastes: so shal also the wilde waisted cities be fylled with flockes of men: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

THE honde of the LORDE came vpon A me, & caried me out in the sprete of the LORDE, & let me downe in a playne felde, that laye full of bones, & he led me rounde aboute by them: & beholde, the bones that laye vpon the felde, were very many, & maruelous drye also. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man: thinkest thou these bones maye lyue agayne? I answered: O LORDE God, thou knowest. And he sayde vnto me: Prophecy thou vpon these bones, & speake vnto them: Ye drye bones, heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto these bones: Beholde, I will put breth in to you, that ye maye lyue: I wil geue you synowes, & make flesh growe vpon you, & couer you ouer with skynne: & so geue you breth, that ye maye lyue, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. Beholde, they saye: "oure bones are dried vp, oure hope is gone, we are clene cut of. Therefore prophecie thou, & speake vnto them. Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil open youre graues (o my people) & take you out of youre sepulchres, & bringe you in to the londe of Israel agayne. Dauid my seruauit shalbe their kinge, & they all shal haue one shepherde only. They shal walke in my lawes, and my commaundementes shal they both kepe & fulfill. They shal dwell in the londe, that I gaue vnto Iacob my seruauit, where as youre fathers also haue dwelt. Yee euē in the same londe shal they, their children, & their childers children dwell for euermore: and my seruauit Dauid shal be their euerlastyng prynce. Morouer, I wil make a bonde of peace with them, which shal be vnto them an euerlastyng couenaunt. I wil sattle the also, and multiplie them, my Sanctuary wil I set amonge the for euermore.

My dwellinge shalbe with them, yee I wil be their God, & they shalbe my people. Thus the Heithen also shal knowe, that I the LORDE am y holy maker of Israel: whē my Sanctuary shal be amonge them for euer more.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art he, of whom I haue spoken afore tyme, by my seruantes ⁊ prophetes of Israel, which prophecied in those dayes ⁊ yeares, that I shulde bringe the vpon them. At the same tyme, when Gog cometh vp in to the londe of Israel (saith the LORDE God) shal my indignaciō go forth in my wrath. For in my gelousy and hote displeasure I haue deuysed, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the londe of Israel at that tyme. The very fyszshes in the see, the foules of the ayre, the beestes of the felde, and all the men ⁊ are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hills also shalbe turned vp side downe, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the grounde. I wil call for a swearde vpon them in all my mountaynes, saith the LORDE God: so that euery mans swearde shal be vpon another. With pestilence and bloude wil I punysh him: stormy rayne and hale stones, fyre and brymstone, wil I cause to rayne vpon him and all his heape, yee and vpon all that greate people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the Heithen: that they maye be sure, how ⁊ I am ⁊ LORDE.

THE xxxix. Chapter.

THEREFORE o thou sonne of man, ⁊ prophecie agaynst Gog, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, o Gog: thou chefe pryncce at Mesech and Tubal, I wil vpon the, and turne the aboute, ⁊ carie the forth, ⁊ lede ⁊ from the north partes, and bringe the vp to the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy bowe, I wil smyte it out of thy left honde, and cast thine arrowes out of thy right honde. Thou with all thine heape, and all the people that is with the, must fall vpon the mountaynes of Israel. Then wil I geue the vnto ⁊ foules and wilde beastes of the felde, to be deuoured: there must thou lye vpon the felde: for euē I the LORDE haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

In to Magog, and amonge those that sit so carelesse in the Illes: wil I sende a fyre, and they shal knowe, ⁊ I am the LORDE. I wil make also the name of my holynesse to be knowne amonge my people of Israel: and I will not let my holy name be euel spoken of enymore: but the very Heithen also shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, the holy one of Israel. Beholde, it commeth, and shalbe fulfilled in dede, saith the LORDE God. This is the daye, wherof I haue spoken: They that dwell in ⁊ cities of Israel, shal go forth and set fyre vpon the weapens, and burne them: shyldes and speres, bowes and arrowes, bylles and clubbes: seuen yeares shall they be burnynge therof, so that they shall els bringe no stickes from ⁊ felde, nether haue nede to hew downe eny out of the wodde: For they shall haue weapens ynew to burne. They shal robbe those that robbed them, and spoyle those that spoyled them, saith  $\text{f}$  LORDE God.

$\text{C}$  At the same tyme will I geue vnto Gog, a place to be buried in, in Israel: euē the valley, where thorow men go from the east to the see warde. Those that trauallye therby, shal abhorre it. There shal Gog and all his people be buried: and it shalbe called the valley of the people of Gog. Seuen monethes longe shall the house of Israel be burienge of them, that they maye cense the lōde: Yee all the people of the londe shal burie them. O it shal be a glorious daye, when I get me that honoure, saith the LORDE God. They shal ordene men also to be deedburiars, euer goinge thorow the lōde, and appoynte them certayne places to bury those in, which remaine vpon the felde, that the londe maye be censed. From ende to ende shal they seke, and that vij monethes lōge. Now those that go thorow the londe, where they se a mans bone, they shall set vp a token by it, till the deedburiars haue buried it also, in the valley of the people of Gog. And the name of the cite shalbe called Hamona: Thus shall they make the londe clene.

$\text{D}$  And thou sonne of man: thus saith the LORDE God: Speake vnto all the foules and euery byrde, yee and to all the wilde beastes of the felde: heape you together and come, gather you rōude aboute vpō my slaughter, that I haue slayne for you: euen a greate slaughter vpon the mountaynes of Israel: eate flesh, and drynke bloude. <sup>a</sup>Ye shal eate  $\text{f}$  flesh of the worthies, and drynke the bloude of the prynces of the londe: of the wethers, of the lambes, of the goates, and of the oxen that be all slayne at Basan. Eate  $\text{f}$  fat youre bely full, and drynke bloude, till ye be droncken of the slaughter, which I haue slayne vnto you. Fyl you at my table, with horses  $\text{t}$  stronge horsmen: with captaynes and all mē of warre, saith the LORDE God.

$\text{E}$  I will bringe my glory also amonge the Gentiles, that all the Heithen maye se my iudgment, that I haue keppe, and my honde which I haue layed vpon them: that  $\text{f}$  house of Israel maye knowe, how that I am  $\text{f}$  LORDE their God, from that daye forth. And the Heithen shal knowe, that where as the house of Israel were led in to captiuyte:

it was for their wickednes sake, because they offended me.

For the which cause I hyd my face from them, and deluyered them in to the hondes of their enemies, that they might all be slayne with the swearde. Acordinge to their vnclennesse and vnfaitfull dealinges, so haue I entreated them, and hyd my face from them. Therefore thus saith  $\text{f}$  LORDE God: Now will I bringe agayne the captuyes of Iacob, and haue mercy vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confucion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shal be taken awaye: and so safely shal they dwell in their londe, that no man shal make them afrayed. And when I haue brought the agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am praysed in them before many Heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led in to captiuyte amonge the Heithen, but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, will I hyde my face nomore from them, but will poure out my sprete vpon the house of Israel,<sup>b</sup> saith the LORDE God.

The xl. Chapter.

$\text{I}$ N the xxv yeare of oure captiuyte, in the <sup>a</sup> begynnynge of the yeare, the x daye of the moneth: that is the xiiij yeare, after that  $\text{f}$  cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euen in to the londe of Israel brought he me in the visions of God: and set me downe vpō a maruelous hie mountayne, whervpon there was a buyldinge (as it had bene of a cite) towarde the north.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like brasse, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore,  $\text{t}$  sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine hert, what so euer I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therefore art thou brought hither. And what soeuer thou seyst, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde

3 rounde aboute the house : the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe ⁊ a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and wente vp the staires, ⁊ measured the postes of the dore : wherof euery one was a meterodde thicke. Euery chambre was a meterodde longe and brode : betwene the chambers were fyue cubites. The poste of the dore within the porche, was one meterodde. He measured also the porche of the ynnerner dore, which conteyned a meterodde. The measured he the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eight cubites, and his pilers two cubites : and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were thre on euery syde : alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore : which was x cubites, ⁊ the heyth of the dore xiiij cubites. The edge before the chābres was one cubite brode vpō both the sydes, ⁊ the chābres six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured f dore from the rygge of one chābre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, ⁊ one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hie, rounde aboute the courte dore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entre of the ynnerner dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, rounde aboute vnto f dore, had syde wyndowes : So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente rounde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chābres ⁊ paued workes, made in f fore courte rōnde aboute : xxx chābres vpon one paued worcke. Now the paued worke was a lōge besyde the dores, and that was the lower paued worke. After this, he measured f bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnerner courte of the out syde, which had an hundred cubites vpon the east ⁊ the north parte. And the dore in the vttemost courte towarde the north, measured he after the lēgh and bredth : his thre chābres also on either syde, with his pilers ⁊ fore entries : which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xxv cubites : his wyndowes ⁊ porches with his date trees, had euen like measure as the dore towarde the east : there were vij steppes to go vp vpō, ⁊ their porche before them. Now f dore of the ynnerner courte stode straight ouer agaynst the dore, that was towarde f north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore towarde f south : whose pilers and porches he measured, these had the fyrst measure, ⁊ with their porches they had wyndowes rounde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, f bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon : his porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnerner courte stode towarde the south, ⁊ he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to f ynnerner courte, thorow the dore of the south syde : which he measured, ⁊ it had the measure a fore sayde. In like maner, his chābres, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches rounde aboute, wyndowes of l cubites hie, ⁊ xxv cubites brode. The porches rounde aboute were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode : and his porch reached vnto f vttemost courte : vpon his pilers there were date trees, and vij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnmost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, accordinge to f measure afore sayde. His chābres, pilers and porches had euen the same measure, as the first had : ⁊ with his porches he had wyndowes rōnde aboute. The heith was l cubites, f bredth xxv cubites : His porches reached vnto the vttemost courte : his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and vij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the foresayde measure. His chābres, pilers and porches had wyndowes rounde aboute : whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode towarde the vttemost courte, and vpon them both were date trees, and vij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chambre also, whose inтраnce was at the dore pilers, and there the burntofferings were waszshed.

In the dore porche, there stode on ether syde two tables for the slaughtinge : to slaye the brentofferings. synneofferings and trespassofferings ther vpon. And on the out syde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. Foure tables stode on ether syde of the dore, that is viij tables, whervpon they slaughtered. Foure tables were of hewen stone for the burntofferings, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: whervpon were layed  $\text{f}$  vessels and ornaments, which were vsed to, the burnt  $\text{t}$  slayne offerings, when they were slaughtered. And within there were hokes foure fyngers brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hange flesh vpon,  $\text{t}$  vpon the tables was layed the offering flesh. On the outsyde of the ynnmer dore were the syngers chambers in the inwarde courte besyde  $\text{f}$  north dore ouer agaynst the south. There stode one also, besyde the east dore north warde.

And he sayde vnto me: "This chambre on the south syde belongeth to the prestes, that kepe the habitacion: and this towarde the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the altur: which be the sonnes of Sadoch, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Leui. So he measured the fore courte, which had in length an C cubites, and as moch in bredth by the foure corners. Now the altur stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entre of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on ether syde. The thicknesse also of the dore on ether syde, was thre cubites. The lēgh of the porche was xx cubites, the bredth xj. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

The xlii. Chapter.

AFTER this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vj. cubites thicke, acordinge to the wydenesse of the tabernacle. The bredth of  $\text{f}$  dore was x. cubites,  $\text{t}$  the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the length therof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. Thē wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore it self was sixe cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vij. cubites. He measured the lēgh and bredth therof, which were euery one xx. cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holiest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was sixe cubites. The chambres  $\text{f}$  stode rounde aboute  $\text{f}$  house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpō another, wherof there were xxxij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare thē vp: but in  $\text{f}$  wall of  $\text{f}$  house they were not fastened: The syde chambres were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thorow them rounde aboute  $\text{f}$  house. Thus was it wyder aboue, that from the lowest men might go to the hiest  $\text{t}$  mydde chābers. I sawe also that the house was very hye rounde aboute. The foundation of the syde chambres was a meterodde (that is sixe cubites) brode. The thicknesse of the syde wall without, conteyned fyue cubites,  $\text{t}$  so dyd  $\text{f}$  outwall of the chābers in  $\text{f}$  house.

Betwene the chambers, was the wydenes xx. cubites rounde aboute  $\text{f}$  house. The chambre dores stode ouer agaynst the out wall, the one dore was towarde the north,  $\text{f}$  other towarde the south: and the thicknesse of the outwall was v cubites rounde aboute. Now the buyldinge that was separated towarde the west, was lxx. cubites wyde: the wall of the buyldinge was v cubites thicke rōūde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C. cubites lōge also. The wydensse before the house and of it  $\text{f}$  was separated towarde the east, was an C. cubites.

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chābers vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnmer temple, the porch of the fore courte,  $\text{f}$  syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes them selues were syled ouer with bordes:  $\text{t}$  thus was it aboute the dore, vnto the ynnmost house, and without also: Yee the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer with grate bordes. There were Cherubims and date trees made also, so that one date tre stode euer betwixte two Cherubims: One Cherub had two faces,  $\text{f}$  face of a man lōkinge asyde towarde the date tre, and a lyous face on the other syde. Thus was it made rōūde aboute in all the house: Yee the Cherubims and date trees were made from the grounde vp aboute the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The bypotes of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me afore in y vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his corners, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two dores, and euery dore had two litle wickettes which were folden in one vpon another, on euery syde two. And vpon the dores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greate thicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpō both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beames and balkes, like as the house had.

The xliij. Chapter.

A THEN caried he me out in to the fore courte towarde the north, & brought me in to the chambre that stode ouer agaynst the backebuyldinge northwarde, which had the length of an C. cubites, whose dore turned towarde the north. The wydenesse conteyned L. cubites, ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ynnerrmer courte, & agaynst the paued worke that was in the fore courte. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one ouer against another: And before this chābre there was a walkinge place of x. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their dores towarde the north. Thus the hyest chambres were allwaye narrower then the lowest and myddelmost of y buildinge: for they bare chambre vpon chambre, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore courte: therfore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vpwarde.

B The wall without that stode by y chambres towarde the vttemost courte vpon the fore syde of the chambres, was L. cubites lōge: for the lēgh of y vttemost chambers in the fore courte was L. cubites also: but the length therof before the temple was an C. cubites. These chambres had vnder them an inтраunce of the east syde, wherby a man might go in to them out of the fore courte, thorow the thicke wall of the fore courte towarde the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buyldinge. Before the same buyldinge vpō this syde there were chābers also, which had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their inтраunce, fashion and dores were all of the same maner. Yee euen like as the other chamber dores were, so were those also of the south syde. And before the waye towarde the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a dore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towarde the north & the south, which stōde before the backe buyldinge: those be holy habitacions, wherin the prestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, must eate the most holy offrings: and there must they laye the most holy offrings: meat offrings, synneoffrings & trespaceoffrings, for it is an holy place. When the prestes come therin, they shal not go out in to the fore courte: but (seyngge they be holy) they shal leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garmentes, when they haue eny thinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnerrmer house, he brought me forth thorow the east porte, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with y meterodde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meteroddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute euen so moch. The other two sydes also towarde the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meteroddes. So he measured all y foure sydes where there wente a walle rounde aboute v. C. meteroddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the vnholly.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO he brought me to y dore, that turneth towarde the east. Beholde, thē came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greate noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight to loke vpon was like the first, that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Cobar.* Then fell I vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east dore. So a wynde toke me vp, and brought me in to y<sup>e</sup> ynnermer courte: & beholde, the house was full of the glory of the LORDE.

33 I herde one speakinge vnto me out of the house, and there stode one by me, that sayde vnto me: <sup>b</sup> O thou sonne of man, this rowme is my seate, and the place of my fote-steppes: where as I wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name: nether thei, ner their kinges, thorow their whordome, thorow their hie places, & thorow the deed bodies of their kinges: which haue buylded their thresholdes in maner harde vpon my thresholdes, and their postes almost at my postes: so that there is but a bare wall betwixte me and them.

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abhominacions, that they haue comitted. Wherefore I haue destroyed them in my wrath: But now they shal put away their whordome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my sight, that I maye dwell amonge them for euermore. <sup>c</sup> Therefore (o thou sonne of man) shewe thou the housholde of Israel a temple, that they maye be ashamed of their wickednesse, and measure them selues an example therat.

And when they be ashamed of all their workes, then shewe them the fourme and fashion of the temple: the comynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and descripcion therof, yee all the vses and ordinaunces of it, y<sup>e</sup> they maye kepe & fulfill all the fashions and customes therof.

<sup>d</sup> The aluter was foure cubites hie, & from the aluter vpwarde stode foure hornes, and it was xij cubites longe and xij cubites brode, vpon the foure corners: the coueringe of the aluter was xliij cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome therof rounde aboute one cubite: his steppes stode towarde the easte. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thus saith the LORDE God: these are the ordinaunces and lawes of the aluter, in the daye whē it is made, to offre burntofferings, and to sprenkle bloude ther vpon. <sup>e</sup> To the prestes, to y<sup>e</sup> Leuites that be of the sede of Sadoch, and treade before me to do me seruyce, saith the LORDE God: Vnto these geue thou a yonge bullocke, for a synoffringe: & take the bloude of him & sprenkle his foure hornes withal, & the foure corners of the aluter coueringe, with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute: herewith shalt thou cense it, and reconcile it. Thou shalt take the bullock also of the synoffringe, & burne him in a seuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

<sup>f</sup> The nexte daye, take a gootbuck without blemish for a synoffringe, to reconcile the aluter withall: like as it was reconciled with y<sup>e</sup> bullocke. Now when thou hast made it cleane, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemish, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemish also: <sup>g</sup> Offre them before the LORDE, and let the prest cast salt ther vpon, and geue them so vnto the LORDE for a burntoffringe. Seuen dayes shalt thou bringe, every daye a gootbucke. A yonge bullocke & a ramme of the flocke (both without blemish) shal they offre. Seuen dayes shal they reconcile and cense the aluter, & offre vpon it. When these dayes are expired, then vpon the viij daye and so forth, the prestes shal offre their burntofferings and healthofferings vpo<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> aluter: so wil I be mercifull vnto you, saith the LORDE God.

The xliij. Chapter.

<sup>a</sup> AFTER this, he brought me agayne to y<sup>e</sup> outward dore of the Sanctuary on the east syde, and that was shut. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: This dore shal be stil shut, and not opened for eny mā to go thorow it, but only for the LORDE God of Israel: yee he shal go thorow it, els shal it be shut still. The pryncce himself shal come thorow it, that he maye eate bred before the LORDE. At the porche shal he come in, and there shal he go out agayne. <sup>a</sup>Then brought he me to the dore, vpon the north syde of the house. And as I loked aboute me, beholde, the glory of the LORDE fylled the house: and I fell downe vpon my face. So the LORDE spake vnto me: O thou sonne of man, fasten this to thine herte, beholde, and take diligēt hede to all that I wil saye vnto thee, concernynge all the ordinaunces of the LORDE and all his lawes: poudre well with thine herte the commynge in of the house and the goynge forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that obstinate housholde of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: O house of Israel, ye haue now done ynough with all youre abhominaciōs, seynge that ye haue brought in to my Sanctuary straungers, hauynge vncircumcised hertes & flesh, where thorow my Sactuary is defiled, whē ye offre my bred, fat, & bloude.

Thus with all youre abhominacions ye haue broken my couenant, and not kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary: but set keepers of my Sanctuary, euen after youre owne mynde. Therefore thus saith y LORDE God: Of all the straungers that dwell amōge the childrē of Israel, no straunger (whose herte & flesh is not circumcised) shal come within my Sanctuary: No ner the Leuites that be gone backe fro me, and haue disceaued the people of Israel with errours, goynge after their Idols: therefore shal thei beare their owne wickednes. Shulde they be set and ordered to minstre, vnder the dores of the house of my Sanctuary? and to do seruyce in the house: to slaye burntofferings and sacrifices for y people: to stōde before them, and to serue them: seynge the seruyce that they do them, is before their Idols, and cause the house of Israel to stōmble thorow wickednesse?

<sup>b</sup>For the which cause I haue plucked out myne honde ouer them (saith the LORDE) so that now they must beare their owne iniquyte, and not to come nye me, to serue me with their preasheade, in my Sanctuary, and most holdest of all: that they maye beare their owne shame and abhominacions, which they haue done. Shulde I vse them to be porters of the house, and to all the seruyce y is done therein? <sup>c</sup>But the prestes y Leuites the sonnes of Sadoch, that kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Israel were gone fro me: shal come to me, to do me seruyce, to stonde before me, and to offre me the fat and the bloude, saith the LORDE God.

They shall go in to my Sanctuary, and treade before my table, to do me seruyce, and to waite vpō myne ordinaunces. Now whē they go in at the dores of the ynnner courte, they shal put on lynnynge clothes, so that no wollyne come vpon them: whye they do seruyce vnder the dores of y ynnner courte, and within. They shal haue fayre lynnynge bonettes vpon their heades, and lynnynge breeches vpon their loynes, which in their labour they shal not put aboute them: And when they go forth to the people in to the outwarde courte, they shal put of the clothes, wherin they haue ministred, and laye them in the habitation of the Sanctuary, & put on other apparell, lest they onhalowe y people with their clothes.

<sup>f</sup>They shal shewe my people the difference betwene the holy and vholy, betwixte the clene and vnclene. Yf eny discorde aryse, they shal discern it, and geue sentence after my iudgmentes. My solempne feastes, my lawes and ordinaunces shal they kepe, and halowe my Sabbathes. <sup>g</sup>They shal come at no deed persone, to defyle them selues: (excepte it be father or mother, sonne or daughter, brother or sister that hath had yett no huszbonde) in soch they maye be defyled.

And when he is clensed, there shal be rekened vnto him vij dayes: and yf he go in to the Sanctuary agayne to do seruyce, he shal bringe a synoffringe saith the LORDE God. <sup>h</sup>They shall haue an heretage, yee I my self wil be their heretage: els shall ye geue

The xlv. Chapter.

WHEN ye deuyde the lōde by the lott, ye shal put asyde one parte for the LORDÉ, <sup>b</sup>to be holy from other londes: namely, xxv M meteroddes longe, and x M brode. This shalbe holy, as wyde as it is rounde aboute. Of this parte there shal be longe vnto the Sanctuary v C meteroddes in all the foure corners, and l cubites wyde rounde aboute to the suburbs. And from this measure, namely of xxv M metteroddes longe, and x M brode, thou shalt measure, wherin the Sanctuary and the holiest of all maye stonde.

The resydue of that holy grounde shall be the prestes, which do seruyce in the Sanctuary of the LORDÉ, and go in before the LORDÉ to serue him, that they maye haue rowme to dwell in.

As for the Sanctuary, it shal stonde for itself: and to the Leuites that serue in the house, there shalbe geuen xx habitacions, of the xxv M lēgth & x M bredth: ye shal geue also vnto the cite a possessiō of v M meteroddes brode, & xxv M longe, besyde the parte of ŷ Sanctuary: that shal be for the whole house of Israel. "Vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuaries parte, & by the cite, there shalbe geuen vnto the prynce, what so euer lyeth ouer agaynst the cite, as farre as reacheth westwarde and eastwarde: which shalbe as longe as one parte, frō ŷ west vnto ŷ east.

This shalbe his owne lōde in Israel, that my princes be nomore chargeable vnto my people. And such as remaineth yet ouer in the londe, shalbe geuen to the house of Israel according to their trybes. Thus saiethe the LORDÉ God: O ye princes, ye haue now oppressed and destroyed ynough: now leaue of, handle now accordinge to the thinge, that is equall and lafull: and thrust out my people nomore, sayeth ŷ LORDÉ God. Ye shal haue a true weight, a true Epha, & a true Bat.

"The Epha & the Bat shalbe a like. One Bat shal cōteyne ŷ tēth parte of an Homer, and so shal one Epha do: their measure shal be after ŷ Homer. One Sytle maketh xx. Geras. "So xx. Sycles, and xxv. & xv. Sycles make a pounce. This is the Heaue offrynge, that ye shal geue to be heaued: namely, the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of wheat: and the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of barlie. The oyle shal be measured with the Bat: euen the x. parte of one Bat out of a Cor.

Ten Battes make one Homer: for one Homer maketh ten Battes. And one lābe from two hundredth shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burntoffrynge and healthoffrynge, to recōile them. sayeth the LORDÉ God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heaue offrynge with a fre wil. Agayne, it shal be the prynces parte to offre burntoffrynges, meatoffrynges and drynk-offrynges vnto the LORDÉ, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatoffrynge, brentoffrynge & healthoffrynge shal he geue, to recōile the house of Israel. Thus sayeth ŷ LORDÉ God: The first daye of the first moneth thou shalt take a yōge bullocke without blemish, and cense the Sanctuary.

So the prest shal take of the bloude of ŷ synoffrynge, and sprenkle it vpon the postes of the house, and vpon the foure corners of the aulter, with the dorepostes of the ynnerner courte. And thus shalt thou do also the seuenth daye of ŷ moneth (for such as haue synned of ignorance, or beynde discaued) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon ŷ xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter. "Seuē dayes shal the feast contynue, wherin there shal no sower ner leuēded bred be eatē.

Vpon the same daye shal ŷ prynce geue for himself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffrynge. And in the feast of the seuen dayes he shal offre euery daye a bullocke & a ram, that are with out blemish, for a burntoffrynge vnto the LORDÉ: & an he goate daylie for a synoffrynge. For the meatoffrynges he shal geue euer an Epha to a bullocke, an Epha to a ram, ⁊ an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Vpon ƿ̃ xv. daye of the seuenth moneth, he shal kepe the seuen dayes holy one after another, euē as the other vij. dayes: with the synoffrynge, burntoffrynge, meatoffrynge, and with the oyle.

The xlii. Chapter.

THUS sayeth the LORDE God: ƿ̃ dore of the ynnmermer courte towarde the east, shall be shut the vj. worke dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the new Moone, it shalbe opened. Then shal the prynce come vnder the dore porche, ⁊ stonde still without by the dore cheke. So ƿ̃ prestes shall offre vp his burnt ⁊ healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipe at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but ƿ̃ dore shal nomore be shut till the euenynge.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipe before the LORDE, without this dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burntoffrynge, that the prynce shall bringe vnto the LORDE vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemysh, ⁊ a ram without blemysh, and an Epha for a meatoffrynge, with ƿ̃ ram. As for the lambes, he maye geue as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, ⁊ an Hin of oyle to an Epha. In the daye of the new moneth, it shalbe a yonge bullocke with out blemysh, sixe lambes ⁊ a ram also without blemysh. With the bullocke he shal geue an Epha, and with the ram an Epha also for a meatoffrynge: but to ƿ̃ lambes, what he maye come by: And euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. When the prynce cōmeth, he shall go vnder the dore porche, and euen there departe forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORDE in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipe, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at ƿ̃ north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth right ouer on the other syde, and the prynce shall goin and out amonge them.

Vpon the solempne and hie feaste dayes, this shalbe the meatoffrynge: An Epha to a bullock, and an Epha to a ram: and to the lambes, as many as he wil, but euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Now when the prynce bryngeth a burntoffrynge oran healthoffrynge with a fre wil vnto the LORDE, the east dore shalbe opened vnto him, ƿ̃ he maye do with his burnt ⁊ healthoffrynges, as he doth vpō the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the dore shal be shut after him agayne. He shal daylie brynge vnto the LORDE a lambe of a yeaere olde without blemish for a burntoffrynge: this shall he do euery mornynge. And for a meatoffrynge he shal geue the sixte parte of an Epha, ⁊ the thirde parte of an Hin of oyle (to myngle with the cakes) euery mornynge. Yee this shalbe a daylie meatoffrynge vnto the LORDE, for an euerlasting ordinance: ⁊ thus shal the lambe, the meatoffrynge and oyle be geuen euery mornynge, for a dailie burntoffrynge.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Yf the prynce geue a gifte vnto eny of his sonnes, then shall it be his somes heretage perpetuall, ƿ̃ he maye possesse it. But yf he wil geue one of his seruauantes some of his heretage, "it shall be his to the fre yeaere, and thē to returne agayne vnto ƿ̃ prynce: "for his heretage shalbe his sonnes only. The prynce also shal take none of the peoples enheritaunce, ner put thē from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shal he geue his possession, that my people be not scatred abroad, but that euery man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the inтраnce at the syde of the dore to ƿ̃ habitacion of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to ƿ̃ prestes and stode towarde the north, ⁊ beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he vnto me: This is the place, where the prestes shall dight the trespass and synoffrynges, ⁊ bake ƿ̃ meatoffrynges: that they nede not beare thē in to the outwarde courte, and so to vnhalowe the people. So he brought me in to the vttemost courte, rounde aboute all the foure corners. Beholde, in euery corner of ƿ̃ fore courte, there was yet a litle courte. Yee in all the foure corners of the courte, there was made a litle courte of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courtes were of one like measure, ⁊ there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, vnder the which there were harthes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the kechin, where the ministers of the house shal dight the slayne offerynges of the people.

The xlvij. Chapter.

AFTER this he brought me agayne before the dore of the house: ⁊ beholde, there guszshed out waters from vnder ⁊ postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode toward the east) that ranne downe vpō the right syde of the house, which lyeth to the autler south warde. Thē caried he me out to the north dore, and brought me forth there rounde aboute by the vttemost dore, ⁊ turneth eastwarde. Beholde, "there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now whan the man ⁊ had the meterodde in his honde wente out vnto the east dore, he measured a M. cubites, ⁊ thē he brought me thorow ⁊ water, enē to the ancles: so he measured yet a thousande, ⁊ brought me thorow ⁊ water agayne vnto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water vnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it soch a ryuer, ⁊ I might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedefull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded ouer. And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, o thou sonne of man? and with that, he brought me to the ryuer banck agayne.

Now when I came there, there stode many trees vpon ether syde of the ryuer bācke. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out toward the east, and runneth downe in to the playne felde, commeth in to the see: and from the see it runneth out, ⁊ maketh the waters whole. Yee all that liue and moue, where vnto this ryuer commeth, shal recouer. And where this water cōmeth, there shalbe many fysh. For all that commeth to this water, shall be lusty and whole. By this riuer shal the fyszsers stonde from Engaddi vnto En Eglaim, ⁊ there sprede out their nettes: for there shalbe greate heapes of fysh, like as in the mayne see. As for his claye and pyttes, they shal not be whole, for why, it shalbe occupide for salt.

C By this ryuer vpon both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of frutefull trees, whose leaues shall not fall of, nether shal their frute perish:<sup>a</sup> but euer be rype at their monethes, for their water runneth out of the Sanctuary. His frute is good to eate, and his leaf profitable for medycine. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Let this be the border, wherin ye shall deuyde the londe vnto the xij. trybes of Israel, with the lyne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: of the which lōde I swore vnto youre fathers, that it shulde fall to youre enheritaunce.

This is the border of the londe vpon the north syde, from the mayne see, as men go to Zadada: namely, Hemath, Berotha, Sabarim: from the borders of Damascus and Hemath vnto Hazar Tichon, that lieth vpon the coastes of Hauērā. Thus the borders frō the see forth, shalbe Hazar Euan, the border of Damascus the north, and the borders of Hemath: that is the north parte.

The east syde shal ye measure from Haueran and Damascus, from Galead and the londe of Israel by Iordane and so forth, from the see coast, that lieth eastwarde: and this is the east parte.

The south syde is, from Thamar forth to the waters of strife vnto Cades, the ryuer, to the mayne see: and that is the south parte.

The west parte: namely the greate see from the borders therof, till a man come vnto Hemath: this is the west parte.

This londe shal ye parte amonge you, according to the trybes of Israel, and deuyde it to be an heretage for you, and for the straigers that dwell amōge you, and begette children.

For ye shal take them amonge the childrē of Israël, like as though they were of youre owne housholde and countre, and they shal haue heretage with you amonge the childrē of Israel.

Loke in what trybe the straunger dwelleth, in the same trybe shal ye geue him his heretage, saith the LORDE God.

THESE are ⁊ names of the trybes that lye vpon the northsyde, by the waye of Hetlon, tyll thou comest vnto Hemath and Hazar Enam, the borders of Damascus toward the north besyde Hemath: Dan shal haue his porciō from the east quarter vnto the west. Vpon the borders of Dan from the east syde vnto the west, shal Asser haue his porcion.

Vpon the borders of Asser frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Nephtali haue his porcion.

Vpon the borders of Nephtali from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Manasses haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Manasses from the east syde vnto the west, shal Ephraim haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ephraim from the east parte vnto the west, shal Ruben haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Ruben from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Iuda haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Iuda from the east parte vnto the west, ye shal set a syde one porciō of xxv. M. meteroddes longe and brode (like as another porcion from the east syde vnto the west,) wherin the Sanctuary shal stōde.

As for the porcion, that ye shal<sup>a</sup> separate out for the LORDE, it shalbe xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Which separated holy porcion shal belonge vnto these: namely to the prestes, towarde the north xxv. M. ⁊ towarde the west x. M. brode, towarde the east x. M. brode also, ⁊ towarde the south xxv. M. longe, wherin the Sanctuary of the LORDE shal stonde. Yee this same place shal be the prestes, ⁊ are of the childrē of Sadoch, ⁊ haue kepte my holy ordinaunce: which wente not astraye in the erreure of the children of Israel, like as the Leuites are gone astraye: and this separated pece that they haue of the londe, shalbe the most holy, hardē vpon the borders of the Leuites. And nexte vnto the prestes, shal the Leuites haue xxv. M. lōge and x. M. brode. This shalbe on euery syde xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Of this porciō they shal sell nothings, ner make eny permutacion therof, lest the chefe of the londe fall vnto other, for it is halowed vnto the LORDE.

The other v. M. after the bredth, ⁊ lyeth by the xxv. M. shalbe comon: it shal belonge to the cite and to the suburbs for habitacions, and ⁊ cite shal stonde in the myddest therof. Let this be the measure: towarde ⁊ north parte, v. C. ⁊ iiij. M. towarde the south parte, v. C. ⁊ iiij. M. towarde the east parte, v. C. and iiij. M. towarde ⁊ west parte, v. C. and iiij. M.

The suburbs harde vpon the cite, shall haue towarde the north, L. and ij. C. towarde the south, L. and two C. towarde the east, L. and two C. towarde the west also, L. and two C. As for the residue of the length, that lyeth hard vpon the separated holy ground: namely, x. M. towarde the east and x. M. towarde the west, next vnto the holy porciō: it and the increase therof shal serue for their meate, that labour in the cite. They that labour for the welth of the cite, shall manteine this also, out of what tribe so euer they be in Israel.

All that is separated of the xxv. M. longe and xxv. M. brode on the foure partes, ⁊ shall ye put a syde for the separated porcion of the Sanctuary, ⁊ for the possession of ⁊ cite. The resydue vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuary and possession of the cite, shall belonge to the prynce, before the place of ⁊ xxv. M. vnto the east ende, ⁊ before the place of ⁊ xxv. M. westwarde, vnto the borders of ⁊ cite: this shalbe ⁊ prynces porciō. This shalbe the holy place, and the house of the Sanctuary shal stonde in the myddest. Morouer, from the Leuites and the cities possession, ⁊ lye in the myddest of the prynces parte: loke what remaineth betwixe the border of Iuda ⁊ the border of Ben Iamin, it shal be the prynces.

Now of the other trybes.

Frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Ben Iamin haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ben Iamin frō the east syde vnto ⁊ west, shal Symeon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Symeō from the east parte vnto the west, shal Isachar haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Isachar from the east syde vnto the west, shal Sabulon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Sabulon from the east parte vnto the west, shal Gad haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Gad southwarde, the coastes shal reach frō Thamar forth vnto the waters of strife to Cades, and to the floude, euen vnto the mayne see.

This is ⁊ lōde with his porciōs, which ye shal distribute vnto the trybes of Israel, saith ⁊ LORDE God. Thus wyde shal the cite reach: vpon the north parte v. C. and iiij. M. measures. The portes of the cite, shal haue the names of the trybes of Israel. Three portes of ⁊ northsyde: One Ruben, another Iuda, the thirde Leui.

Vpō ⁊ east syde, v. C. ⁊ iiij. M. measures, with ⁊ thre portes: The one Ioseph, another Bē Iamin, the thirde Dan. Vpon the south syde v. C. and iiij. M. measures, with the thre portes: the one Symeon, another Isachar, the thirde Sabulon. And vpon the west syde v. C. and iiij. M. measures, with thre portes also: the one Gad, another Asser, the thirde Nephtali. Thus shal it haue xviij. M. measures rōude aboute. And from that tyme forth, ⁊ name of the cite shal be: the LORDE is there.

Certaine reuelacions of thinges for to come : some, of the delyuerance frō the captiuyte of Babilon : some, of the destruccion of Ierusalem : some, concernynge the latter dayes.

The first Chapter.

IN y<sup>e</sup> thirde yeare of y<sup>e</sup> raigne of Ioachim kynge off Iuda, <sup>a</sup>came Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon vnto Ierusalem, & beseged it: and the LORDE delyuered Ioachim the kynge off Iuda in to his honde, with certayne ornementes of the house off God, which he caried awaye vnto the londe of Sennar, to the house of his god, and there brought them in to his gods treasury. And the kynge spake vnto Asphenes y<sup>e</sup> chefe chamberlayne, that he shulde brynge him certayne of the children of Israel, that were come of the kynges sede and of prynces, yōge spryngaldes with out eny blemish but fayre and wellfaured, instructe in all wisdome, connyng and vnderstōdinge: which were able to stonde in the kynges palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kinge appoynted a certayne porcion of his owne meate and of the wine, which he drancke himselff, so to norish thē thre yeare: that afterwarde they might stonde before the kynge. Amonge these now were certayne of the children off Iuda: namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chefe chamberlayne gaue other names, and called Daniel, Balthasar: Ananias, Sydrac: Misael, Misac: and Asarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt with himself, that he wolde not be defyled thorow the kynges meate, <sup>b</sup>ner y<sup>e</sup> wyne which he dröke. And this he desyred off the chefe chäberlayne, lest he shulde defyle himselff. So God gaue Daniel fauoure and grace before  $\S$  chefe chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke: lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other spryngaldes of youre age,  $\text{ad}$  so ye shal make me loose my heade vnto  $\S$  kynge.

$\text{C}$  Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chefe chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Asarias, and sayde: O proue but ten dayes with thy seruantes, and let vs haue potage to eate, and water to drynke: then loke vpon oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kynges meate. And as thou seyst, so deale with thy seruantes. So he consented to them in this matter,  $\text{ad}$  proued thē x. dayes. And after  $\S$  ten dayes, their faces were better lykynge  $\text{q}$  fatter, then all the yonge spryngaldes, which ate of the kynges meate.

$\text{B}$  Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure spryngaldes connyng and lernynge in all scripture and wisdom: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnderstandinge off all visions and dreames. Now when the tyme was expyred, that the kynge had appoynted to brynge in these yonge springaldes vnto him: the chefe chamberlayne brought them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge communed with them. But amonge them all were founde none such as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Asarias. Therefore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdom and matters off vnderstōdinge, that he enquired off them, founde them ten tymes better, thē all the soysayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yere of kynge Cyrus.

The ij. Chapter.

$\text{A}$  IN the secōde yere off the raigne of Nabuchodonosor, had Nabuchodonosor a dreame, "where thorow his sprete was vexed, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge cōmaunded to call together all  $\S$  soysayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vnto them: I haue dreamed a dreame, $\text{q}$  my sprete was so troubled therewith,  $\S$  I haue clene forgotten, what I dreamed. Vpon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syrians speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer. Shewe thy seruantes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answer,  $\text{ad}$  sayde: It is gone fro me: Yf ye wil not make me vnderstōde the dreame with the interpretation theroff, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be prysed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meanynge therof, ye shall haue off me giftes, rewardes and greate honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the signification of it. They answered agayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruantes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

Then the kynge answerde, sayenge: I perceaue off a treuth, that ye do but prolōge  $\S$  tyne: for so moch as ye se, that the thinge is gone fro me. Therefore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all haue one iudgment. But ye fayne and dyssemble with vayne wordes, which ye speake before me, to put off the tyne. Therefore tell me the dreame,  $\text{ad}$  so shall I knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it meaneth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answer before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which  $\S$  kynge speaketh of: Yee there is nether kynge prynce ner lorde, that euer axed soch thinges at a soysayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyeth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge theroff, excepte the goddes: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

$\text{C}$  For  $\S$  which cause the kynge was wroth with greate indignaciō, and cōmaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and  $\S$  proclamacion wētē forth, that the wyse mē shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his cōpanyons. Then Daniel enquired Arioch the kynges stewarde, off the iudgment and sentence, that was gone forth already to kyli soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beinge then the kynges debyte: Why hath the kynge proclaimed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel vp, and desyred the kinge,  $\S$  he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the interpretacion: and then came he home agayne & shewed the thinge vnto Ananias, Misael & Asarias his companios: ¶ they shulde beseeke the God of heauen for grace in this secreete, that Daniel and his felowes with other soch as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiõ by nyght. And Daniel prayed ¶ God of heauē, Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: O that the name of God might be prayed for euer and euer, for wysdome and strength are his owne: " he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynges, he setteth vp kynges: he geueth wysdome vnto the wyse, and vnderstōdinge to those that vnderstōde: he openeth the depe secretes: he knoweth ¶ thyng that lyeth in darcknesse, for the light dwelleth with him.<sup>a</sup> I thanke the, and prayse the (O thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wysdome and strength, & hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynges matter vnto me.

D Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kinge had ordered to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde: destroye not soch as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kyng, and I shal shewe the kyng the interpretacion. Then Arioch brought Daniel in to the kyng in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue founde a man amonge the presoners off Iuda, ¶ shal shewe the kinge the interpretacion. Thē answered the kyng, and sayde vnto Daniel, whose name was Balthasar: Art thou he, ¶ cāst shewe me ¶ dreame, which I haue sene, & the interpretacion therof? Daniel answered the kyng to his face, and sayde: As for this secreete, for the which the kinge maketh inquisicion: it is nether the wyse, the sorcerer, the charmer ner the deuell coniuier, that can certifie the kyng off it: Only God in heauē cā open secretes, & he it is, that sheweth the kinge Nabuchodonosor, what is for to come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast sene in thyne heade vpon thy bed, is this: O kyng, thou didest cast in thy mynde, what shulde come hereafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is for to come. As for me, this secreete is not shewed me, for eny wysdome that I haue, more then eny other lyuynge: but only that I might shewe the kyng the interpretacion, & that he might knowe the thoughtes off his owne herte. Thou kyng sawest, and beholde: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose figure was maruelous greate, and his vysage grymme. The ymage heade was of fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body ad loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte of earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that (without eny hondes) there was hewen off a stone <sup>a</sup> which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake thē to powder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off corne, that the wynde bloweth awaye from ¶ somer floores, that they cā nomore be fōūde. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfylleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kyng, what it meaneth.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a deuyded kyngdome, which neuertheles shal haue some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so moch as thou hast sene the yron mixte with the claye.

The toes off the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifieth: that it shalbe a kyngdome partly stronge and partly weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxte with claye: they shall myngle them selues with ¶ sede off symple people, & yet not contynue one with another, like as yron wil not be soldered with a potsherde.

¶ In the dayes off these kynges, shall the God of heauen set vp an euerlastinge kyngdome which shall not perish, and his kyngdome shall not be geuen ouer to another people: Yee the same shall breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shall endure for euer.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny bondes there was cut out of the mount a stone,<sup>b</sup> which brake the yron, the copper, y<sup>e</sup> earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath y<sup>e</sup> greate God shewed the kyngye, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretacion of it is sure.

Then the kyngye Nabuchodonosor fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meat-offrynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kyngye answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynges, and an opener of secretres: seynge thou canst discover this mysterie. So the kyngye made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees of Babilon, and lord of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kyngye for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remainyd still in the courte by the kyngye.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ NABUCHODONOSOR the kyngye caused a goldē ymage to be made, which was lx. cubites hye, and sixe cubites thicke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon: and sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites and shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: y<sup>e</sup> they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kyngye had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them to gether, and came vnto the dedicatyng of y<sup>e</sup> ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kyngye had set vp.

which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell cried out with all his might: O ye people, kyureddes and tinges, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shalbe blowne, with y<sup>e</sup> harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshipe the golden ymage, y<sup>e</sup> Nabuchodonosor the kyngye hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnyng ouen. Therefore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde of Melody: thē all the people, kyureddes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kyngye had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused y<sup>e</sup> Iewes, and sayde vnto kyngye Nabuchodonosor: O kyngye, God saue thy lyfe for euer. Thou beyng kyngye hast geuen a commaudemēt, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shall fall downe and bowe them selues towarde the golden ymage: who so thē fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote burnyng ouen. Now are there certayne Iewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offyces of the londe off Babilon: namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kyngye) regarde not thy cōmaudemēt, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, y<sup>e</sup> Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kyngye. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what? o Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddes? nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp? wel, be redy hereafter, when ye heare the noyse of the trompettes, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all y<sup>e</sup> other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshipe the ymage which I haue made. But yf ye worshipe it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hote burnyng ouen. Let se, what god is there, <sup>ŷ</sup> maye delyuer you out of my hondes?

Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago answered the kyng, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cōsente vnto <sup>ŷ</sup> in this matter, for why: <sup>o</sup>oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe vs from the hote burnynge ouen (O kyng) and can right wel delyuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shalt thou knowe (o kyng) that we will not serue thy goddes, ner do reuerēce to the ymage, which thou hast set vp. Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that <sup>ŷ</sup> countenance of his face chaunged vpō Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago. Therefore he charched and commanded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hotter, then it was wōte to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooste, for to bynde Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hote burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, ad cast in to the hote burnynge ouen: for the kynges commaundement was so strate, and the ouen was exceedynge hote. As for the men that put in Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these three men Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago fell downe in <sup>ŷ</sup> hote burnynge ouen,<sup>d</sup> beinge fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge marueled, and stode vp in all haist: he spake vnto his counceill and sayde: dyd not ye cast these three men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, and sayde vnto the kyng: Yee o kyng. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goynge lowse in the myddest off the fyre, and nothinge corrupte: and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Vpon this wōte Nabuchodonosor vnto the mouth of the hote burnynge ouen: he speake also, & sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruauntes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrac, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges counceill came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in their bodies:<sup>d</sup> In so moch that the very hayre of their heade was not burnt, and their clothes vnchaunged: Yee there was no smell of fyre felt vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: 'Blessed be the God of Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago: which hath sent his angel, ad defended his seruauntes, that put their trust in him: <sup>ŷ</sup> haue altered the kynges commaundement, and ioperde their bodies therupon: rather then they wolde serue or worshippe any other god, excepte their owne God only. Therefore I wil and commaunde, that all people, kynnedes & tungen, which speake eny blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their houses shalbe prysed: Because, there is no God <sup>ŷ</sup> maye saue, as this.' So the kyng promoted Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, in the londe of Babylon.

The iiii. Chapter.

I NABUCHODONOSOR beyng at rest in myne house, ad florishinge in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made me afraied: ad the thoughtes that I had vpō my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. 'Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wiszdome at Babilō shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretacion of the dreame. So there came the soythsayers, charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coude not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (otherwyse called Balthasar, accordinge to the name of my God) which hath the sprete of the holy goddes in him: to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou prynce of saythsayers: For so moch as I knowe, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, and no secrete is hyd from thee: tel me therfore, what <sup>ŷ</sup> visio of my dreame (<sup>ŷ</sup> I haue sene) maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and beholde, there stode a tre vpon the grounde, which was very hye, greate and mightie: ⁊ heyth reached vnto the heauē, and the bredth extended to all the endes of the earth: his leaues were fayre, he had very moch frute, so ⁊ euery mā had ynough to eate therin.

The beastes of the felde had shadowes vnder it, and the foules off the ayre dwelt in the bowes therof. Shortly, all creatures fed of it. I sawe in my heade a vision vpon my bed: ⁊ beholde, a watcher (euē an holy angel) came downe from heauen, and cryed mightely, sayenge: Hew downe the tre, breake off his branches, shake of his leaues, and scatre his frute abrode: that all the beestes maye get them awaye from vnder him, and the foules from his branches. Neuertheles leaue the grounde of his rote still in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde, with cheynes of yron and stele. With the dew of heauen shall he be wet, and he shall haue his parte in the herbes of the grounde with other wyld beastes.

That mans herte off his shall be taken from him, and a beastes herte shall be geuen him, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This erande of the watcher, is a cōmaundement grounded and sought out in the council off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to vnderstonde, that the hiest hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, ⁊d geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, ⁊ I kynge Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therefore o Balthasar, tell thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for ⁊d sprete of the holy Goddes is in the.

Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre ⁊d his thoughtes troubled him. So the kynge spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretacion theroff feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: O my lorde, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretacion to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greate ⁊ mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his bredth in to all the worlde: whose leaues were fayre, ⁊d the frute moch: vnder the which the beastes of the felde had their habitation, and vpon whose branches the foules of the ayre dyd syt:

Euen thou (o kynge) art the tre, greate ⁊ strōge. Thy greatnesse increaseth, ⁊ reacheth vnto the heauen, so doth thy power to the endes of the earth. But where as the kynge sawe a watcher euen an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the grounde of the rote in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: He shall be wet with the dew off heauen, and his parte shalbe with the beestes of the felde, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him: This (o kynge) is ⁊d interpretaciō, yee it is the very deuycce of him, ⁊ is hiest of all, ⁊ it toucheth my lorde the kynge.

Thou shalt be cast out fro men, and thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an ox. Thou must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shall come and go vpon the, till thou knowe, that the hiest hath power vpon the kyngdomes of men, ⁊d geueth them, to whom he lyst. Morouer, where as it was sayde, that the rote of the tre shulde be left still in the grounde: it betokeneth, ⁊ thy kyngdome shall remayne whole vnto ⁊d, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power commeth from heauen. Wherefore (o kinge) be cōtēt with my counsel, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with rightuousnesse, ⁊d thyne offences with mercy to poore people: for soch thynges shall prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kynge Nabuchodonosor.

So after xij. monethes, the kynge walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilon, and sayde: This is the greate cite off Babilō, which I myself (with my power ⁊ strength) haue made a kynges courte, for the honour off my magesty. Whye these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fell a voyce from heauē, sayenge: O kinge Nabuchodonosor, to the be it spokē: Thy kyngdome shall departe from the, thou shalt be cast out of mens company: thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an ox, till seuen yeares be come and gone ouer the: euen vntill thou knowest, that the hiest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye geue them, vnto whom it pleaseth him.

The very same houre was this matter fulfilled vpon Nabuchodonosor: so that he was

cast out off mēs cōpany, & ate grasse like an oxe. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayres were as greates as Aegles fethers, and his nailes like byrdes clawes.

When this tyme was past, I Nabuchodonosor lift vp myne eyes vnto heauen, and myne vnderstondinge was restored vnto me agayne. Then gaue I thanks vnto the hiest. I magnified and praysed him that lyueth for euermore, whose power endureth allwaye, and his kyngdome from one generacion to another: in comparyson off whom, all they that dwell vpon the earth, <sup>a</sup>are to be reputed as nothinge.

He handleth accordinge to his will, amōge †powers of heauen †& amonge the inhabitours of the earth: and there is none that maye resiste his honde, or saye: †what doest thou? At the same tyme was myne vnderstondynge geuen me agayne, and I was restored to the honoure of my kyngdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My great estates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worships.

Thē dyd I Nabuchodonosor, loaue, magnifie and prayse the kyng of heauen: for all his workes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to bringe them downe.

The b. Chapter.

BALTHASAR the kyng made a greates banquet to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made greates cheare, and when he was dronken with wyne, he commaunded to brynge him †golden and syluer vessel, which his father Nabuchodonosor had taken out of the temple at Ierusalem: <sup>a</sup>that the kyng and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might drike therout.

So they brought the golden vessel, that was takē out of the temple of the LORDES house at Ierusalem. Then the kyng and his lordes with his quene and concubynes dronke out of them. They dronke wyne, and praysed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodde and stone.

In the very same houre there appeared fyngers, as it had bene of a mans honde wrytynge, right ouer agaynst the candelsticke vpon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kyng sawe the palme of †honde † wrote. †Then chaunged the kyng his countenance, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knees smote one agaynst the other. Wherefor the kyng cryed mightly, †that they shulde brynge him the charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels. The kyng spake also to the wyse men of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can rede this wrytynge, and shewe me the playne meanynge theroff: shall be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wyse men: but they coude nether rede the wrytynge, ner shewe the kyng what it signified. Thē was the kyng sore afayed, in so moch, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were sore vexed. So by reason off this matter, †he had happened to the kyng & his lordes, the quene went vp herself in to the banquet house, and spake vnto the kyng, sayenge: O kyng, God saue thy life for euer: Let not thy thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenance be chaunged. For why: there is a man in thy kyngdome, that hath the sprete off the holy goddes within him, as it was sene in thy fathers dayes. He hath vnderstondinge ad wysdome like the goddes. Yee the kyng Nabuchodonosor thy father made this man chefe of the soothsayers, charmers, Caldees and deuels coniurers: because that soch an abundaunt sprete, knowlege & wisdome (to expōde dreames, to open secretes, and to declare harde dowtes) was founde in him: yee euen in Daniel, whom the kyng named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kyng. So the kyng spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Art thou that Daniel, one off the presoners of Iuda, whom my father the kyng brought out of Iewry? I haue herde speake of the, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, experience and vnderstōdinge, and that there hath bene greates wisdome founde in the. Now haue there bene brought me, wise and conynge charmers, to rede this wrytynge, and to shewe me the meanynge theroff: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, †thou canst expōnde darcke thynges, and declare harde doutes.

Well than, yf thou canst rede this wrytinge, and shewe me the meaninge therof: thou shalt be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne of golde aboute thy necke, & rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

D Daniel answered, and sayde before  $\text{f}$  kyng: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thy self, or geue thy rych giftes to another: "yet not thelesse, I wil rede the wrytyng vnto  $\text{f}$  kyng, and shewe him the interpretacion therof. O kyng, God the hyst gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father,  $\text{f}$  dignite of a kyng, with worshippe & honoure: so  $\text{f}$  all people, kynredde & tungen stode in awe & feare of him, by reason off the hie estate, that he had lent him. For why: he slewe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. Agayne: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe.  $\text{c}$  But because his herte was so proude, and his stomack set fast vnto wylfulness: he was deposed from his kyngly trone, and his magesty was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herte was like a beestes herte, and his dwellyng was with the wylde Asses: he was fayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hyst had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom he list.

E And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine hert, though thou knewest all these thinges: but hast magnified thy self aboute the LORDE off heauen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lordes, with thy quene and concubynes, might drynke wyne therout: And hast prayed the Idols of syluer and golde, copper and yron, off wodde & stone: As for the God,  $\text{c}$  in whose honde consisteth thy breth  $\text{ad}$  all thy wayes: thou hast not loaued him.

Therefore is the palme off this honde sent hither from him, to token vp this wrytyng. And this is the scripture, that is written vp: Mane, Thetel, Phares. Now the interpretacion off the thyng is this: Mane, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art weyed in the balaunce, and art founde to light: Phares, Thy kyngdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to cloth

Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a proclamacion concernynge him: that he shulde be the ruler off the thirde parte off his kyngdome.  $\text{c}$  The very same night was Balthasar the kyng off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyngdome, beyng lxij. yeare off age.

The vi. Chapter.

IT pleased Darius to set ouer his kigdome a an C. and xx. lordes, which shulde be in all his kyngdome aboute. Aboute these he set thre prynces (off whom Daniel was one) that the lordes might geue accomptes vnto them, and the kyng to be vndiseased.

But Daniel exceeded all these princes  $\text{ad}$  lordes, for the sprete off God was pleteous in him: so that the kyng was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherefore the prynces and lordes sought, to pyke out in Daniel some quarel agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner fawte vpon him. For why: he was so faythful,  $\text{f}$  there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these men: we will get no quarell agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Vpon this, wente the princes and lordes together vnto the kyng, and sayde thus vnto him: kyng Darius, God saue thy life for euer.

All the great estates off the realme: as  $\text{f}$  prynces, dukes, senatours and iudges, are determed to put out a commaundement off  $\text{f}$  kyng, and to make a sure statute: namely, that who so desyreth eny peticion, ether of eny god or man (with in this xxx. dayes) excepte it be only off the, O kyng: the same person maye be cast in to the Lyons denne. Wherefore, o kyng, confirme thou this statute, and make a wrytyng: that the thyng which the Medes and Perses haue ordered be not altered ner broken.

So Darius made the wrytyng, and confirmed it. Now when Daniel vnderstode that the wrytyng was made, he wente in to his house: and the wyndowes of his hall toward Jerusalem stode open. There kneled he downe vpon his knees, thre tymes a daye: there he made his peticion, and prayed his God, like as his maner was to do afore tyme.

Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makynge his peticion, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kynge, and spake before him concernynge his commaundement, sayenge: O kynge, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xxx. dayes who so requyreth his peticion off any god or man, but only of thyself, o kynge: he shalbe cast in to the denne of the Lyons? The kynge answered, ād sayde: yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe of ſ Medes and Perses, that maye not be broken.

Then answered they, and sayde vnto the kynge: Daniel one of the presoners of Iuda (O kynge) regardeth nether the ner thy statute, that thou hast made, but maketh his peticion thre tymes a daye. When the kynge herde these wordes, he was sore greued, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to delyuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Sonne wēte downe, to the intent that he might saue him.

These men perceauynge the kynges mynde, sayde vnto him: knowe this (o kynge) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kynge maketh, maye not be altered. Then the kynge bad them brynge Daniel, and they cast him in to the Lyons denne.

The kynge also spake vnto Daniel, ād sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed vpon the hole of the denne: this the kynge sealed with his owne rynge, and with ſ signet of his prynces: that the kynges commaundement concernynge Daniel, shulde not be broken.

So the kynge wente in to his palace, and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take eny slepe. But be tymes in the mornynge at the breake off the daye, the kynge arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he came nye vnto ſ dēne, he cried with a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Yee ſ kīge spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruauit off the luyynge God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to delyuer the from the Lyons? Daniel sayde vnto the kynge: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer:

shut the Lyons mouthes, so that they might not hurte me. For why: myne vngiltyennesse is founde out before him. And as for the (o kynge) I neuer offended the.

Then was the kynge excedinge glad, ād commaunded to take Daniel out off the denne. So Daniel was brought out of the dēne, and no maner of hurte was founde vpō him. For he put his trust in his God. And as for those men which had accused Daniel, the kīge commaunded to bringe them, and to cast them in the Lyons denne: them, their children and their wyues. So the Lyons had the mastry of them, and brake all their bones a sonder, or euer they came at the grounde.

<sup>d</sup> After this, wrote kynge Darius vnto all people, kynredres and tungen, that dwelt in all londes: peace be multiplied with you: My commaundement is, in all my dominiō and kyngdome, that men feare and stonde in awe off Daniels God:

<sup>e</sup> For he is the luyinge God, which abydeth euer: his kyngdome shall not fayle, and his power is euerlastynge. It is he that delyuereth, and saueh: he doth wonders and maruelous workes, in heauen and in earth: he hath preserued Daniel from the power of the Lyons. <sup>f</sup> This Daniel prospered in the raigne off Darius and Cirus of Persia.

The vij. Chapter.

IN the first yeaere off Balthasar kynge off Babilon, sawe Daniel a dreame, and a vision was in his heade vpon his bedde. Which dreame he wrote, and the summe off the matter is this: Daniel spake, and sayde: I sawe in my vision by nyght, and beholde: the foure wyndes of ſ heauen stroue vpon the see, and foure greate beestes came vp from the see, one vnlike another.

The first was as a lyon, and yet had he Aegles wynges. <sup>a</sup> I sawe, that his wynges were plucte from him, and he taken awaye from the earth: that he stode vpon his fete as a man, and that there was geuen him a mans herte.

Beholde, the seconde best was like a Beer, and stode vpon the one syde. <sup>b</sup> Amonge his teth in his mouth he had iij. greate lōge teth and it was sayde vnto him: Arise, eate vp moch flesh.

Then I loked, <sup>c</sup> beholde, there was another like vnto a Leopard: this had wynges as a foule, euen foure vpon the backe. This beest had foure heades, and there was power geuen him. <sup>a</sup> After this I sawe in a vision by night, <sup>b</sup> and beholde: the fourth beest was grymme and horrible, and maruelous stronge. It had greate yron teth, it deuoured, and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder fete. It was farre vnlike the other beestes that were before it: <sup>c</sup> for it had ten hornes, wheroff I toke good hede.

And beholde, there came vp amonge the, another like horne, before whom there were thre of the first hornes plucked awaye. Beholde, this horne had eyes like a mā, and a mouth speakyng presumptuous thinges. <sup>d</sup> I looked till the seates were prepared, and till the olde aged sat him downe. His clothinge was as white as snowe, and the hayres of his heade like the pure woll.

His trone was like the fire flame, and his wheles as the burnyng fyre. There drew forth a fire streame, and wente out from him. <sup>e</sup> A thousand tymes a thousande serued him, x. M. tymes ten thousande stode before him. The iudgment was set, and the booke opened. Then toke I hede there vnto, because of the voyce of the proude wordes, which that horne spake.

I behelde, till the beest was slayne, and his body destroyed, <sup>f</sup> and geuen ouer to be brent in the fyre.

As for the power of the other beestes also, it was taken awaye, but their lyues were prolonged for a tyme and season. I sawe in a vision by night, and beholde: <sup>g</sup> there came one in the cloudes of heauen like the sonne of a man, which wente vnto the olde aged, before whom they brought him: Then gaue he him power and dignite regall, <sup>h</sup> that all people, trybes and tungen shulde serue him. His power is an euerlasting power, which shal neuer be put downe: <sup>i</sup> his kyngdome endureth incorrupte. <sup>j</sup> My herte was vexed, and I Daniel had a troubled sprete within me, and the visions off my heade made me afraied: <sup>k</sup> till I gat me vnto one off them that stode by, to knowe the treuth, concerninge all these thinges. So he tolde me, and made me vnderstode the interpretaciō of these thinges.

These foure greate beastes, are foure kynges which shal aryse out of the earth. These shal take in the kyngdome off the sayntes of the most hyest, and possesse it still more and more for a longe season. After this I requyred diligently to knowe the treuth, concerninge the fourth beest, which was so farre vnlike the other beestes, and so horrible: whose teth were of yron, and his nales off brasse: which deuoured and destroyed, and stamped the resydue vnder his fete. <sup>l</sup> I desyred also to knowe the treuth, as touchinge the ten hornes that he had vpon his heade, and this other which came vp afterwarde, before whose face there fell downe thre: which horne had eyes and a mouth that spake presumptuous thinges, and looked with a grimmer visage then his felowes.

I behelde, and the same horne made battail agaynst the sayntes, yee and gat the victory off them: vntill the tyme, that the olde aged came, that the iudgment was geuen to the cheifest sayntes: and till the tyme, that <sup>m</sup> sayntes had the kyngdome in possession.

He gaue me this answer: That fourth beest shalbe the fourth kyngdome vpon earth: it shalbe more then all other kyngdomes, it shal deuoure, treade downe and destroye all other londes.

<sup>n</sup> The ten hornes, are ten kynges that shal aryse out of that kyngdome, after whō there shall stonde vp another, which shall be greater then the first.

He shall subdue thre kynges, and shall speake wordes agaynst the hyest off all: he shall destroye the sayntes of the most hyest, and thynke, that he maye chaunge tymes and lawes. <sup>o</sup> They shall be geuen vnder his power, vntill a tyme, two tymes, and halfe a tyme.

But the iudgment shalbe kepte, so that his power shalbe taken from him, for he shal be destroyed, and perish at the last. As for the kyngdome, power and all might that is vnder the heauen: it shal be geuen to the holy people off the most hyest, <sup>p</sup> whose kyngdome is euerlasting, yee all powers shall serue and obeye him. Thus fare extēde <sup>q</sup> wordes.

Neuerthelesse, I Daniel was so vexed in my thoughtes, that my countenance chaanged, <sup>r</sup> but the wordes I kepte still in my herte.

The viij. Chapter.

IN the thirde yeare off the raigne of kinge Balthasar, there appeared a visiō vnto me Daniel, after that I had sene the first. "I sawe in a vision, (and when I sawe it, I was at Susis in the chefe cite, which lyeth in the londe off Elam) and in y vision, me thought I was by the ryuer off Vlai.

Then I loked vp, and sawe: and beholde there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hyst came vp last. I sawe that this ramme puszhed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes might stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listed, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then came there an hegoate from the west, ouer the whole earth, and touched not the grounde.

This goate had a maruelous goodly horne betwixe his eyes, and came vnto the ramme, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne fearcelly vpon him with his might. I sawe him drawe nye vnto the ramme, beyng very feare vpon him: yee he gaue him soch a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Nether had the ramme so moch strength as to stonde before him: but he kest him downe, trodde him vnder his fete: and no man was able to delyuer the ramme out of his power.

The goate waxed excedinge greate, and when he was at the strongest, his greate horne was broken also. Then grewe there other foure soch like in the steade, towarde the foure wyndes off the heauen. <sup>a</sup> Yee out of one of the leest off these hornes, there came vp yet another horne, which waxed maruelous greate: towarde the south, towarde the east, and towarde the fayre pleasaunt londe. It grewe vp to the hoost off heauen, wherof it dyd cast some downe to the grounde, and off the starres also, and trode them vnder fete.

Yee it grewe vp vnto the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary casten downe. And a certayne season was geuen vnto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (because of wickednesse) that it might cast downe the verite to the grounde, and so to prospere in all thinges, that it went aboute. Vpon this I herde one off the sayntes speakyng, which saynte sayde vnto one that axed this question:

How longe shall this vision off the daylie sacrifice and of the waistinge abhominacion endure: that the Sanctuary and the power shall so be troden vnder fote? And he answered him: Vnto the euenyng † the morninge, euen two thousande and thre hūdreth dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be clensed agayne.

Now when I Daniel had sene this vision, and sought for the vnderstandinge of it: beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And I herde a mans voyce in the ryuer off Vlai, which cryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstonde the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afrayed at his cōminge, and fell downe vpon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marcke well, for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfilled. Now as he was speakyng vnto me, I waxed faynte, so that I suncke downe to the grounde. But he toke holde vpon me, and set me vp agayne, sayenge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last wrath: for in the tyme appoynted it shal be fulfilled.

The ramme which thou sawest with the two hornes, is the kyng off the Medes ad Perses: but the goate is the kyng off Greke londe: the greate horne that stode betwixe his eyes, that is the pryncipall kyng. But where as it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade: it signifieth, that out of this people shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

After these kyngdomes (whyle vngodlynnesse is a growinge) there shall aryse a kyng off an vnshamefast face, which shall be wyse in darcke speakynges.

He shalbe mightie and stronge, but not in his owne strength. He shall destroye aboue measure, and all that he goeth aboute, shall prospere: he shall slaye the stronge and holy people. And thorow his craftynes, falsede shall prospere in his honde, his herte shall be proude, and many one shall he put to death in his welthynesse. He shal stonde vp agaynst the prynce off prynces, but he shalbe destroyed without honde. <sup>a</sup>And this vision that is shewed vnto the, is as sure as the evenynge and the morninge. Therefore wryte thou vp this sight, <sup>d</sup>for it wylbe longe or it come to passe.

Vpon this was I Daniel very faynte, so that I laye sicke certayne dayes: but when I rose vp, I wente aboute the kynges busynesse, and marueled at the vision, neuerthelesse no man knewe of it.

The ii. Chapter.

IN the first yere off Darius the sonne off Ahasuerus, <sup>c</sup>which was of the sede off the Medes, <sup>τ</sup>was made kyng ouer the realme off the Caldees: Yee euen in the first yere off his raigne, I Daniel desyred to knowe the yearly nombre out of the booke, <sup>d</sup>wherof the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet: that Ierusalem shulde lie waist lxx. yeres: <sup>ad</sup>I turned me vnto God the LORDE, <sup>e</sup>for to praye and make myne intercessio, with fastinge, sack cloth <sup>ad</sup>ashes I prayed before the LORDE my God, and knowleged, sayenge:

O LORDE, thou greate <sup>τ</sup>fearfull God, thou that kepest couenaut and mercy with them, which loue the, and do thy commaundementes: <sup>f</sup>We haue synned, we haue offended, we haue bene disobedient and gone backe: yee we haue departed from all thy preceptes and iudgments.

We wolde neuer folowe thy seruantes the prophetes, that spake in thy name to oure kynges and prynces to oure fore fathers, and to all the people off the londe. <sup>o</sup>O LORDE, rightuousnesse belongeth vnto the, vnto vs pertayneth nothyng but open shame: as it is come to passe this daye vnto euery man off Iuda, and to them that dwell at Ierusalem:

Yee vnto all Israel, whether they be farre or nye: thorow out all londes, wherin thou hast strowed them, because of the offences that they had done agaynst the.

Yee o LORDE, vnto vs, to oure kinges <sup>τ</sup>prynces, to oure fore fathers: euen to vs all, that haue offended the, <sup>b</sup>belongeth open shame.

33 But vnto the o LORDE oure God, pertayneth mercy and foregouenness. As for vs, we are gone backe from him, and haue not obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in his lawes, which he layed before vs by his seruantes the prophetes: <sup>e</sup>yee all Israel haue transgressed, and gone backe from thy lawe, so that they haue not herkened vnto thy voyce.

<sup>b</sup>Wherfore the curse and ooth, that is written in the law of Moses the seruaut of God (against whom we haue offended) is poured vpon vs. And he hath perfourmed his wordes, <sup>f</sup>which he spake agaynst vs, <sup>τ</sup>agaynst oure iudges that iudged vs: to bringe vpon vs such a greate plage, as neuer was vnder heauen, like as it is now come to passe in Ierusalem. Yee all this plage, as it is written in the lawe of Moses, is come vpon vs. Yet made we not oure prayer before the LORDE oure God, that we might turne agayne from oure wickednesse, and to be lerned in thy verite. Therefore hath <sup>γ</sup>LORDE made haist, to bringe this plage vpon vs: for the LORDE oure God is rightuous, in all his workes which he doth: for why, we wolde not harken vnto his voyce.

And now, o LORDE oure God, thou that <sup>m</sup>with a mightie honde hast brought thy people out of Egipte, to get thy self a name, which remaineth this daye: we haue synned (o LORDE) <sup>τ</sup>done wickedly agaynst all thy rightuousnes: yet let thy wrothfull displeasure be turned awaye (I bescke the) from thy cite Ierusalem thy holy hill. And why? for oure synnes sake and for the wickednesse of oure forefathers: is Ierusalem and thy people abhorred, of all them that are aboute vs. Now therefore (O oure God) heare the prayer of thy seruaut, and his intercession: O let thy face shyne ouer thy sanctuary, that lieth waist.

O my God, enclyne thine eare, and herken (at the leest for thine owne sake) open thine eyes: beholde how we be desolated, yee and the cite also, which is called after thy name: For we do not cast oure prayers before the in oure owne rightuousnesse, no: but only in thy greate mercies. O LORDE, heare: O forgeue LORDE: O LORDE conside, tary not ouer longe: but for thine owne sake do it, O my God: for thy cite and thy people is called after thy name.

As I was yet speakinge at my prayers, <sup>n</sup>knowleginge myne owne synnes and <sup>γ</sup>synnes of my people, makinge so myne intercession before the LORDE my God, for the holy hils sake of my God: yee whyle I was yet speakinge in my prayer, beholde. the mā Gabriel (<sup>a</sup>whom I had sene afore in the vision) came flyenge to me, and touched me aboute <sup>f</sup> offeringe tyme in the euenynge. He in-100 <sup>f</sup>formed me, and spake vnto me: O Daniel (sayde he) I am now come, to make the vnderstonde it: For as soone as thou beganest to make thy prayer, it was so diuysed, and therefore am I come to shewe the. <sup>b</sup> And why? for thou art a man greatly beloned.

Wherefore, ponde the matter wel, that thou mayest lerne, to vnderstonde the vision. Lxx. wekes are determind ouer thy people, <sup>c</sup> and ouer thy holy cite: that the wickednesse maye be consumed, that the synne maye haue an ende, that the offence maye be reconciled, and to bringe in euerlastinge rightuousnesse, to fulfill <sup>f</sup> visions and the prophetes, and to anoynte the most holy one. Vnderstode this then, and marcke it well: <sup>c</sup> that from the tyme it shalbe concluded, to go and repayre Ierusalem agayne, vnto Christ (or the anoynted) prynce: there shalbe seuen wekes. Then shall the stretes <sup>c</sup> and walles be buylded agayne lxij. wekes, but with harde troublous tyme. Afther these lxij. wekes, shal Christ be slayne, <sup>c</sup> they shal haue no pleasure in him. Then shal there come a people with the prynce, and destroye the cite and the sanctuary: and his ende shal come as the water floude. But the desolacion shall continue till the ende of the batell.

He shall make a stronge bonde with many, for the space of a weke: and when the weke is half gone, he shal put downe the slayne and meatoffringe. <sup>d</sup> And in the temple there shalbe an abhominable desolaciō, till it haue destroyed all. And it is concluded, <sup>f</sup> this waistinge shal continue vnto the ende.

The x. Chapter.

105 <sup>a</sup> IN the thirde yeaere of kinge Cyrus of Persia, there was shewed vnto Daniel (otherwise called Balthasar) a matter, yee a true matter, but it is yet a long tyme vnto it.

He vnderstode the matter well, and perceived what the vision was. At the same tyme, I Daniel mourned for the space of thre wekes, so that I had no lust to eate bred: as for flesh and wyne, there came none within my mouth: No, I dyd not ones anoynte my self, till the whole thre wekes were out.

Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the first moneth, I was by the greate floude, called Tigris: I lift vp myne eyes, and lokod: and beholde, a man clothed in lynnyng, <sup>c</sup> whose loynes were gyrded vp with fyne golde of Araby: his body was like the Christolite stone, his face (to lōke vpon) was like lightenyng, his eyes as the flame of fyre, his armes and fete were like fayre glisteringe metall, but the voyce of his wordes was like <sup>f</sup> voyce of a multitude.

<sup>c</sup> I Daniel alone sawe this vision, the men that were with me, sawe it not: but a greate fearfulnessse fell vpon them, so that they fled awaye, and hyd them selues. I was left there my self alone, and sawe this greate vision, so longe til there remayned nomore strength within me: Yee I lost my coloure clene, I waisted awaye, and my strength was gone. Yet herde I the voyce of his wordes: <sup>c</sup> as soone as I herde it, fayntnesse came vpon me, and I fell downe flat to the grounde vpon my face. And beholde, an hande touched me, which set me vp vpon my knees <sup>c</sup> and vpon the palmes of my hondes, sayenge vnto me: <sup>c</sup> O Daniel, thou well beloued man: take good hede of the wordes, that I shal saye vnto <sup>f</sup>, <sup>c</sup> stōde right vp, for vnto <sup>f</sup> am I now sent.

And when he had sayde these wordes, I stode vp tremblinge. Then saide he vnto me: feare not Daniel: for why, sence the first daye that thou set thine herte to vnderstonde, and didest chasten thy self before thy God: thy wordes haue bene herde. And I had come vnto the whē thou beganest to speake, had not the prynce ouer the kingdome of the Perses with stonde me xxj. dayes. But lo, Michael one of the chefe prynces, <sup>c</sup> came to helpe me, him haue I left by the kinge of Persia, <sup>c</sup> and am come to shewe the, what shal happen vnto thy people in the latter dayes: for it wilbe lōge yet or the vision be fulfilled.

Now when he had spoken these wordes vnto me, I kest downe my heade to <sup>f</sup> grounde, and helde my tunge. Beholde, there touched my lippes one, very like vnto a man. Then opened I my mouth, and sayde vnto him, that stode before me: O my lorde, my ioyntes are lowsed in the vision, and there is no more strēgth within me: How maye my lordes seruaunt then talke with my lorde? seinge there is no strength in me, so that I can not take my breth? Vpon this there touched me agayne, one moch like a man, & comforted me, sayenge: "O thou man so wel beloued, feare not: be content, take a good herte vnto the, and be stronge. So when he had spoken vnto me, I recovered, & sayde: Speake on my lorde, for thou hast refreszshed me. Thē sayde he: knowest thou wherfore I am come vnto ŷ? now wil I go agayne to fight with the prynce of the Perses. As soone as I go forth, lo, the prynce of Grekelonde shal come. Neuertheles, I wil shewe the the thinge, ŷ is fast noted in the scripture of treuth. And as for all yonder matters, there is none that helpeth me in them, but Michael youre prynce.

The xi. Chapter.

AND in the first yere of Darius of Media, I stode by him, to comforte him, & to strength him, and now wil I shewe the the treuth. Beholde, there shal stonde vp yet three kynges in Persia, but ŷ fourth shal be farre richer then they all. And when he is in the chefest power of his riches, he shal prouoke every man agaynst the realme of Grekelonde. Then shal there arise yet a mightie kinge, that shal rule with greate dominion, and do what him list. <sup>a</sup> And as soone as his kingdome commeth vp, it shalbe destroyed, & <sup>c</sup> deuyded towarde ŷ foure wyndes of the heauen. They ŷ come after him, shall not haue soch power & dominion as he: but his kingdome shalbe scatred, yee euen amonge other thē those. And the kyng of ŷ south shalbe mightier, then his other prynces. Agaynst him there shal one make himself strōge, & shal rule his dominiō with greate power.

But after certayne yeares they shalbe ioyned together, & the kynges daughter of the south shall come to the kyng of the north, for to make frēdshipe, but she shal not optayne the power of that arme, nether shall she be able to endure thorow his might: but she, & such as brought her (yee & he ŷ begat her, & comforted her for his tyme) shalbe deluyered vp. B Out of ŷ braunches of hir rote, there shal one stonde vp in his steade: which with power of armes shal go thorow the kynges londe of the north, & handle him accordinge to his strength. As for their Idols & prynces, with their costly

Iewels of golde & syluer, he shal cary them awaye captuyes in to Egipte, and he shal preuayle agaynst the kyng of the north certayne yeares. And when he is come in to ŷ kynges realme of ŷ south, he shal be fayne to turne agayne in to his owne londe. Wherfore his sonnes shalbe displeased, and shal gather together a mightie greate hoost of people: and one of them shal come, and go thorow like a waterfloude: then shal he returne, and go forth with defenyge and boostinge vnto his owne londe.

Thē the kinge of ŷ south shalbe angrie, and shal come forth to fight agaynst the kinge of the north: Yee he shall bringe a greate multitude of people together, and a greate heape shalbe geuē in to his honde: these shal he cary awaye with greate pryde, for so moch as he hath cast downe so many thousandes, neuertheles he shall not preuayle. For ŷ kyng of ŷ north shal gather (of the new) a greater heape of people theu afore, & come forth (after a certayne tyme and yeares) with a mightie hoost & exceedinge greate good.

At the same tyme there shall many stonde C vp agaynst the kinge of the south, so that ŷ wicked children of thy people also shal exalte them selues (to fulfill the vision) and then fall. So the kinge of the north shall come to laye sege, and to take the strōge fensed cities: And the power of thē of ŷ south shal not be able to abyde him, & the best men of the people shall not be so stronge, as to resist him. Shortly, when he commeth, he shall handle him as he list, & no man shalbe so hardy as to stonde agaynst him. He shal stōde in the pleasaunt countre, which thorow him shalbe destroyed. He shal set his face with all his power to optayne his kingdome, & to be like it. Yee that shal he do, & geue him vnto the daughters amōge women, to destroye him. But he shal fayle, nether shal he optayne his purpose. After this, shall he set his face vnto the Iles, & take many of thē. A prynce shal stoppe him, to do him a shame, besyde the confucion that els shal come vnto him. Thus shal he turne agayne to his owne londe, stōmble, & fall, and be nomore founde: so he that came vpon him & dyd him violence, shal stonde in his place, & haue a pleasaunt kingdome: and after few dayes he shal be destroyed, & that nether in wrath ner

Din batell. In his steade there shal aryse a vyle person not holdē worthy of a kinges dignite: this shall come in craftely, & optayne the kingdome with fayre wordes: he shal fight agaynst the armes of the mightie (& destroye them,) yee & agaynst the prynce of the couenaunt.

So after  $\hat{y}$  he hath taken truce with him, he shal hadle disceatfully: that he maye get vp, & ouer come him with a small flocke: & so with craftynesse to get him to  $\hat{y}$  fattest place of the londe, and to deale otherwise, then ether his fathers or graūdfathers dyd. For he shal destroye the thinge,  $\hat{y}$  they had robbed & spoyled, yee & all their substance: ymagynynge thoughtes agaynst the strōge holdes, & that for a tyme. His power and herte shalbe sterred vp with a greate armye agaynst the kinge of the south: where thorow the kinge of the south shalbe moued then vnto batell, with a greate & mightie hoost also. Neuerthelesse, he shal not be able to stonde, for they shall conspyre agaynst him. Yee they  $\hat{y}$  eate of his meate, shal hurte him: so that his hoost shal fall, & many be slayne downe.

These two kinges shalbe mynyd to do myschefe, & talke of disceate at one table: but they shal not prospere: "for why, the ende shal not come yet, vnto the tyme apoynted. Thē shall he go home agayne in to his owne londe with greate good, & set his herte agaynst the holy couenaunt, he shalbe busy agaynst it, & then returne home. At the tyme apoynted he shal come agayne, & go towarde the south: So shall it happen otherwise then at the first, yet ones agayne. And why, the shippes of Cythim shal come vpon him, that he maye be smytten & turne agayne:  $\hat{y}$  he maye take indignacion agaynst the couenaunt of holynes, to medle agaynst it. Yee he shal turne him, & drawe soch vnto him, as leaue the holy couenaunt.

¶ He shal set mightie men to vnhalowe the sanctuary of strēgh, to put downe the daylie offeringe, & to set vp the abhominable desolacion. And soch as breake the couenaunt, shal he flatre with fayre wordes. But  $\hat{y}$  people that wil kouwe their God, shal haue the ouerhāde and prospere. Those also that haue vnderstandinge amonge the people, shal enfourme the multitude: & for a longe season, they shalbe persecuted with swearde, with fyre, with captyuyn & with the takynge awaye of their goodes. Now whē they fall, they shalbe set vp with a litle helpe: but many shal cleue vnto them faynedly.

Yee some of those which haue vnderstondynge shal be persecuted also:  $\hat{y}$  they maye be tryed, purified & clēsed, till the tyme be out: for there is yet another tyme apoynted. The kinge shal do what him list, he shal exalte and magnifie himself agaynst all, that is God.<sup>c</sup> Yee he shall speake maruelous thinges agaynst the God of all goddes, wherin he shal prospere, so<sup>d</sup> longe till the wrath be fulfilled, for the conclusion is deuyed alreedy. He shal not regarde the God of his fathers, but his lust shall be vpon womē: Yee he shal not care for eny God, for he shal magnifie himself aboue all. In his place shal he worshipe the mightie Idols: & the god whom his fathers knewe not, shal he honour with golde and syluer, with precious stones and pleasaunt Iewels.

This shal he do, sekinge helpe and succoure at the mightie Idols and straunge goddes. Soch as wil receaue him, and take him for God, he shal geue them greate worshippe and power: yee and make them lordes of the multitude, and geue them the londe with rewardes. In the latter tyme, shal the kinge of the south stryue with him: and the kinge of the north in like maner shall come agaynst him with charettes, horsmen & with a greate nauy of shippes. He shal come in to the londes, destroye and go thorow: he shal entre also in to the fayre pleasaunt londe. "Many cities & countrees shal decaye, excepte Edom, Moab & the best of the children of Ammon, which shal escape from his honde. He shall stretch forth his hōdes vpon the countrees, & the londe of Egipte shal not escape him. For thorow his goinge in, he shal haue dominion ouer the treasures of syluer & golde, & ouer all the precious Iewels of Egipte, Lybia and Ethiopia. <sup>f</sup> Neuerthelesse the tydings out of the east and the north shall trouble him, for the which cause he shal go forth to destroye & curse a greate multitude. The tentes of his palace shall he pych betwixte the two sees, vpon the hill of the noble sanctuary,<sup>g</sup> for he shal come to the ende of it, and then shal no man helpe him.

The iij. Chapter.

A THE tyme wil come also, that the greate prynce Michael,<sup>a</sup> which stondesth on thy peoples syde, shal aryse vp, for there shal come a tyme of trouble,<sup>b</sup> soch as neuer was, sens there begane to be eny people, vnto that same tyme. Then shal thy people be deluyered, yee all those that be foude written in the boke. <sup>c</sup> Many of them that slepe in the dust of the earth, shal awake: some to euerlastinge life, some to perpetuall shame & re-profe. <sup>d</sup> The wyse (soch as haue taught other) shal glister, as the shyninge of heauen: and those that haue instructe the multitude vnto godlynnesse, shalbe as the starres, worlde without ende.

B And thou o Daniel, shut vp these wordes, & seale the boke, till the last tyme. Many shal go aboute here and there, and the shal knowlege increase. So I Daniel loked, and beholde, there stode other two: one vpon this shore of the water, the other vpon yonder syde. And one of the sayde vnto him, which was clothed in lynnynge, and stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: How louge shall it be to the ende of these wonderous workes? <sup>e</sup> Then herde I the man with the lynnynge clothes, which stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: when he helde vp his right and left honde vnto heauen, & sware by him which lyueth for euer: <sup>f</sup> that it shal tary for a tyme, two tymes & half a tyme: & when the power of the holy people is clene scatred abroad, the shal all these thynges be fulfilled.

I herde it well, but I vnderstode it not. <sup>g</sup> Then sayde I: O my lorde, what shal happen after that? He answered: Go thy waye Daniel, for these wordes shal be closed vp & sealed, till the last tyme: & many shalbe purified, clensed & tried. But the vngodly shall lyue wickedly, and those wicked (as many of the as they be) shal haue no vnderstandinge. <sup>h</sup> As for soch as haue vnderstandinge, they shal regarde it. And from y tyme forth that the daylie offerynge shalbe put downe & the abhominable desolacion set vp, there shalbe a thousande two hundred & xc. dayes. O well is him, that waiteth, & cometh to the thousande iij. C. & xxxv. dayes. Go thou thy waye now, till it be ended: take thy rest, and byde in thy lot, till the dayes haue an ende.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Oseas the sonne of Beeri, in the dayes of Osiat,<sup>a</sup> Ioathan, Achas & Ezechias kinges of Iuda: and in the tyme of Ieroboam the sonne of Ioas kynge of Israel.

The first Chapter.

FIRST, when the LORDE spake vnto Oseas, he saide vnto him: Go thy waye, take an harlot to thy wife, and get childrē by her: <sup>b</sup>for the lōde hath cōmitted greate whoredome agaynst the LORDE. So he wente, and toke Gomer y<sup>e</sup> daughter of Deblaim: which conceaued, and brought forth a sonne. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: <sup>c</sup>call his name Iesrael, for I wil shortly auenge the bloude of Iesrael vpon the house of Iehn, and will bringe the kingdome of the house of Israel to an ende. Then will I breake the bowe of Israel, in the valley of Iesrael.

B She concealed vnto agayne, and bare a doughter. And he sayde vnto him: Call hir name Loruhamā (that is, not opteyninge mercy)<sup>a</sup> for I wil haue no pyte vpon the house of Israel, but forget them, and put them clene out of remembraunce. <sup>b</sup>Neuerthelesse I wil haue mercy vpon the house of Iuda, & wil saue them, euen thorow the LORDE their God. But I wil not deliyuer them thorow eny bow, swerde, batel, horses or horsmen.

Now when she had weened Loruhamā, she concealed agayne, & bare a sonne. Then sayde he: call his name Lo Amī (that is to saye, not my people.) For why? ye are not my people, therefore will not I be yours. <sup>c</sup>And though the nombre of the children of Israel be as the sonde of the see, which can nether be measured ner tolde: Yet in the place where it is sayde vnto them, ye be not my people: euen there shall it be thus reported of them: they be ſy childrē of the Iuyngē God. <sup>d</sup>Then shal the children of Iuda and the childrē of Israel be gathered together agayne, & chose them selues one heade, and then departe out of the londe: for greateshalbe the daye of Iesrael.

The ij. Chapter.

A TELL youre brethren, that they are my people: and youre susteren, that they haue optayned mercy. As for youre mother, ye shal chyd with her, and reprove her: for she is not my wife,<sup>e</sup> nether am I hir huszbdō: vnlesse she put awaye hir whordome out of my sight, and hir aduouty from hir brestes. Yf no, I shal strype her naked, & set her, euen as she came in to ſy worlde:<sup>f</sup> Yee I shal laye hir waist, and make her like a wildernes, and slaye her for thyrste. I shal haue no pite also vpon hir children,<sup>g</sup> for they be the children of fornicacion.

Their mother hath broken hir wedlocke, and she that bare them, is come to cōfucion. <sup>h</sup>For she sayde: I wil go after my louers, that geue me my water and my bred, my woll & my flax, my oyle and my drynke. But I will hedge hir waye with thornes, and stoppe it, that she shal not fynde hir fotestoppes: and though she runne after hir louers, yet shall she not get them: she shal seke them, but not fynde them. Then shal she saye: well, I will go turne agayne to my first huszbonde, for at ſy tyme was I better at ease, then now. <sup>i</sup>But this wolde she not knowe, where as I yet gaue her corne, wyne, oyle, syluer and golde, which she hath hanged vpon Baal.

<sup>j</sup>Wherefore now will I go take my corne & wyne agayne in their season, and fet agayne my woll and my flax, which I gaue her, to couer hir shame. <sup>k</sup>And now will I dyscouer hir foolishnesse, euen in the sight of hir louers, and no man shal deliyuer her out of my hondes. Morouer, I wil take awaye all hir myrth,<sup>l</sup> hir holy dayes, hir new moones, hir Sabbathes and all hir solempne feastes: I will destroye hir vynyards and fyge trees, though she saith: lo, here are my rewardes, that my louers haue geuen me. I wil make it a wodde, and the wyld beestes shall eate it vp: I will punysh her also for the dayes of Baal,<sup>m</sup> wherin she censured him, deckyngē him with hir earynges and cheynes: when she folowed hir louers, and forgat me, saith the LORDE.

Wherefore beholde, I wil call her againe, bringe her in to a wildernes, and speake frendly vnto her: there wil I geue her hir vynyards agayne,<sup>n</sup> yee and the valley of Achor also, to shewe hir hope & comforte. Then shal she synge there as in the tyme of hir youth, & like as in the daye <sup>o</sup>when she came out of the londe of Egipte. Then (saith the LORDE) <sup>p</sup>she shal saye vnto me: O my houszbande, & shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, yee she shal neuer remembre their names eny more. <sup>q</sup>Then will I make a couenaunt with them, with the wyld beastes, with the foules of the ayre, & with enery thinge that crepeth vpon the earth.

<sup>r</sup>As for bowe, swerde and batel, I will destroye soch out of the londe, & wil make them to slepe safely. <sup>s</sup>Thus wil I mary the vnto myne owne self for euermore: yee euen to my self wil I mary the, in rightuousnesse, in equitye, in lounge kyndnesse and mercy. In faith also will I mary the vnto my self, & thou shalt knowe the LORDE. At the same tyme will I shewe my self frendly and gracious vnto

 shal helpe the earth, and the earth shal helpe
 the corne, wyne and oyle, and they shal helpe Iesrael. I wil sowe them vpō earth, for a sede

 y<sup>e</sup> was without mercy. And to thē which were not my people,<sup>a</sup> I wil saye: thou art my people. And he shal saye: thou art my God.

The iij. Chapter

 yet thy waye ⁊ wowe an aduouterous womā, whō thy neghbour loueth, as y<sup>e</sup> LORDE doth the childrē of Israel: how be it they haue respecte to straunge goddes,<sup>b</sup> and loue the wyne kannes. So I gat her for xv. syluerlinges, and for an Homer and an half of barley, ⁊ sayde vnto her: Thou shalt byde with me a longe season, but se that thou playest not the harlot, and loke thou medle with none other man, ⁊ then wil I kepe my self for the.

B Thus the childrē of Israel shal syt a greate whyle without kinge and pryncce,<sup>c</sup> without offeringe and aulter, without prest and reuelacion. But after warde shal the children of Israel conuerte, and seke the LORDE their God, and <sup>d</sup>Dauid their kinge: and in y<sup>e</sup> latter dayes they shal worshippe the LORDE, and his louynge kyndnesse.

The iij. Chapter.

HEARE y<sup>e</sup> worde of the LORDE, o ye children of Israel: For the LORDE must punysh thē, y<sup>e</sup> dwel in the londe. And why? There is no faithfulness, there is no mercy, there is no knowlege of God in the lōde: but swearing, lyēge, māslaughter, theft and adoutry haue gotten the ouerhande, ⁊ one bloudgiltynesse foloweth another. Therefore shal the londe be in a miserable case, and all they that dwell therein, shal mourne. The beastes in the felde, the foules in y<sup>e</sup> ayre, and the fishes in the see shall dye. Yet is there none, that wil chastē nor reproue another.
 The prestes which shulde reforme other mē,
 are become like the people.

B Therefore stonblest thou in y<sup>e</sup> daye tyme, ⁊ the prophet with the in the night. I wil bringe thy mother to sylence, ⁊ why? <sup>e</sup>my people perish, because they haue no knowlege. Seinge then that thou hast refused vnderstandinge, therefore wil I refuse y<sup>e</sup> also: so that thou shalt nomore be my prest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil also forget thy childrē. The more they increased in multitude, the more they synned agaynst me, therefore wil I chaunge their honoure in to shame. <sup>f</sup>They eate vp the synnes of my people, ⁊ corage them in their wickednesse. <sup>g</sup>Thus the prest is become like the people. <sup>h</sup>Wherefore I will punysh them for their wicked wayes, ⁊ corage them in their acordinge to their owne ymaginacions. They shal eate, ⁊ not haue ynough: They haue vsed whordome, therefore shall they not prosper: ⁊ why? they haue forsaken the LORDE, ⁊ not regarded him.

Whordome, wyne and dronckennesse take the herte awaye. <sup>i</sup>My people axe counel at their stockes, their staffe must tell them. For an whorish mynde hath disceaued them, so y<sup>e</sup>
 they cōmitte fornicacion agaynst their God.
<sup>j</sup>They make sacrifice vpon the hie moun-taynes, ⁊ burne their incense vpon the hilles, yee amouge the okes, groues ⁊ buszshes, for there are good shadowes. Therefore youre daughters are become harlottes, and youre spouses haue brokē their wedlocke I wil not punish youre daughters for beinge defyled, ⁊ youre brydes that became whores: <sup>k</sup>seinge the fathers them selues haue medled with har-lottes, and offered with vnthriftes: but the people that wil not vnderstonde, must be punyshed.

Though thou Israel art disposed to playe y<sup>e</sup>
 harlot, yet shuldest not thou haue offended, o Iuda: <sup>l</sup>thou shuldest not haue runne to Galgala, ner haue gone vp to Bethauē, ner haue sworne: the LORDE lyueth. For Israel is gone backe, like a wāton cowe. The LORDE therefore shal make hir fede, as y<sup>e</sup> lābe y<sup>e</sup> goeth astraye. And where as Ephraim is become partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. Their dronckēnesse hath put thē backe, ⁊ brought them to whordome. Their rulers loue rewardes, brynge (saye they,) to their owne shame. A wynde shall take holde of their fethers, ⁊ they shal be cōfounded in their offerings.

The v. Chapter.

HEARE this, o ye prestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Israel: geue eare, o thou kingly house: for this punyshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spred net vnto the mount of Thabor: They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therwith: <sup>a</sup>therfore wil I punysh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, & Israel is not hyd fro me: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Israel is defyled. They are not mynded to turne vnto their God, for they haue an whorish herte, so <sup>y</sup> they can not knowe the LORDE.

<sup>b</sup> But the pryde of Israel wil be rewarded him in his face, yee both Israel and Ephraim shal fall for their wickednesse, and Iuda with them also. They shall come with their shepe & bullockes to seke <sup>y</sup> LORDE, <sup>d</sup> but they shal not fynde him, for he is gone from them. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastarde children: a moneth therfore shall deuoure them with their porcions.

<sup>f</sup> When Ephraim sawe his sicknesse, and Iuda his disease: Ephraim wente vnto Assur, and sent vnto kinge Iareb: yet coude not he helpe you, ner ease you of youre payne. I am vnto Ephraim as a lyon, and as a lyons whelp to the house of Iuda. Euen I, I wil spoyle them, & go my waye. I wil take them with me, and no man shal rescue them. I wil go, and returne to my place, till they waxe faynt, and seke me.

The vi. Chapter

IN their aduersite they shall seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: <sup>g</sup> for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: He hath wounded vs, & he shal bynde vs vp agayne: after two dayes shal he quyen vs, in the thirde daye he shal rase vs vp, so that we shal lyue in his sight. Then shal we haue vnderstandinge, & endeouore oure selues to knowe the LORDE. He shal go forth as the sprynge of the daye, <sup>h</sup> and come vnto vs as the euenynge and mornynge rayne vpon the earth.

O Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the? O Iuda, how shal I intreate the? seynge youre loue is like a mornynge cloude, & like a dew <sup>y</sup> goeth early awaye. <sup>3</sup> Therfore haue I cut downe the prophetes, & letten them be slayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punyshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in lounynge kyndnesse, and not in offeringe: <sup>i</sup> Yee in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. <sup>j</sup> But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of theues, murderers & bloudthurstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. <sup>k</sup> Horrible thinges haue I sene in the house of Israel, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Israel is defyled: but Iuda shall haue an haruest for himself, when I returne the captiuyte of my people.

The viij. Chapter.

WHEN I vndertake to make Israel <sup>3</sup> whole, then the vngraciousnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria cometh to light: then go they aboute with lyes. At home, they be theues: and without, they fall to robberyng. They cosidre not in their hertes, that I remembre all their wickednes. They go aboute with their owne ynuenciōs, but I se them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the princes, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lyes. All these burne in aduouty, as it were an ouen <sup>y</sup> the baker heateth, whē he hath lefte kneadinge, till the dowe be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode droncken thorow wyne: they vse familiarite with soch as disceaue thē. They with the ymaginacion of their herte are like an ouē, their slepe is all <sup>y</sup> night like the <sup>3</sup> sleep of a baker, in the mornynge is he as hote as the flame of fyre: they are altogether as hote as an ouen.

They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are falle: yet is there none of the y calleth vpon me. Therefore must Ephraim be mixte amonge y Heithen. Ephraim is become like a cake, y no man turneth: straungers haue deuoured his strength, yet he regardeth it not: he waxeth ful of gray haire, yet wil he not knowe it: y y pride of Israel is cast downe before their face, y yet wil they not turne to the LORDE their God, ner seke him, for all this.

¶ Ephraim is like a doue, that is begyled, and hath no herte. <sup>a</sup> Now call they vpon the Egipcians, now go they to the Assirians: but whyle they be goinge here and there, I shall sprede my net ouer them, y drawe them downe as y foules of the ayre: and accordinge as they haue bene warned, so will I punysh them. <sup>b</sup> Wo be vnto them, for they haue forsake me. They must be destroyed, for they haue set me at naught. <sup>c</sup> I am he that haue redeemed them, and yet they dyssemble with me. They call not vpon me with their hartes, but lye youlinge vpon their beddes. Where as they come together, it is but for meate y drinke, and me will they not obeye. I haue taught them, and defended their arme, yet do they ymagin myschefe agaynst me. They turne them selues, but not a right, y are become as a broken bowe. Their prynces shalbe slayne with the swearde, for the malice of their tungen, soch blasphemies haue they lerned in the londe of Egipte

The viij. Chapter.

¶ SET the horne to thy mouth, and blowe: <sup>a</sup> get the swiftly (as an Aegle) vnto the house of the LORDE: for they haue broken my couenaunt, and transgressed my lawe. Israel can saye vnto me: thou art my God, we knowe the: but he hath refused the thinge that is good, therefore shall the enemye folowe vpon him. <sup>b</sup> They haue ordered kinges, but not throw me: they haue made prynces, and I must not knowe of it. <sup>c</sup> Of their syluer and golde haue they made them ymages, to bringe them selues to destruccion.

<sup>a</sup> Thy calfe (O Samaria) shalbe taken awaye, for my wrothfull indignacion is gone forth agaynst the. How longe wil it be, or they can be censed? For the calfe came from Israel, the worke man made it, therefore can it be no God, but euen to a spyders webbe shal y calfe of Samaria be turned. They haue sowne wynde, therefore shal they reepe a storme.

Their sede shal beare no corne, there shal no meel be made of their increase: though fyre be, yet shall straungers deuoure it vp. Israel shall perish, the Gentiles shall entreate him as a foule vessel. Sens they went vp to the Assirians, they are become like a wyld asse in the deserte.

<sup>a</sup> Ephraim geueth rewardes to get louers, therefore are they scatred amonge the Heithen, there wil I gather them vp. They shal soone be weery of the burthen of kinges y prynces. Ephraim hath made many alturs to do wickednes, therefore shal the alturs turne to his synne. Though I shewe the my lawe neuer so moch, they counte it but straunge doctrine. Whereas they do sacrifice, offeringe the flesh and eatinge it: the LORDE will haue no pleasure therein: but wil remembre their wickednes, and punysh their synnes. <sup>b</sup> Israel turneth agayne in to Egipte, they haue forgotten him that made them, they buylde churches, and Iuda maketh many stronge cities: therefore wil I sende a fyre in to their cities, and it shal consume their places.

The ix. Chapter.

¶ DO not thou triumphe (O Israel) make <sup>a</sup> no boostinge more then the Heithen, for thou hast comitted adoutry agaynst thy God: straunge rewardes hast thou loued, more the all corne floores. <sup>b</sup> Therefore shall they nomore enioye the cornefloores and wynepresses, and their swete wyne shal fayle the. haue soch lust vnto, shal not come in the house of the LORDE. What wil ye do then in the solemne dayes, and in the feast of the LORDE? lo, they shall get them awaye for the destruccion, Egypte shal receaue them, ⁊ Noph shal bury them.

B The nettles shall ouergrowe their pleasaunt goodes, and burres shalbe in their tabernacles. Be ye sure (O Israel) the tyme of visitacion is come, the dayes of recompencing are at hande. As for the prophet, ye holde him for a foole: and him that is rich in the sprete, for a mad man: so greate is youre wickednes and malice. Ephraim hath made himself a watchman of my God, a prophet ⁊ is become a suare to do hurte in euery strete, and abhominacion in the house of his God. "They be gone to farre, ⁊ haue destroyed the selues, like as they dyd afore tyme at Gabaa. Therefore their wickednes shal be remēbred, and their synnes punyshed.

C I fande Israel like grapes in the wildernes, ⁊ sawe their fathers as the first fyges in ⁊ toppe of ⁊ fyge tre. But they are gone to Baal Peor, ⁊ runne awaie fro me to ⁊ shamefull Idoll, ⁊ are become as abhominable as their louers Ephraim flieth like a byrde, so shal their glory also: In so moch, ⁊ they shal nether begette, cōceauē ner beare children.

And though they bringe vp eny, yet will I make them childlesse amonge men. Yee wo shall come to them, when I departe from them. "Ephraim (as me thinke) is planted in welthinesse, like as Tyrus, but now must she bringe hir owne children forth to the manslayer.

O LORDE thou shalt geue them: what shalt thou geue them? geue them an vnfrutefull wombe and drye brestes. "All their wickednesse is done at Galgal, there do I abhorre them. For the vngraciousnes of their owne inuencions, I wil dryue them out of my house. I will loue them nomore, for all their prynces are vnfaithfull. Ephraim is hewen downe, their rote is dried vp, so ⁊ they shal bringe nomore frute: yee and though they bringe forth eny, yet wil I slaye euen the best beloued frute of their body. My God shall east them awaye, for they haue not bene obediēt vnto him, therefore shal they go astraye amonge the Heithen.

The r. Chapter.

ISRUEL was a goodly vyne, but he hath ⁊ brought forth vnprofitable frute: yee the more frute he had, the mo altuers he made: ⁊ more good I dyd to their londe, the more frendshipe shewed they to their ymages. Their herte is deuyded, therefore wil they be destroyed. The LORDE shall breake downe their ymages, he shal destroye their altuers. Then shal they saye: we haue no kinge, for why? we haue not feared the LORDE. And what shal then the kinge do to vs? They comon together, and sweare vayne oothes: they be cōfederate together, therefore groweth their punyshment, as the wedes in the forowes of the londe.

They that dwell in Samaria haue worshipped the calfe of Bethauē: therefore shall the people mourne ouer them, yee and the prestes also, that in their welthynesse reioyced with them: and why? it shal passe awaye from them. It shalbe brought to the Assirian, for a present vnto kinge Iareb. Ephraim shal receaue full punishment: Israel shal be confounded for his owne ymaginacions, Samaria with his kinge shall vanish awaye, as the scombe vpon the water. The hye places of Auen where Israel do synne, shal be east downe: thistles and thornes shal growe vpon their altuers. Then shal they saye to ⁊ mountaynes: ⁊ couer vs, and to the hilles: fall vpon vs.

O Israel, thou hast synned as Gabaa dyd afore tyme, where they remayned: "shulde not the batel then come vpon the wicked children, as wel as vpon the Gabaonites? I wil chasten them, euen after myne owne desyre, the people shal be gathered together ouer them, whē I punysh them for their greate wickednesse. Ephraim was vnto me, as a ew that is used to go to plowe, therefore I loued him, and fell vpon his fayre neck. I ⁊ droue Ephraim, ⁊ Iuda plowed, ⁊ Iacob played the husbōde man: that they might sowe vnto rightuousnes, and reape the frutes of weldoyng: ⁊ they might plowe vp their fresh londe, and seke the LORDE, till he came, and lerned them rightuousnes.

The xi. Chapter.

WHEN Iſrael was yōge, I loued him:
<sup>a</sup> and called my ſonne out of the londe of Egipte. But y more they were called, the more they wente backe: offerynge vnto Idols, and cenſyng ymagēs. <sup>c</sup> I lerned Ephraim to go, and bare them in myne armes, but they regarded not me, that wolde haue helped them. I led them with coardes of frendſhippe, ⁊ bondes of loue. I was euen he, that layed the yocke vpon their neckes. <sup>d</sup> I gaue them their fodder my ſelf, y they ſhulde not go agayne in to Egipte: And now is Aſſur their kinge: For they wolde not turne vnto me. Therefore ſhal y ſwearde begynne in their cities, the ſtoare that they haue lickened vnto, ſhall be deſtroyed and eaten vp: and that becauſe of their owne ymaginations. My people hath no luſt to turne vnto me, <sup>e</sup> their prophetes laye the yocke vpon thē, but they eaſe them not of their burthen.

What greates things haue I geuen the, o
 Ephraim? how faithfully haue I defended the, o Iſrael? haue I dealt with the as with Adama? <sup>f</sup> or haue I intreated the like Se-boim? No, my hert is otherwiſe mynded.
 Yee my mercy is to feruent: therefore haue I not turned me to deſtroye Ephraim in my wrothful diſpleaſure. For I am God and no man, I am euen that holy one in the myddſt of the, though I came not within the cite.

The LORDE roareth like a lyon, that they maye folowe him: <sup>g</sup> Yee as a lyon roareth he,
 that they maye be afraied, like the children of the ſee: that they maye be ſcared awaye from Egipte, as men ſcarre byrdes: ⁊ frayed awaye (as doves vſe to be) from the Aſſiriās londe: and that becauſe I wolde haue them tary at home, ſaieth the LORDE. But Ephraim goeth aboute me with lies, and the houſe of Iſrael diſembleth. Only Iuda holdeth him with God, and with the true holy thinges.

The xij. Chapter.

EPHRAIM kepeth the ayre, and foloweth A
 after the eaſt wynde: he is euer increaſinge lyes ⁊ deſtruction. They be confederate with the Aſſirians, their oyle is caried in to Egipte. <sup>a</sup> The LORDE hath a courte to holde with Iuda, and wil punyſh Iacob: After their owne waies and acordinge to their owne inuencions, ſhal he recompence them. He toke hiſ brother by the hele, <sup>b</sup> when he was yet in hiſ mothers wombe: and in hiſ ſtrength he wreſtled with God. He ſtroue with the Angel, and gat the victory: ſo that he prayde and deſyred him. He fand him at Bethel, ⁊ there he talked with vs.

Yee the LORDE God of hoostes, euen y LORDE him ſelf remembered him: Then turne to thy God, kepe mercy and equitye, and hope ſtill in thy God. But the mar-chaunt hath a false weight in hiſ honde, he hath B a pleaſure to occupie extortion. <sup>c</sup> Ephraim thinketh thus: Tush, I am rich, I haue good ynough: In all my workes ſhal not one faute be founde, that I haue offended. Yet am I the LORDE thy God, euē as when I brought the out of the londe of Egipte, and ſet the in thy tentes, and as in the hye feaſt dayes.

I haue spokē thorow the prophetes, and ſhewed dyuerſe viſions, and declared my ſelf by the miniſtracion of y prophetes. But at Galaad is the abhominacion, they are fallen to vanyte. At Galgal they haue ſlayne oxen: <sup>d</sup> and as many heapes of ſtones as they had in their lode forowes, ſo many aulters haue they made. Iacob fled in to the londe of Siria, <sup>e</sup> and Iſrael ſerued for a wife, and for a wife
 he kepte ſhepe.

By a prophet the LORDE brought them out of Egipte, and by a prophet he preſerued thē. But Ephraim hath prouoked him to diſpleaſure thorow hiſ abhominacions: therfore ſhal hiſ bloude be poured vpon him ſelf, and the LORDE hiſ God ſhal rewarde him
 hiſ blaſphemies.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THE abhominacion of Ephraim is come also in to Israel. He is gone backe to Baal, therefore must he dye. <sup>a</sup> And now they synne more and more: of their syluer, they make them molten ymages, like the Idols of the Heithen, and yett all is nothinge but the worke of the craftesman. Notwithstōdinge they preach of the same: who so wil kysse the calves, offreth to men. Therefore they shalbe as the mornyng cloude, and as the dew that early passeth awaye: and like as dust that ſy wynde taketh awaye from the floore, and as smoke that goeth out of ſy chymney.

<sup>b</sup> I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the londe of Egipte: that thou shuldest knowe no God but me only, ⁊ that thou shuldest haue no Sauoure but only me. <sup>c</sup> I toke diligent hede of the in the wilderness that drye londe. But when they were wel fedde and had ynough, they waxed proude, and forgat me. <sup>d</sup> Therefore will I be vnto them as a lyon, and as a leoparde in ſy waye to the Assirians. I wil come vpon them as a she heer, that is robbed of hir welpes, and I wil breake that stubburne herte of theirs. There wil I deuoure them as a lyon: yee the wyld beastes shal teare them.

<sup>e</sup> O Israel, thou doest but destroye thy self, In me only is thy helpe. Where are thy kinges now, that shulde helpe the in all thy cities? Yee and thy iudges, of whom thou saydest: geue me a kinge and prynces? <sup>f</sup> Well, I gaue the a kinge in my wrath, and in my displeasure will I take him from the agayne. The wickednesse of Ephraim is bounde together, ⁊ his synne lieth hyd. Therefore shall sorowes come vpon him, as vpon a woman that traualeth. An vndiscrete sonne is he: for he considreth not, that he shulde not haue bene able to haue endured in the tyme of his byrth, had not I defended him from the graue, and deluyered him from death.

<sup>g</sup> O death, I wil be thy death: o hell, I wil be thy synge. Yet can I se no comforth, for when he is now the goodliest amonge the brethren, the east wynde (euen the wynde of the LORDE) shal come downe from the wilderness, and drye vp his condytes, and drynke vp his welles: he shal spoyle the treasure of all pleasant vessels.

<sup>h</sup> As for Samaria, they shalbe made waist, ⁊ why? they are disobedient vnto their God. They shal perish with the sward, their children shalbe slayne, and their women bygg with childe shalbe ryppe vp.

The xiiij. Chapter.

TURNE the now (o Israel) vnto ſy LORDE thy God, <sup>i</sup> for thou hast taken a great fall thorow thy wickednesse. Take these wordes with you, when ye turne to the LORDE, ⁊ saye vnto him: O forgene vs all oure synnes, receaue vs graciously, ⁊ then wil we offre ſy bullockes of oure lyppes vnto the. <sup>k</sup> Assur shalbe no more oure helper, nether will we ryde vpon horses eny more. As for the workes of oure hondes, we wil nomore call vpon them: For it is thou that art oure God, thou shewest euer mercy vnto the fatherlesse.

O (yf thy wolde do this) I shulde heale their sores: yee with all my herte wolde I loue them: so ſy my wrath shulde clene be turned awaye from them. Yee I wolde be vnto Israel as the dewe, and he shulde growe as ſy lylie, ⁊ his rote shulde breake out as Libanus. His branches shulde sprede out abroad, ⁊ be as fayre as the olyue tre, ⁊ smel as Libanus. They that dwel vnder his shadowe, shulde come agayne, ⁊ growe vp as the corne, ⁊ flourish as the vyne: he shulde haue as good a name, as the wyne of Libanus.

O Ephraim, what haue I to do with Idols eny more? I wil graciously heare him, ⁊ lede him forth. I wil be vnto the as a grene Fyrre tre, vpon me shalt thou fynde thy frute. Who so is wyse, shal vnderstonde this: ⁊ he ſy is right instructe, wil regarde it. ### The first Chapter.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Joel the sonne of Phatuel: Heare o ye elders: pōdre this wel, all ye that dwell in the lōde: yf euer there happened such a thinge in youre dayes, or in ſ dayes of youre fathers. Tell youre children of it, & let them shewe it vnto their children, & so they to certifye their posterite therof. <sup>a</sup>Loke what the caterpillar hath lefte, & hath the greshopper eaten vp: what the greshopper lefte, that hath the locuste eaten vp: & what the locuste hath lefte, that hath the blasinge consumed. Wake vp ye dronckardes, & wepe: mourne all ye wyne suppers, because of youre swete wyne, for it shal be taken awaye from youre mouth. Yee a mightie & an innumerable people shall come vp in to my londe: these haue teth like the teth of lyons, <sup>b</sup>& chaftebones like the lyonesses. They shal make my vinyarde waist, they shal pyll of the barckes of my fygetrees, strype them bare, cast them awaye, and make the braunches whyte.

Make thy mone as a virgin doth, & gyrdeth her selfe with sacke, because of hir bryde grome. For the meate & drynkofferynge shalbe taken awaye from the house of the LORDE: & the prestes & LORDES ministers shal mourne. The felde shalbe waisted, the londe shalbe in a miserable case: for the corne shalbe destroyed, the swete wyne shal come to confucion, & the oyle vtterly desolate. The huszbōde men & the wyne gardeners shal lōke piteously & make lamentacion, for the wheate wyne & barley, & because the haruest vpon the felde is so clene destroyed. The grapegatherers shal make greate mone, when the vynyarde & fygetrees be so vtterly waisted. Yee all the pomgranettes, palmtrees, apletrees & the other trees of the felde shall wyther awaye. Thus the mery cheare of the children of men, shal come to confucion.

Gyrde you, & make youre mone, o ye prestes: mourne ye ministres of the aluter: go youre waye in, & slepe in sackcloth, o ye officers of my God: for the meat & drynkofferynge shal be taken awaye from the house of youre God. Proclame a fastyng, call the cōgregacion, gather the elders & all the inhabitants of the londe together in to the house of the LORDE youre God, & crie vnto the LORDE: alas, alas for this daye. And why? the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from the Allmightie. Shal not ſ meates be taken awaye before oure eyes, the myrth also & ioye from the house of oure God? The sede shal perish in the grounde, the garners shall lye waist, the floores shalbe broken downe, for the corne shalbe destroyed. <sup>c</sup>O what a sighinge make the catell? the bullockes are very euel likynge, because they haue no pasture: and the shepe are fameszshed awaye.

O LORDE, to the will I crie : for the fyre hath consumed the goodly pastures of the wyldernesse, and the flame hath brent vp all the trees of the felde. Yee the wyld beestes crie also vnto the: for the water ryuers are dried vp, and the fyre hath consumed the pastures of the wyldernesse.

The ij. Chapter.

BLOWE out  $\hat{y}$  trompet in Sion,  $\tau$  crie vp $\circ$  my holy hill,  $\hat{y}$  all such as dwel in the londe, maye treble at it: for  $\hat{y}$  daie of the LORDE commeth,  $\tau$  is harde at honde: a dareke daye, a gloomyng daye, a cloudy daye, yee  $\tau$  a stormy daye, like as the mornynge spredeth out vp $\circ$  the hilles: Namely, a great  $\tau$  mightie people: such as haue not bene sens  $\hat{y}$  begynnynge, nether shal be after them for euermore. Before him shal be a consumynge fyre,  $\tau$  behynde him a burnynge flame. The londe shal be as a garden of pleasure before him, but behinde him shal it be a very waist wildernesse,  $\tau$  there is no man, that shal escape him. They are to loke vp $\circ$  like bayrded horses,  $\tau$  runne like horse men. They skyppe vp vpon  $\hat{y}$  hilles, as it were the sounde of charrettes: as the flame of fyre that consumeth the strawe, and as a mightie people redy to the batell.

B The folke shalbe afraied of him, all faces shal be as blacke as a pot. These shal rüne like giauntes,  $\tau$  leape ouer the walles like men of warre. Euery mā in his goinge shal kepe his arae,  $\tau$  not go out of his Path. There shal not one dryue another, but ech shal kepe his owne waye. They shal breake in at the wyndowes,  $\tau$  not be hurte: They shal come in to the cite,  $\tau$  runne vpon the walles: They shal clymme vp vpon the houses,  $\tau$  slyppe in at the wyndowes like a thefe. The earth shal quake before him, yee the heauens shalbe moued:  $\hat{a}$  the Sonne  $\tau$  Moone shal be darchened, and the starres shal withdrawe their shyne. The LORDE shal shewe his voyce before his hoost, for his hoost is greate, stronge  $\tau$  mightie to fulfill his commaundement. This is  $\hat{y}$  greate and maruelous fearfull daye of the LORDE: And who is able to abyde it?

C Now therefore saith the LORDE: Turne you vnto me with all youre hertes, with fastynge, wepyng and mournynge: rente youre hertes,  $\tau$  not youre clothes. Turne you vnto the LORDE youre God,  $\hat{a}$  for he is gracious  $\tau$  mercifull, longe sufferynge  $\tau$  of greate compassion:  $\tau$  redy to pardone wickednes. Then (no doute) he also shal turne,  $\tau$  forgeue:  $\tau$  after his chastenyng, he shal let youre increase remayne, for meat  $\tau$  drynck offerynge vnto the LORDE youre God? Blowe out with the tröpet in Sion, proclame a fastynge, call the congregacion,  $\tau$  gather the people together: warne the congregacion, gather the elders, bringe the children  $\tau$  suckynge together. Let  $\hat{y}$  brydegrome go forth of his chäbre,  $\tau$  the bryde out of her closet. Let the prestes serue the LORDE betwixte the porch  $\tau$   $\hat{y}$  aluter, wepyng  $\tau$  sayenge: be fauourable (o LORDE) be fauourable vnto thy people: let not thine heretage be brought to such confucion, lest the Heithen be lordes therof. Wherefore shulde they saye amonge the Heithen:  $\hat{y}$  where is now their God?

Then shal the LORDE be gelous ouer his londe,  $\tau$  spare his people: yee  $\hat{y}$  LORDE shal answere,  $\tau$  saye vnto his people: Beholde, I wil sende you corne, wyne  $\tau$  oyle, so that ye shal haue plenty of them:  $\tau$  I wil nomore geue you ouer to be a reprove amonge the Heithen. Agayne, as for him of the north, I shal dryue him farre from you:  $\tau$  shute him out in to a drye and waist londe, his face towardes the east see, and his hynder partes towardes the vttemost see. The stynke of him shall go vp, and his fylthy corrupcion shal fall vp $\circ$  himself, because he hath dealte so proudly. Feare not (o londe) but be glad and reioyce, for the LORDE wil do greate thinges. Be not ye afraied nether (o ye beastes of the felde) for the pastures shal be grene, and the trees shal beare their frute: the fygetrees  $\tau$  vinyardes shal geue their increase.

BE glad then (o ye children of Sion) and reioyce in the LORDE youre God, for he hath geuen you the teacher of rightuousnes:  $\hat{a}$   $\tau$  he it is  $\hat{y}$  shal sende you downe shuwers of rayne, early and late in the first moneth: so that  $\hat{y}$  garners shal be full of corne, and the presses plenteous in wyne and oyle. And as for the yeares that  $\hat{y}$  greszhopper, locuste, blasstinge  $\tau$  caterpillar (my greate hoost, which I sent amonge you) haue eaten vp, I shal restore them to you agayne: so that ye shal haue ynough to eate, and be satisfied: and praise the name of the LORDE youre God, that so maruelously hath dealt with you.

And my people shall neuer be confounded eny more: Ye shall well knowe, that I am in the myddest of Israel, and that I am youre God: yee and that there is none other, and my people shall nomore be brought to confucion.

f After this, will I poure out my sprete vpon all flesh: "¶ your sonnes & your daughters shal prophcey: youre olde mē shal dreame dreames & your yonge men shal se visions: <sup>a</sup>Yee in those dayes I will poure out my sprete vpon seruauntes and maydens. I will shewe wonders in heauen aboue, and tokē in the earth beneth: bloude and fyre, and the vapoure off smoke. The Sonne shalbe turned in to dareknesse, & y<sup>e</sup> Moone in to bloude: before y<sup>e</sup> greate & notable daye off the LORDE come.

And the tyme shal come: y<sup>e</sup> who so euer calleth on the name of the LORDE, shalbe saued. For vpon the mount Sion & at Ierusalem, there shalbe a saluacion, like as the LORDE hath promised: yee & amonge the other remnaunt, whom the LORDE shall call.

The iij. Chapter.

a FOR take hede: In those dayes & at y<sup>e</sup> same tyme, when I turne agayne the captyuite of Iuda & Ierusalē: I shal gather all people together, & brynge thē in to the valley of Iosaphat: and there wil I reason with thē, because of my people & heretage of Israel: whō they haue scatred aboute in the nations, & parted my lōde: yee they haue cast lottes for my people, the yonge mē haue they set in the brodel house, & solde the Damsels for wyne, y<sup>e</sup> they might haue to drinke. "Thou Tirus and Sidō and all ye borders of the Philistynes: what haue ye to do with me? Will ye defye me? well: yf ye will nedes defye me, I shall recōpence you, euen vpon youre heade, & y<sup>e</sup> right shortly: for ye haue takē away my syluer & golde, my fayre & goodly Iewels, & brought them in to youre gods houses. The children also of Iuda and Ierusalem haue ye solde vnto the Grekes, that ye might bryngē thē farre frō y<sup>e</sup> borders of their owne countrees.

Beholde therefore: I will rayse them out of the place, where ye haue solde them, <sup>a</sup>& will rewarde you euen vpon youre heade. Your sonnes & your daughters will I sell thorow the hondes of the childrē of Iuda, & so they shal geue them forth to sell, vnto thē of Saba, a people of a farre cōtre: for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. Crie out these things amonge the Gentiles, proclame warre, wake vp the giauntes, let them drawe nye, let thē come vp all the lusty warryours of thē. Make you sweardes of youre plowshares, and speares of youre syckles & sythes. <sup>c</sup>Let y<sup>e</sup> weake man saye: I am stronge. Mustre you, and come, all ye Heithē rōnde aboute: gather you together, there shall the LORDE laye all thy giauntes to the grounde. Let the people aryse, and get them to the valley of Iosaphat: for there wil I syt, and iudge all Heithē rōnde aboute.

<sup>c</sup>Laye to youre sythes, for the haruest is ripe: come, get you downe: the wynepresse is full, yee the wynepresses runne ouer, for their wickednesse is waxen greate. In the valley appoynted, there shalbe many, many people: for the daye of the LORDE is nye in y<sup>e</sup> valley appoynted. The Sonne and Moone shall be darkened, <sup>a</sup>& the starres shal withdrawe their light. The LORDE shal roare out of Sion, & crie out of Ierusalē, <sup>c</sup>that the heauens & the earth shal quake withall. But the LORDE shal be a defence vnto his owne people, & a refuge for the childrē of Israel. Thus shal ye knowe, y<sup>e</sup> I the LORDE your God dwell vpō my holy mount of Sion. Then shal Ierusalē be holy, & there shal no straungers go thorow her enymore. Then shal the mōutaynes droppe swete wyne, & the hylles shall flowe with mylcke, <sup>d</sup>All the ryuers of Iuda shal haue water ynough, & out of the LORDES house, there shal flowe a sprynge, to water y<sup>e</sup> broke of Sitim: but Egipte shalbe layed waiste, & Edō shal be desolate: <sup>e</sup>because they haue dealete so cruelly with the childrē of Iuda, and shed innocent bloude in their londe. Agayne, Iuda shalbe inhabited for euermore, & Ierusalē from generacion to generaciō: for I wil not leaue their bloude vnaunged. And the LORDE shal dwell in Sion.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses of Edom I wil not spare him,<sup>a</sup> because he persecuted his brother with the swerde, destroyed his mothers wombe, bare hatred very longe, and so kepte indignacion allwaye by him. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to themā, which shal deuoure the pallaces of Bosra.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: 'For thre ād foure wickednesses of the children off Ammon, I wil not spare them: because they rype vp the womē greate with childe in Galaad, to make the borders of their londes the wyder. Therefore I wil kyndle a fyre in the walles of Rabbath, that shal consume hir palaces: with a greate crie, in the daye of batel, in tempest and in the daye off storme: so that their kyngs shal go in to captiuyte, he and his prices together, sayeth the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

THUS sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off Moab,<sup>d</sup> I wil not spare him: because he brent the bones off the kyngs of Edom to ashes. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Moab, which shal cōsume ſ pallaces of Carioth: so ſ Moab shal perish with a noyse, and the sounde of a shawme. I wil rote out the iudge from amōge them, and slaye all his prynces with him, sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: 'for thre ād foure wickednesses of Iuda, I wil not spare him: because he hath cast asyde the lawe of the LORDE, and not kepthe his commandementes: for why, they wolde nedes be disceaued with the lyes, that their forefathers folowed. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Iuda, which shal consume the palaces off Jerusalem.

THUS sayeth the LORDE: For thre ⁊ foure wickednesses of Israel, I wil not spare him: because he hath solde the rightuous for money, and the poore for shues. They treade vpon poore mens heades in the dust of the earth, ⁊ croke the wayes off the meke. The sonne and the father go to the harlot, to dishonoure my holy name: they lye besyde euery aluter vpon clothes taken to pledge, and in the house of their goddes they drynke the wyne of the oppressed. Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, that was as hie as the Cedre trees, and as stronge as the okes: notwithstandinge I destroyed his frute frō aboue, and his rote from vnder.

Agayne: I brought you out of the londe of Egipte,<sup>e</sup> and led you xl. yeares thorow the wyldernesse, that ye might haue the Amoritis londe in possession. I rased vp prophetes amonge youre children, and absteyners amonge youre yōge men. Is it not so, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE? But ye gaue the absteyners wyne to drynke,<sup>f</sup> yee ye cōmaunded the prophetes, sayenge: Prophecy not. Beholde, I wil crassehe you in sonder, like as a wayne crasseth, ſ is full of sheaues: so that ſ swift shall not escape, nether the stronge be able to do eny thyng: no, the giaunte shall not saue his owne life. The archer shall not abyde, and the swift off fote shall not escape. The horsmā shal not saue his life, ⁊ he that is as māly of stomack as a giaunte, shall in that daye be fayne to runne his waye naked, sayeth the LORDE.

HEARE, what the LORDE speaketh vnto you (o ye children of Israel) namely, vnto all ſ trybes, whō I brought out of Egipte, and sayde: You only haue I accepted from all the generacions off the earth: therefore will I vyset you in all youre wickednesses. Maye twaine walke together excepte they be agreed amonge them selues? Doth a lyon roare in the wodde, excepte he haue a pray? Or crieth a lyons whelp out of his denne, 'excepte he haue gotten somthīge? Doth a byrde fall in a snare vpō ſ earth where no fouler is? Taketh a man his snare vp from the grounde, afore he catche somewhat? Crie they out Alarum with the trompet in the cite, and the people not afraied? Cometh there eny plage in a cite, without it be the LORDES doinge? Now doth the LORDE God no maner of thinge, but he telleth his secrete before vnto his seruantes ſ prophetes. When a lyon roareth, who will not be afraied? Seynge then that the LORDE God himself speaketh, who will not prophecy?

Preach in the palaces at Asdod, and in the palaces off the londe off Egipte, and saye: gather you together vpon the mountaynes off Samaria, so shall ye se greate murthure and violent oppression amonge them: for why, they regarde not the thinge that is right, sayeth the LORDE: they gather together euell gotten goodes, and laye vp robbery in their houses.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: This londe shalbe troubled and beseged rounde aboute, thy strength shalbe plucked from the, and thy palaces robbed. Thus saith the LORDE: like as an hyrdeman taketh two legges or a peece off an eare out off the Lyons mouth: Euen so the children of Israel (that dwell in Samaria, hauynge their couches in the corner, and their beddes at Damascus) shalbe plucked awaye. Heare, and beare recorde in the house of Iacob (sayeth the LORDE God of hostes) that when I begynne to vyset the wickednesse of Israel, I will vyset & altures at Bethel also: so that the hornes of the alture shalbe broken of, & fall to the grounde.

As for the wynter house and sommer house, I will smyte them downe: and the houses of yuery, yee and many other houses shal perish, and be destroyed, sayeth the LORDE.

The iiij. Chapter.

HEARE this worde, o ye fat kyne, that be vpon the hill of Samaria: ye that do poore men wronge, and oppresse the nedy: ye that saye to youre lordes: brynge hyther, let vs drynke. Therefore the LORDE hath sworne by his holynesse: The dayes shall come vpon you, that ye shalbe lift vp vpon speares, and youre posterite caried awaye in fysshers pannes. Ye shall get you out at the gappes one after another, and in Armon shal ye be cast awaye, sayeth the LORDE.

B Ye came to Bethel for to worke vngaciousnes, and haue increased youre synnes at Galgal. <sup>a</sup> Ye brought youre sacrifices in the mornynge, and youre tythes vnto the thirde daye. Ye made a thākofferinge off leuen, ye promised frewillofferings, and proclaimed them. Soch lust had ye, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE God. Therefore haue I geuen you ydle teth in all youre cities, & scarcenesse off bred in all youre places: yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Whē there were but thre monethes vnto & haruest, I withelde the rayne from you: yee I rayned vpon one cite, and not vpon another one peece off grounde was moystured with rayne, and the grounde that I rayned not vpon, was drye. Wherefore two (yee thre) cities came vnto one, to drynke water: but they were not satisfied, yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth & LORDE.

I haue smyten you with drouth and blastinge: and loke how many orchardes, vinyardes, fygetrees and olyue trees ye had: & catirpiller hath eaten them vp. But yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Pestilence haue I sent amonge you, <sup>a</sup> as I dyd in Egipte: youre yonge men haue I slayen with & swerde, and caused youre horses be taken captiue: I made the stynckinge sauoure of youre tentes to come vp in to youre nostrels: Yet wil ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. <sup>c</sup> Some off you haue I ouerthrown: as I ouerthrewe Sodome & Gomorre: so that ye were as a brande plucked out of the fyre. Yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Therefore, thus will I handle the agayne (O Israel) ye euen thus will I handle the. Make the ready then to mete thy God, o Israel. For lo, he maketh the mountaynes, he ordeneth the wynde, he sheweth man what he is aboute to do: he maketh the mornynge and the darknesse, he treadeth vpon the hye places off the earth: & LORDE God of hostes is his name.

The v. Chapter.

HEARE this worde (o ye house of Israel) <sup>a</sup> and why? I must make this mone for you: The vyrgin Israel shall fall, & neuer ryse vp agayne: she shall be cast downe vpon hir owne grounde, and no man shal helpe hir vp. For thus sayeth & LORDE God: Where as there dwelt a M. in one cite, there shalbe left scarce an C. therin: and where & dwelt an C. there shal scarce ten be left for the house off Israel. Neuertheles, thus sayeth the LORDE vnto & house of Israel: Seke after me, <sup>b</sup> ad ye shal lyue, but seke not after Bethel. captyue, and Bethel shal come to naught. Seke the LORDE, † ye maye lyue: lest the house of Ioseph be brent with fyre and cōsumed, and lest there be none to quench Bethel.

Ye turne the lawe to wormwood, and cast downe rightuousnes vnto the grounde. The LORDE maketh the vij. starres and the Oryons.<sup>a</sup> he turneth the night in to daye, and off the daye he maketh darcknesse. He calleth † waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: † the LORDE is his name. He rayseth destruccion vpon the mightie people, † bryngeth downe the stronge holde: but they owe him euel will, † re-prouneth them openly: and who so telleth thē the playne treuth, they abhorre him. For so moch thē as ye oppresse † poore, † and robbe him of his best sustenance: therefore, where as ye haue buylded houses off square stone, ye shall not dwell in them. Maruelōs pleasaunt vynyardes shall ye plante, but the wyne of thē shal ye not drynke: and why? as for the multitude of youre wickednesses and youre stoute synnes, I knowe them right well. † Enemies are ye off the rightuous, ye take rewardes, ye oppresse the poore in iudgment. Therefore the wyse must now be fayne to holde his tūge, so wicked a tyme is it.

Seke after the thinge that is good, † not euell, so shall ye lyue: yee the LORDE God off hostes shal be with you, accordinge to youre owne desyre. † Hate the euell, and loue the good: set vp right agayne in the porte: † (no doute) the LORDE God of hostes shal be mercifull vnto the remnaunt of Ioseph. Yff no (sayeth the LORDE God, the God of hostes) there shal be mourninge in all stretes, yee they shal saye i euery strete: alas, alas. They shall call the housbonde man to lamentaciō, and soch as can mourne, to mournynge. In all vynyardes there shal be heuynesse, for I will come amonge you, sayeth the LORDE. Wo be vnto them that desyre the daye off † LORDE: Wherefore wolde ye haue it? As for that daye of the LORDE, it shalbe darcke ād not cleare: Yee like as when a mā rīneth frō a lyon, and a Beer meteth with him: or, whē he commeth in to the house, and leeneth his honde vpon the wall, a serpent byteth him. † Shall not the daye of the LORDE be darcke, and not cleare? shal it not be cloudy, and no shyne in it?

† I hate and abhorre youre holy dayes, ād where as ye cense me when ye come together I will not accepte it. And though ye offere me brentofferings and meatofferings, yet haue I no pleasure therin: As for youre fat thankofferynges, I wil not loke vpon them. Awaye with that noyse of thy songes, I wil not heare thy playes of musick: but se that equyte flowe as the water, and rightuousnesse as a mightie streame. O ye house of Israel, † gaue ye me offerings and sacrifices those xl. yeares longe in the wyldernesse? Yet haue ye set vp tabernacles to youre Moloch, and ymagines of youre Idols, † Yee ād the starre of youre god Rempha, figures which ye made to worshipe them. Therefore wil I cause you be caried awaye beyonde Damascus, sayeth the LORDE, whose name is the God off hostes.

The vi. Chapter.

WO be to the proude welthy in Siō, † to soch as thinke thē so sure vpon † mount of Samaria? which holde them selues for the best of the worlde, and rule the house of Israel, euē as they list. Go vnto Calne, and se: and from thence get you to Hemath the greate cite, and so go downe to Gath of the Philistines: be they better at ease then these kyngdomes, or the border of their londe wyder then yours? Ye are taken out for the euel daye, euen ye that syt in the stole of wyfulnessse: Ye that lye vpon beddes off yuery, and vse youre wantonnesse vpon youre couches: ye that eate the best lambes of † flocke, and the fattest calues off the droaue: † ye that synge to the lute, and in playenge off instrumentes compare youre selues vnto Dauid: ye that drynke wyne out of goblettes, † anoynte youre selues with the best oyle, but no man is sory for Ioseph hurte. Beholde, the LORDE is mynded to smyte the greate houses, so that they shall decaye: ad the little houses, that they shall cleue a sunder. Who can runne with horses, or plowe with oxen vpon the harde rockes off stone? For why, ye haue turned true iudgment in to bytternesse, and the frute of righteousness in to wormwod: Yee euen ye, that reioyse in vayne thynges: ye that saye: haue not we oplayned hornes in oure owne strength? Well, take hede, o ye house off Israel, sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes: I will brynge a people vpō you, which shall trouble you, from the waye that goeth towarde Hemath, vnto the broke in the medowe.

The viij. Chapter.

THE LORDE God shewed me such a vision: beholde, there stode one that made greszshoppers, euen when the corne was shutynge forth, after the kyng had clipte his shepe. Now when they vndertoke to eate vp all the grene thynges in ſ lōde, I sayde: O LORDE God, be mercifull, I beseke the: who shulde els helpe vp Iacob, that is brought so lowe? So the LORDE was gracious therin, and the LORDE sayde: well, it shall not be. Agayne, ſ LORDE shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORDE God called the fyre to punysh withall, and it deuoured the greate depe: yee it consumed a parte allredy. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, holde thyne honde: for who shulde els helpe vp Iacob that is brought so lowe? So the LORDE was merciful therin, and the LORDE God sayde: well, it shal not be.

Morouer, he shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORDE stode vpon a plastered wall, τ *a masons trowell in his hōde. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Amos, what seist thou? For Amos sayeth: Ieroboam shall dye with the swerde, and Israel shall be led awaye captiue out of their owne londe. And Amasias sayde vnto Amos: Get the hence (thou that cāst se so well) and fle in to the londe of Iuda: get the there thy lyuyng, and prophecy there: "and prophecy nomore at Bethel, for it is the kynges chapel, and the kynges courte.

Amos answered, and sayde to Amasias: As for me, <sup>c</sup> I am nether prophet, ner prophetes some: but a keeper of catell. Now as I was breakynge downe molberies, and goynge after the catell, the LORDE toke me, τ sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and prophecy vnto my people of Israel. And therefore, heare thou now the worde off the LORDE: Thou saiest: prophecy not agaynst Israel, and speake nothinge agaynst the house off Isaac. Wherefore thus sayeth the LORDE: Thy wife shalbe defyled in ſ cite, thy sonnes and daughters shalbe slayne with the swerde, and thy londe shalbe measured out with the lyne: Thou thy self shalt dye in an vncleue londe, and Israel shalbe dryuen out off his owne cowntre.

The viij. Chapter.

THE LORDE God shewed me this vision: and beholde, there was a maūde with sommer frute. And he sayde: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a maūde with sommer frute. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: the ende cometh vpon my people of Israel, I wil nomore ouersee them. In that daye shall the songes off the temple be turned in to sorow, sayeth the LORDE God. Shal not their destruccoon come vpon them like a water streame, & flowe ouer thē, as the floude of Egipte? At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE God) <sup>b</sup> I shall cause & Sōne to go downe at noone, and the londe to be darcke in the cleare daye. 'Youre hye feastes wil I turne to sorow, and youre songes to mournynge: I wil brynge sackcloth vpo all backes, & baldnes vpo euery heade: <sup>c</sup> yee soch a mournynge wil I sende them, as is made vpon an only begotten sonne, and they shall haue a miserable endē.

Beholde, the tyme commeth (sayeth the LORDE God) <sup>d</sup> I shal sende an hūger in to & earth: not the hunger of bred, ner the thyrst of water: but an hunger to heare the worde off the LORDE: so that they shal go from the one see to the other, yee from & north vnto & east, runnyng aboute to seke the worde of & LORDE, and shal not fynde it. In that tyme, shal the fayre virgins and the yonge men perish for thyrst, yee euen they that sweare in the offence off Samaria, and saye: as truly as thy God lyueth at Dan, and as truly as thy God lyueth at Bersaba. These shal fall, and neuer ryse vp agayne.

The ii. Chapter.

I SAWE the LORDE stondinge vpon the aulter, and he sayde: smyte the dore cheke, that the postes maye shake withall. For their couetousnesse shal fall vpon all their heades, and their posterite shalbe slayne with the swerde. They shall not fle awaye, there shall not one off them escape, ner be deliuered. Though they were buried in the hell, my honde shal fetch them from thence: 'though they clymme vp to heauen, yet shal I cast them downe: though they hyde them selues vpo the toppe of Carmel, yet shal I seke them out, and bryng them from thence: Though they crepe downe fro my sight in to the depe of the see, I shal comaunde the serpente, euen there to byte them. Yff they go awaye before their enemies I to captuyte, then shall I commaunde the swerde, there to slaye them.

Thus wil I set myne eyes vpon them, for their harme and not for their wealth. For when the LORDE God of hoostes toucheth a londe, it cōsumeth awaye, and all they that dwell therein, must nedes mourne: And why? <sup>b</sup> their destruccoon shal aryse as euery streame and runne ouer them, as the floude in Egipte. He that hath his dwellinge in heauen, ad groundeth his tabernacle in the earth: <sup>c</sup> He that calleth the waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: his name is the LORDE. O ye children off Israel, are ye not vnto me, euen as the Morians, sayeth the LORDE? haue not I brought Israel out off the londe off Egipte, the Philistynes from Capthor, <sup>d</sup> and the Sirians fro Cyr? Beholde, the eyes of the LORDE are vpon the realme that synneth, to rote it clene out of the earth: Neuertheles, I will not vterly destroye the house of Iacob, saith the LORDE.

For lo, this I promyse: though I sifte & house of Israel amonge all nacions (like as they vse to sifte in a syue) yet shall not & smallest grauel stone fall vpo the earth: But all the wicked doers of my people, that saye: Tush, the plage is not so nye, to come so hastily vpon vs: those shal perish with the swerde. <sup>e</sup> At that tyme wil I buylde agayne the tabernacle off Daud, that is fallen downe, and hedge vp his gappes: and loke what is brokē, I shal repayre it: Yee I shal buylde it agayne, as it was afore tyme, & they maye possesse the remnaunt of Edom, yee and all soch people as call vpon my name with thē, saith the LORDE, which doth these thinges.

Beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that the plowman shal ouertake & mower, and & treader off grapes, him that soweth seede. <sup>f</sup> The mountaynes shall droppe swete wyne, and the hilles shall be frutefull, and I wil turne the captuyte of my people of Israel: they shal repayre the waist cities, & haue thē in possessio: they shal plante vineyardes, ad drynke the wyne therof: they shal make gardens, and enioye the frutes off thē. And I wil plāte them vpo their owne groude, so that I will neuer rote them out agayne from their londe, which I haue geuen thē sayeth the LORDE thy God.

Chap. I.

He prophecyeth agaynst the proude stomackes of the Edomites, that vexed the Israelites in their aduersite. He sheweth, what plagues shal come vpon them

The first Chapter.

A THIS is the vision that was shewed vnto Abdy: Thus hath  $\hat{y}$  LORDE God spokē vpō Edō: "We haue herde of the LORDE  $\hat{y}$  there is an embassage sent amonge the Heithen: Vp, let vs aryse, and fight agaynst them. Beholde, I will make  $\hat{y}$  small amōge the Heithen, so that thou shalt be vtterly despised. <sup>a</sup> The pryde of thine herte hath lift the vp, thou that dwellest in  $\hat{y}$  strōge holdes off stone, and hast made the an hye seate: Thou sayest in thine herte: who shal cast me downe to the ground? But <sup>b</sup> though thou wentest vp as hye as the Aegle, and maydest thy nest aboue amonge the starres: yet wolde I plucke the downe from thēce. Yf  $\hat{y}$  theues & robbers came to  $\hat{y}$  by-night, thou takinge thy rest: shulde they not steale, till they had ynough? yf the grape gatherers came vpon the, wolde they not leaue the some grapes? But how shall they rype Esau, and seke out his treasures?

B Yee the men that were sworne vnto the, shal dryue the out off the borders off thine owne londe. They that be now at one with the, shal disceaue the, and ouercome  $\hat{y}$ : Euē they that ate thy bred, shall betraye the, or ener thou perceaue it. <sup>c</sup> Shal not I at the same tyme destroye the wyse men of Edom, ād those that haue vnderstandinge, from the mount of Esau? Thy giauntes (o Theman) shalbe afrayed, for thorow the slaughter they shalbe all ouer throwne vpon the moūt of Esau. Shame shal come vpon the, for  $\hat{y}$  malice that thou shewedest to thy brother Iacob: 'yee for euermore shalt thou perish, & that because of the tyme, when thou didest set thyself agaynst him, euen when the enemies caried away his hoost, and when the aleauntes came in at his portes, and cast lottes vpon Ierusalem, and thou thyself wast as one of them.

C Thou shalt nomore se the daye of thy brother, thou shalt nomore beholde the tyme of his captiuyte: thou shalt nomore reioyse ouer the children of Iuda, in the daye of their destruction, thou shalt tryumphe nomore in the tyme of their trouble. Thou shalt nomore come in at the gates off my people, in the tyme of their decaye: thou shalt not se their mysery in the daye of their fall.

Thou shalt sende out no man agaynst their hoost, in the daye of their aduersite: nether shalt thou stōde waytinge enymore at  $\hat{y}$  corners of the stretes, to murthur such as are fled, or to take them presoners, that remayne in the daye of their trouble. For the daye off the LORDE is harde by vpon all Heithen. <sup>d</sup> Like as thou hast done, so shalt thou be dealte withall, yee thou shalt be rewarded euen vpon thine heade. For like wyse as ye haue droncken vpon myne holy hill, so shal all heithen dryneke continually: yee dryneke shall they, and swalowe vp, so that ye shall be, as though ye had neuer bene.

D But vpon the mount Sion, there shall a remnaunt escape: <sup>e</sup> these shalbe holy, and the house of Iacob shal possesse euen those, that

Chap. I.

God sendeth Ionas vnto Ninieue, he fleyth, and is cast in to the see.

Chap. II.

A fysh swaloweth vp Ionas, which crieth vnto God, and prayseth hym, and the fysh casteth him out agayne vpon the londe.

Chap. III.

God sendeth him agayne to Ninieue, to shewe them the punyishment for to come, yf they wil not repent: they amende, and God is mercifull to them.

Chap. IIII.

Ionas is angrie, and complayneth of God, which refourmeth him.

The first Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto <sup>a</sup>Ionas the sonne of Amithai, sayenge: Aryse, and get the to Ninieue that greate cite: and preach vnto them, <sup>b</sup>how <sup>y</sup>their wickednesse is come vp before me. And Ionas made him ready to fle vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE, and gat him downe to Ioppa: where he founde a shippe ready for to go vnto Tharsis. So he payde his fare, and wente aborde, that he might go with them vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE.

But the LORDE hurled a greate wynde in to the see, and there was a mightie tempest in the see: so that the shippe was in ioperdy of goinge in peces. Then the maryners were afrayde, and cried euery man vnto his god: and the goodes that were in the shippe, they cast in to the see, to lighten it off them. But Ionas gat him vnder <sup>y</sup>hatches, where he layed him downe and slombred.

So the master of the shippe came to him <sup>b</sup>and sayde vnto him: why slomberest thou? Vp, call vpon thy God: yf God (happly) wil thynke vpon vs, that we peryshe not. And they sayde one to another: come, let vs cast lottes: that we maye knowe, for whose cause we are thus troubled.<sup>a</sup> And so they cast lottes, and the lot fell vpon Ionas.

The sayde they vnto him: tell vs, for whose cause are we thus troubled? what is thine occupacion? whence comest thou? what countre man art thou, and of what nacion? He answered them: I am an Ebrue, and I feare the LORDE God of heauen, which made both the see and drie londe. Then were  $\text{f}$  men exceedingly afrayed,  $\text{a}$  sayde vnto him: why didest thou so? (for they knewe, that he was fled from the presence of the LORDE, because he had tolde them) and sayde morouer vnto him: What shall we do vnto the, that the see maye ceasse from troubling vs? (for the see wrought and was troublous) he answered them: Take me, and cast me in to the see, so shal it let you be in rest: for I wote, it is for my sake, that this greate tempest is come vpon you.

Neuerthesse, the men assayed with rowinge, to brynge the shippe to lode: but it wolde not be, because the see wrought so,  $\text{a}$  was so troublous agaynst them. Wherefore they cried vnto the LORDE, and sayde: <sup>a</sup> O LORDE, let vs not perish for this mans death, nether laye thou innocent bloude vnto oure charge: for thou (o LORDE) hast done, euen as thy pleasure was.

So they toke Ionas, and cast him in to the see, and the see lefte ragynge. And the men feared the LORDE exceedingly, doyng sacrifice  $\text{a}$ d makynge vowes vnto the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

BUT the LORDE prepared a greate fyshe, to swallow vp Ionas. <sup>c</sup> So was Ionas in the bely of the fysh, thre dayes and thre nights. And Ionas prayed vnto the LORDE his God, out of the fysshes bely, and sayed: <sup>d</sup> In my trouble I called vnto  $\text{f}$  LORDE, and he herde me: out off the bely off hell I cried, and thou herdest my voyce. Thou haddest cast me downe depe in  $\text{f}$  midst off the see, and the floude compased me aboute: <sup>e</sup> yee all thy wawes and rowles of water went ouer me, I thought that I had bene cast awaye out of thy sight: but I wil yet agayne loke towarde thy holy temple.

The waters compased me, euen to the very soule: the depe laye aboute me, and the wedes were wrapt aboute myne heade. I wente downe to the botome of the hilles,  $\text{a}$  was barred in with earth for euer. But thou (o LORDE my God) hast brought vp my lyfe agayne out of corrupcion. When my soule faynted within me, I thought vpon the LORDE: and my prayer came in vnto the, euen in to thy holy temple. They that holde of vayne vanyties, wil forsake his mercy. But I wil do the sacrifice with the voyce of thankesgeuynge, and wil paye that I haue vowed: for why? saluacion cometh of the LORDE. And  $\text{f}$  LORDE spake vnto  $\text{f}$  fysh, and it cast out Ionas agayne vpon the drie londe.

The iij. Chapter.

THEN came the worde of the LORDE  $\text{a}$  vnto Ionas agayne, sayenge: vp, and get the to Ninie that greate cite, <sup>f</sup>  $\text{a}$  preach vnto them the preachinge, which I bade the. So Ionas arose, and wente to Ninie at the LORDES commaundement. Ninie was a greate cite vnto God, namely, off thre dayes iourney.

And Ionas wente to, and entred in to  $\text{f}$  cite: euen a dayes iourney, and cried, sayenge: There are yet xl. dayes, and then shal Ninie be ouerthrowen. <sup>g</sup> And the people of Ninie beleued God, and proclaimed fastinge, and arayed them selues in sack cloth, as well the greate as the small of them. And the tydings came vnto  $\text{f}$  kinge of Ninie, which arose out off his seate, and dyd his apparell off, and put on sack cloth, and sate him downe in ashes.

And it was cried and commaunded in Ninie, by the auctorite of the kige and his lordes, sayenge: <sup>h</sup> se that nether man or beast, oxe or shepe taist ought at all: and that they nether fede ner drinke water: but put on sack cloth both man and beast, and cry mightely vnto God: yee se that euery man turne fro his euell waye, <sup>i</sup> and from the wickednesse,  $\text{f}$  he hath in honde.

Who can tell? God maye turne, and repete, and cease from his feare wrath, that we perish not. And when God sawe their workes, how they turned from their wicked wayes: <sup>k</sup> he repented on the euell, which he sayde he wolde do vnto them, and dyd it not.

The iiii. Chapter.

WHERFORE Ionas was sore discontent, and angrie. And he prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, was not this my sayenge (I praye the) when I was yet in my countre? therfore I haisted rather to fle vnto Tharsis, for I knowe well ynough that thou art a mercifull God, full of compassion, lōge sufferinge, and of greate kyndnesse, and repentest when thou shuldest take punyshment. And now o LORDE, take my life fro me (I beseke the) for I had rather dye then lyue. Then sayde the LORDE: art thou so angrie? and Ionas gat him out of the cite, and sat downe on y east syde therof: and there made him a bothe, and sat vnder it in the shadow, till he might se, what shulde chaunce vnto the cite.

And the LORDE God prepared a wyld vyne, which sprange vp ouer Ionas, that he might haue shadowe aboue his heade, to deliuer him out of his payne. And Ionas was exceadinge glad of the wyld vyne. But vpō the nexte morow agaynst the springe of the daye, the LORDE ordered a worme, which smote the wyld vyne, so that it withered awaye. And when the Sōne was vp God prepared a feruent east wynde: and the Sonne bete ouer the heade of Ionas, that he faynted agayne, and wyszshed vnto his soule, that he might dye, and sayde: It is better for me to dye, thē to lyue. And God sayd vnto Ionas: Art thou so angrie for the wyld vyne? And he sayde: yee very angrie am I euen vnto the deeth. And the LORDE sayde: thou hast compassion vpon a wyld vyne, wherō thou bestowdest no laboure, ner maydest it growe: which sprange vp in one night and perished in another: And shulde not I then haue compassion vpon Niniue that greate cite, wherin there are aboue an C. and xx. thousande personnes, y knowe not their right hōde frō the lefte, besydes moch cattell?

The first Chapter.

A THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Micheas the Morastite, in the dayes of Ioathan, Ahas and Ezechias kiges of Iuda: which was shewed him vpon Samaria and Ierusalem.

<sup>a</sup> Heare all ye people, marcke this well o earth, and all that therein is: Yee the LORDE God himself be witnesse amonge you, euen  $\hat{y}$  LORDE from his holy temple. For why? beholde, the LORDE shal go out of his place,  $\tau$  come downe, and treade vpon the hie thinges of the earth. The moūtaynes shall consume vnder him,  $\tau$  the valleys shal cleue asunder: like as wax cōsumeth at the fyre,  $\tau$  as  $\hat{y}$  waters runne downward. And all this shal be for the wickednesse of Iacob, and the synnes of the house of Israel

B But what is the wickednesse of Iacob? Is not Samaria? <sup>a</sup> Which are the hye places of Iuda? Is not Ierusalē? Therefore I shall make Samaria an heape of stones in the felde, to laye aboute the vynyarde: hir stones shal I cast in to the valley,  $\tau$  discouer hir fōudaciōs. All hir ymages shalbe brokē downe  $\tau$  all hir wynnynge shal be brent in the fyre: yee all hir Idols will I destroye: for why, they are gathered out of the hyre of an whore,  $\tau$  in to an whores hyre shal they be turned agayne. Wherefore I wil mourne  $\tau$  make lamentacion, bare  $\tau$  naked will I go: I must mourne like  $\hat{y}$  dragōs,  $\tau$  take sorow as  $\hat{y}$  Estriches: for their woūde is past remedy: And why? it is come in to Iuda,  $\tau$  hath touched  $\hat{y}$  porte of my people at Ierusalē allredy. Wepe not, <sup>c</sup> lest they at Geth perceaue it.

C Thou at Betaphra, welter thy self in the dust and ashes. Thou that dwellest at Sephir, get the hence with shame. The proude shal boost nomore for very sorowe:  $\tau$  why? hir neighbour shall take from her what she hath. The rebellious cite hopeth, that it shal not be so euell: but for all that, the plage shal come from the LORDE, euen in to the porte of Ierusalem. <sup>e</sup> The greate noyse off the charettes shall feare them, that dwell at Lachis, which is an occasion of  $\hat{y}$  synne of  $\hat{y}$  daughter of Sion, for in the came vp the wickednesses of Israel. Yee she sent hir coursers in to the londe of Geth.

The houses of lies will disceaue the kynges of Israel. And as for the (o thou that dwellest at Morassa) I shal brynge a possessionier vpon the,  $\tau$  the plage of Israel shal reach vnto Odolla. Make the balde, and shaue the, because of thy tender children: Make the cleane balde as an Aegle, for they shalbe caried awaye captiue from the.

The ij. Chapter.

WO vnto them, that ymagyn to do harme, and deuse vngraciousnesse vpon their beddes, to perfourne it in  $\hat{y}$  cleare daye: for their power is agaynst God. When they covet to haue londe, they take it by violence, <sup>a</sup> they robbe men off their houses.

Thus they oppresse a mā for his house,  $\tau$  euery man for his heretage. Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: <sup>a</sup> Beholde, agaynst this housholde haue I deuyced a plage, wherout ye shal not plucke youre neckes: Ye shal nomore go so proudly, for it will be a perloous tyme. In that daye shall this terme be vsed, and a mournynge shal be made ouer you on this maner: We be vtterly desolate, the porcion off my people is translated. Whan wil he parte vnto vs the londe, that he hath taken from vs?

B Neuertheless there shalbe no man to deuēde the thy porcion, in the congregacion off the LORDE. <sup>a</sup> Tush, holde youre tunge (saye they) It shal not fall vpon this people, we shal not come so to confucion, sayeth the house off Iacob. Is the sprete off the LORDE so clene awaye? or is he so mynded? Treuth it is, my wordes are frendly vnto them that lyue right: but my people doth the contrary, therefore must I take parte agaynst them: for they take awaye both cote and cloke from the simple.

Ye haue turned youre selues to fight, the women off my people haue ye shot out frō their good houses, and taken awaye my excellent giftes from their children. Vp, get you hence, for here shall ye haue no rest.

Because off their Idolatry they are corrupte, and shall miserably perish. Yff I were a fleshly felowe, and a preacher of lyes and tolde them that they might syt bebbinge and bollynge, and be droncken: O that were a prophet for this people.

But I wil gather the in dede (o Iacob) and dryue the remnaunt off Israel all together. I shall cary them one with another, as a flocke in the folde, and as the catell in their stalles, that they maye be disquieted of other men.

Who so breaketh the gappe, he shall go before. They shall breake vp the porte, and go in and out at it. Their kynge shall go before them, and the LORDE shalbe vpon the heade of them.

The iij. Chapter.

HEARE, o ye heades of the house of Iacob, and ye leders of the house of Israel: 'Shulde not ye knowe, what were lauffull and right? But ye hate the good, and loue the euell: ye plucke of mens skynnes, and the flesh from their bones: Ye eate the flesh of my people, and flay of their skynne: ye breake their bones, ye choppe them in peces as it were in to a cauldron, and as flesh in to a pot. 'Now the tyme shall come, that when they call vnto the LORDE, he shall not heare them, but hyde his face from them: because that thorow their owne ymaginaciōs, they haue deale so wickedly.

And as concerninge the prophetes that disceame my people, thus the LORDE sayeth agaynst them: 'When they haue eny thinge to byte vpon, then they preach that all shalbe well: but yf a man put not some thinge in to their mouthes, they preach of warre agaynst him.

'Therefore youre vision shalbe turned to night, and youre prophesyenge to darcknesse. The Sonne shall go downe ouer those prophetes, and the daye shalbe darcke vnto them. Then shall the vision seers be ashamed, and saythsayers confounded: yee they shalbe fayne (all the packe of thē) to stoppe their mouthes, for they haue not Gods worde. 'As for me, I am full of strength, and of the sprete of the LORDE, full of iudgment and boldnesse: to shewe the house of Iacob their wickednesse, and the house of Israel their synne.

O heare this ye rulers of the house of Iacob, and ye iudges of the house off Israel: ye that abhorre the thinge that is lauffull, and wraist asyde the thinge that is straight: 'Ye that buylde vp Sion with bloude, and Ierusalem with doyng wronge. O ye iudges, ye gene sentence for giftes: O ye preastes, ye teach for lucre: O ye prophetes, ye prophesy for money. Yet wil they be takē as those that holde vpon God, and saye: Is not the LORDE amonge vs? 'Tush, there can no misfortune happen vs. Therefore shal Sion (for youre sakes) be plowed like a felde: Ierusalē shall become an heape of stones, and the hill of the temple shal be turned to an hye wodde.

The iij. Chapter.

BUT in the latter dayes it wil come to passe, that 'the hill off the LORDES house shalbe set vp hyer thē eny mōntaynes or hilles: Yee the people shall preesse vnto it, and the multitude off the Gentiles shal haist them thither, sayēge: Come, let vs go vp to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of the God of Iacob: that he maye teach vs his waye, and that we maye walke in his pathes.

'For the lawe shall come out off Sion, and the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shall geue sentence amonge the multitude off the Heithen, and reforme the people off farre coūtrees: so that of their swerdes they shal make plowshares, and synthes off their speares.

One people shall not lift vp a swerde agaynst another, 'yee they shall nomore lerne to fight: but euery man shal syt vnder his vinyarde and vnder his fyge tre, and no man to fraye him awaye: for the mouth off the LORDE of hostes hath spoken it. Therefore, where as all people haue walked euery man in the name of his owne god, we will walke in the name of oure God for euer and euer. 'At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE) will I gather vp the lame and the outcastes, and soch as I haue chastened: and will geue yssue vnto the lame, and make of the outcastes a greate people: and the LORDE himself shal be their kynge vpon the mount Sion, fro this tyme forth for euermore. 'And vnto the (O thou tower of Eder, thou stronge holde off the daughter Sion) vnto the shal it come: euē the first lordshipec and kyngdome of the daughter Ierusalē. Why thē art thou now so heuy? is there no kynge in the? are thy councelers awaye, that thou art so payned, as a woman in hir trauayle?

Now also are there many people gathered together agaynst the, sayenge: what, Sion is cursed, we shall se oure lust vpon her. But they knowe not the thoughtes off the LORDE, <sup>b</sup>they vnderstonde not his counceill, that shall gather them together as the sheeues in the barne. ### The b. Chapter.

AFTER that shalt thou be robbed thy self, o thou robbers daughter: they shal laye sege agaynst vs, and smyte the iudge off Israel with a rodde vpon the cheke. And thou Bethleem Ephrata, <sup>c</sup>art litle amonge the thousands off Iuda. Out off the shal come one vnto me, which shall be <sup>d</sup>gouernoure i Israel: whose outgoinge hath bene from the begynnyng, and from euerlastinge. In the meane whyle he plageth them for a season, untill the tyme that she (which shall beare) haue borne: then shal the remnaunt off his brethren be conuerted vnto <sup>e</sup> children off Israel. He shal stonde fast, and geue fode in the strength off the LORDE, <sup>f</sup>and in the victory of the name off <sup>g</sup> LORDE his God: and when they be conuerted, he shall be magnified vnto the farthest partes of the worlde.

33 Then shal there be peace, so that the Assirian maye come in to oure londe, and treade in oure houses. We shall bryng vp seuen shepherdes and viij. prynces vpō them: these shal subdue the londe off Assur with the swerde, and the londe of Nymrod with their naked wepens. <sup>h</sup>Thus shal he delyuer vs from the Assiria, when he commeth within oure lande, and setteth his fote within oure borders. And the remnaunt off Iacob shal be amonge the multitude of people, as the dew off the LORDE, and as the droppes vpon the grasse, that tarieth for no man, and waiteth off no body. <sup>i</sup>Yee the residue off Iacob shalbe amonge the Gentiles and the multitude off people, as the lyon amonge the beestes off <sup>j</sup> wodde, and as the lyons whelpe amonge a flocke of shepe: which (when he goeth thorow) treadeth downe, teareth in peces, and there is no man that can helpe. Thynne honde shalbe lift vp vpon thine enemies, and all thine aduersaries shal perish.

The tyme shal come also (sayeth the C LORDE) that I wil take thine horses from the, <sup>k</sup>and destroye thy charettes. I wil breake downe the cities off thy londe, and ouerthrowe all thy stronge holdes. <sup>l</sup>All witchcraftes will I rote out off thynne hande, there shall no mo soythsayenges be within the. Thine Idols and thynne ymages will I destroye out off <sup>m</sup> so that thou shalt nomore bowe thy self vnto the workes of thynne owne hondes. <sup>n</sup>Thy groues wil I plucke vp by the rotes, <sup>o</sup>and breake downe thy cities. Thus wil I be auenged also, vpon all Heithen that wil not heare.

The bi. Chapter.

HERKEN now what the LORDE sayeth: A Up, reprove the mountaynes, <sup>p</sup>and let the hilles heare thy voyce. O Heare the punyishment off the LORDE, ye mountaynes, and ye mightie foundacios off <sup>q</sup> earth: for the LORDE wil reprove his people, <sup>r</sup>and reason with Israel: O my people, what haue I done vnto the? or wherein haue I hurte the? geue me answer. <sup>s</sup>Because I brought the fro the londe off Egipte, and delyuered the out off the house off bondage? Because I made Moses, Aaron and Miriam to lede the? <sup>t</sup>Remember (o my people) what Balach the kyunge off Moab had ymaged agaynst the, <sup>u</sup>and what answerd that Balaam the sonne off Beor gaue him, from Sethim vnto Galgal: <sup>v</sup>ye maye knowe the lounge kyndnesses off <sup>w</sup> LORDE.

33 What acceptable thynges shal I offre vnto the LORDE? shall I bowe my kne to the hye God? Shal I come before him with brent offeringes, and with calues of a yeaere olde? Hath the LORDE a pleasure in many thousand rammes, or innumerable streames off oyle? Or shal I geue my firstborne for myne offences, and the frute of my body for the synne off my soule? I wil shewe the (O mā) what is good, and what the LORDE requyret off the: Namely, to do right, to haue pleasure in lounge kyndnesse, to be lowly, and to walke with thy God: <sup>x</sup>that thou mayest be called a cite off the LORDE, <sup>y</sup>and that thy name maye be rightuousnesse. Heare (o

Or shulde I iustifie the false balauces and the bagge of disceatfull weightes, amonge those that be full off riches vnrightuously gotten: where the citesyns deale with falsede, speake lyes, and haue disceatfull tungen in their mouthes?

C Therefore I wil take in honde to punysh the, and to make the desolate, because of thy synnes. Thou shalt eate, & not haue ynough: yee thou shalt bringe thy self downe. "Thou shalt fle, but not escape: ad those y thou woldest saue, wil I deluyuer to the swerde. Thou shalt sowe, but not reape: "thou shalt presse out olyues, but oyle shalt thou not haue, to anoynte thy self withall: thou shalt treade out swete must, but shalt drynke no wyne. "Ye kepe the ordinaunces of Amri, & all the customes of the house of Achab: ye folowe their pleasures, therefore wil I make the waist, & cause thy inhabitors to be abhorred, O my people: & thus shalt thou beare thine owne shame.

The viij. Chapter.

A WO is me: I am become as one, that goeth a gleenynge in the haruest. There are no mo grapes to eate, yet wolde I fayne (with all my herte) haue of the best frute. There is not a godly man vpō earth, "there is not one rightuous amōge mē. They laboure all to shed bloude, & euery mā hunteth his brother to death: yet they saye they do well, when they do euell. As the prince wil, so sayeth the iudge: y he maye do him a pleasure agayne. The greates mā speaketh what his herte desyreth, & y hearers alowe him. The best off thē is but as a thistle, and the most rightuous of them is but as a brere in the hedge. But when the daye of thy preachers commeth, y thou shalt be vysited: thē shal they be waisted awaye. "Let no man beleue his frende, ner put his confidēce in a prince. Kepe the porte of thy mouth, from her y lieth in thy bosome: "for y sonne shal put his father to dishonoure, the daughter shal ryse agaynst her mother, y daughter in lawe agaynst hir mother in lawe: and a mans foes shalbe euen they of his owne housholde.

Neuerthelesse I wil lōke vp vnto y LORDE, B I wil patiently abyde God my sauoure: my God shal heare me. O thou enemye of myne, reioyce not at my fall, for I shal get vp agayne: "and though I syt in darcknesse, yet y LORDE is my light. I wil beare the punishment of the LORDE (for why, I haue offended him) till he syt in iudgment vpon my cause, and se that I haue right. He wil bringe me forth to the light, and I shal se his rightuousnesse.

She that is myne enemy shall lōke vpon it, & be confounded, which now saith: "Where is thy LORDE God? Myne eyes shal beholde her, when she shalbe troden downe, as the claye in the stretes. "The tyme wil come, that thy gappes shal be made vp, and the lawe shal goe abrode: and at that tyme shal they come vnto the, from Assur vnto the strōge cities, and from the stronge cities vnto the ryuer: from the one see to the other, from the one mountayne to the other.

Notwithstandinge the londe must be waisted, because of them that dwell therein, and for the frutes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore fede thy people with thy rodde, the flocke of thine heretage which dwell desolate in the wodde: that they maye be fedde vpon the mount of Charnel, Basan & Galaad as afore tyme. Maruelous thinges will I shewe them, "like as when they came out of Egipte. This shal the Heithen se, and be aszshamed for all their power: "so that they shal laye their honde vpon their mouth, and stoppe their eares. "They shal licke the dust like a serpent, & as the wormes of the earth, y tremble in their holes. They shalbe afayed of the LORDE oure God, & they shal feare y.

Where is there such a God as thou? that pardonest wickednes, and forgeuest the offences of the remnaunt of thine heretage? He kepeth not his wrath for euer. And why? his delyte is to haue compassion: "he shal turne agayne, & be mercyfull to vs: he shal put downe oure wickednes, & cast all oure synnes in to the botome of the see. Thou shalt kepe thy trust with Iacob, and thy mercy for Abraham, like as thou hast sworne vnto oure fathers longe agoo.

which Naum of Elchos dyd wryte, as he sawe it

The first Chapter.

THE LORDE is a gelous God, and a taker of vengeance: yee a taker of vengeance is y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, and wrothfull. <sup>a</sup>The LORDE taketh vengeance of his enemies, and reserueth displeasure for his aduersaries.
<sup>b</sup>The LORDE suffreth longe, he is of greate power, & so innocent, that he leaueth no man faultlesse before him. The LORDE goeth forth in tempest and stormy wether, the cloudes are the dust of his fete. Whē he reproveth the see, he dryeth it vp, & turneth all the floudes to drye londe. Basan is desolate, Charnel and the pleasure of Libanus waisteth awaye. The mountaynes tremble for him, the hilles consume. At the sight of him, the earth quaketh: yee the whole worlde, and all that dwell therein. <sup>c</sup>Who maye endure before his wrath? Or who is able to abyde his grymme displeasure? His anger taketh on like fyre, and the harde rockes burst in sunder before him.

Ful gracious is the LORDE, and a stronge holde in tyme of trouble, he knoweth thē that put their trust in him: when the floude ren-neth ouer, and destroyeth the place, and when the darcknesse foloweth still vpon his enemies.
What do ye ymagin then agaynst the LORDE on this maner? (Tush, when he hath once made an ende, there shal come nomore trouble.) For like as the thornes that sticke together, and as the drye strawe, so shal the dronckardes be consumed together, euen when they be full. There come out of y<sup>e</sup> soch as ymagin myschefe, and geue vngracious coun-cell agaynst the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Let thē be as wel prepared, yee and as many as they can, yet shal they be hewen downe, and passe awaye. And as for the, I wil vex the, but not vterly destroye the. And now wil I broke his rodde from thy backe, and burst thy bondes in sonder. But the LORDE hath geuen a commaundement cōcernynge the, that there shall come nomore sede of thy name. <sup>d</sup>The carued and casten ymages will I rote out of the house of thy god. Thy graue shal I prepare for the, and thou shalt be confounded.

The ij. Chapter.

BEHOULDE, vpon the mountaynes come the fete of him, <sup>a</sup>that bryngeth good tydings, & preacheth peace. O Iuda, kepe thy holy dayes, perfourne thy promyses: for Belial shal come nomore in the, he is vtterly roted out.

The scatterer shal come vp agaynst the, & laye sege to the castell. Loke thou wel to the stretes, make thy loynes stronge, arme thy self with all thy myght: for the LORDE shal restore agayne the glory of Iacob, like as <sup>f</sup>glory of Israel. The destroyers haue broken them downe, & marred the wyne braunches. The shyld of his giauntes glistereth, his men of warre are clothed in purple. His charettes are as fyre, when he maketh him forward, his archers are wel deckte & trimmed. The charettes rolle vpon the stretes, & welter in the hye wayes. They are to loke vpon like cressettes of fyre, and go swyftly, as the lightenyng.

B When he doth but warne his giauntes, they fall in their aray, & haistely they clymme vp the walles: yee the engyns of the warre are prepared all ready. The water portes shal be opened, and the kinges palace shal fall. The quene hir self shal be led awaye captiue, and hir gentilwomen shal mourne as the doves, & groune within their hertes. <sup>b</sup>Niniue is like a pole full of water, but then shal they be fayne to fle. Stonde, stōde, (shal they crie) & there shal not one turne backe. Awaye with the syluer, awaye with the golde: for here is no ende of treasure. There shalbe a multitude of all maner costly ornaments. Thus must she be spoyled, emptied & clene striped out: that their hertes maye be melted awaye, their knees treble, all their loynes be weake, and their faces blacke as a pot.

Where is now the dwellinge of the lyōs, and the pasture of the lyons whelpes? where the lyon and the lyoness wente with the whelpes, and no man frayed them awaye? But the lyon spoyled ynough for his yonge ones, and deuoured for his lyoness: he fylled his dennes with his pray, & his dwellinge place with that he had rauyszhed. Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieyth the LORDE of hostes) and wil set fyre vpon thy charettes, that they shal smoke withall, and the swerde shal deuoure thy yonge lyons. I wil make an ende of thy spoylinge from out of the earth, & the voyce of thy messaugers shal nomore be herde.

The iij. Chapter.

WO to that bloudthursty cite, which is all full of lyes and robbery, <sup>c</sup>& wil not leaue of from rauyszhinge. There a man maye heare scourginge, ruszhinge, the noyse of the wheles, the crieinge of the horses, & the rollinge of the charettes. There the horse men get vp with naked swerdes, and glisterynge speares: There lyeth a multitude slayne, and a greate heape of deed bodies: There is no ende of deed coarces, yee men fall vpon their bodies: And that for the greate and manyfolde whordome, of the fayre and beutifull harlot: which is a mastesse of wychcraft, yee and selleth the people thorow hir whordome, and the nacions thorow hir wichcraft.

<sup>d</sup>Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieyth the LORDE of hostes) and wil pull thy clothes ouer thy heade: that I maye shewe thy nakednes amonge the Heithen, and thy shame amonge the kingdomes. I wil cast dyrte vpon <sup>f</sup>ye, to make the be abhorred, and a gasynge stocke: Yee all they that loke vpon the, shal starte backe, & saye: Niniue is destroyed.

B Who wil haue pyte vpō the? where shal I seke one to conforte the? Art thou better then the greate cite of Alexandria? that laye in the waters, and had the waters rounde aboute it: which was strongly fenced & walled with the see? Ethiopia and Egipte were hir strēth, & that exceedinge greate aboue measure. Aphrica and Lybia were hir helpers, yet was she dryuen awaye, & brought in to captiuyte: hir yonge children were smytten downe at the heade of euery strete, the lottes were cast for the most auncient men in her, and all hir mightie men were bounde in chaynes. Euen so shalt thou also be droncken, and hyde thy self, and seke some helpe agaynst thine enemy. All thy stronge cities shal be like fyge trees with rype fyges: which whē a mā shaketh, they fall in to the mouth of the eater.

C Beholde, thy people with in the are but women: the portes of thy londe shal be opened vnto thine enemies, and the fyre shal deuoure thy barres. Drawe water now agaynst thou be beseged, make vp thy strōge holdes, go in to the claye, tempre the morter, make

THIS is the heuy burthē, which the prophet Abacuc dyd se. <sup>a</sup>O LORDE, how longe shal I erie, ⁊ thou wilt not heare? <sup>b</sup>How longe shal I complayne vnto the, suf-frynge wronge, and thou wilt not helpe? Why lettest thou me se weerynesse and labour? Tyrāny and violence are before me, power ouergoeth right: for the lawe is torne in peeces, and there can no right iudgment go forth. And why? the vngodly is more set by then the righteous: this is the cause, y wronge iudgment procedeth. <sup>c</sup>Beholde amonge the Heithen, and loke wel: wondre at it, and be

For lo, <sup>d</sup>I wil rase vp y Caldees, that bytter and swifte people: which shal go as wyde as the londe is, to take possession of dwellinge places, that be not their owne. A grymme ⁊ boysteous people is it, these shal syt in iudgment ⁊ punyshe. Their horses are swifter then the cattles of the mountayne, ⁊ byte sorer then y wolues in y euenynge. <sup>e</sup>Their hors-men come by greate heapes from farre, they fle hastily to deuoure as the Aegle. They come all to spoyle: out of them commeth an east wynde, which bloweth and gathereth their captyues, like as the sonde. They shall mocke the kinges, and laugh the prynces to scorne. They shall not set by eny stronge holde, for they shal laye ordinance agaynst it, and take it. Then shal they take a fresh corage vnto them, to go forth & to do more euell, ¶ & so ascrybe that power vnto their God.

C But thou o LORDE my God, my holy one, thou art from the begynnyng, therefore shal we not dye. O LORDE, thou hast ordered them for a punyshmet, and set them to reproue the nightie. Thine eyes are clene, thou mayest not se euell, thou canst not beholde ¶ y thinge that is wicked. ¶ Wherefore then dost thou loke vpon the vngodly, and holdest thy tunge, when the wicked deuoureth the man that is better thē himself? Thou makest men as the fish in the see, and like as the creping beestes, that haue no gyde. They take vp all with their angle, they catch it in their net, & gather it in their yarne: wherof they reioyce and are glad. Therefore offre they vnto their net, and do sacrifice vnto their yarne: because that thorow it their porcion is become so fat, and their meate so pléteous. Wherefore they cast out their net agayne, & neuer ceasse to slaye the people.

The ij. Chapter.

A I STODE vpon my watch, and set me vpon my bulworke, to loke & se what he wolde saye vnto me, and what answer I shulde geue him ¶ y reproueth me. But the LORDE answered me, and sayde: Wryte the vision planely vpon thy tables, that who so commeth by, maye rede it: for ¶ y visiō is yet farre of for a tyme, ¶ but at ¶ y last it shal come to passe, & not fayle. And though he tary, yet wait thou for him, ¶ for in very dede he wil come, and not be slacke. Beholde, who so wil not beleue, his soule shal not prosper: but the iust shal lyue by his faith. ¶ Like as the wyne disceaueth the dronckarde, euen so the proude shal fayle & not endure. He openeth his desyre wyde vp as the hell, & is as vnsaciab as death. ¶ All Heithen gathereth he to him, & heapeth vnto him all people.

B But shall not all these take vp a prouerbe agaynst him, and mocke him with a byworde, and saye: Wo vnto him that heapeth vp other mens goodes? How longe wil he lade himself with thicke claye? O how sodenly wil they stonde vp, ¶ y shal byte the, & awake, that shal teare ¶ y in peces? yee thou shalt be their pray. ¶ Seinge thou hast spoyled many Heithen, therefore shall the remnaunt of the people spoyle the: because of mens bloude, & for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite & vnto all them that dwel therein.

Wo vnto him that geueth his neghboure dryncke, to get him wrothfull displeasure for his dronkenesse: ¶ that he maye se his preuytees. Therefore with shame shalt thou be fylled, in steade of honoure. Dryncke thou also, till thou slombre withall: for the cuppe of the LORDES right hōde shall compasse the aboute, and shamefull spewing in steade of thy worships. For the wrōge that thou hast done in Libanus, shal ouerwhelme the, ¶ and the wilde beastes shal make the afayed: because of mens bloude, and for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite, and vnto all soch as dwel therein.

C What helpe than wil ¶ y ymage do, whom the workman hath fashioned? Or the vayne cast ymage, wherin because the craftesman putteth his trust, therefore maketh he domme Idols? The iij. Chapter.

A prayer of the prophet Abacuc for the ignoraunt.

A LORDE, when I herde speake of ſ, I was afrayed. The worke ſ thou hast taken in honde, shalt thou perfourme in his tyme, O LORDE: and when thy tyme cometh, thou shalt declare it. In thy very wrath thou thinkest vpon mercy. God cometh from Theman, and the holy one from the mount of Pharan. Sela.

His glory couereth the heauens, and the earth is full of his prayse. His shyne is as ſ sonne, ⁊ beames of light go out of his hondes, there is his power hid. Destrucciō goeth before him, and burnynge cressettes go from his fete. He stondesth, ⁊ measureth the earth: He loketh, ⁊ the people consume awaye, the mōutaynes of ſ worlde fall downe to powlder, and the hilles are fayne to bowe them selues, for his goinges are euerlastinge and sure.

I sawe, that the paulions of the Morians and the tentes of the londe of Madian were vexed for weerynesse. Wast thou not angrie (o LORDE) in the waters? was not thy wrath in the floudes, and thy displeasure in the see? yes, whē thou sattest vpon thine horse, and when thy charettes had the victory. Thou shewdest thy bowe opely, like as thou <sup>b</sup>haddest promised with an ooth vnto the trybes. Sela.

B Thou didest deuyde the waters of the earth. When the mountaynes saw the, they were afrayed, ſ water streame wēte awaye: the depe made a noyse at the liftinge vp of thine honde. " The Sonne and Mone remainyd still in their habitation. Thine arrowes wente out glisteringe, and thy speares as the shyne of the lightenyng. " Thou trodest downe the londe in thine anger, and didest throsshe the Heithen in thy displeasure. Thou camest forth to helpe thy people, to helpe thine anyoynted. Thou smotest downe the heade in the house of the vngodly, ⁊ discoueredest his foundacions, euē vnto ſ necke of him. Sela.

Thou cursest his septers, the captayne of his men of warre: which come as a stormy wynde to scatre me abroad, ⁊ are glad when they maye eat vp ſ poore secretly. Thou makest a waye for thine horses in the sec, euen in the mudde of greate waters. Whē I heare this, my body is vexed, my lippes tremble at ſ voyce therof, my bones corruppe, I am afrayed where I stonde. O that I might rest in the daye of trouble, that I might go vp vnto oure people, which are already prepared.

For the fyge trees shal not be grene, ⁊ the vynes shal beare no frute. The labour of ſ olyue shalbe but lost, and the londe shall bringe no corne: the shepe shalbe taken out of ſ folde, and there shalbe no catell in ſ stalles. But as for me, I wil be glad in the LORDE, and will reioyce in God my Sauoure. " The LORDE God is my strength, he shall make my fete as the fete of hertes: ⁊ he which geueth ſ victory, shal bringe me to my hye places, synginge vpon my psalmes.

What Sophony conteyneth.

Chap. I.

He prophecieth of plagues for to come vpon Iuda.

Chap. II.

He exorteth them to amēde, that they maye escape the wrath of God: and sheweth the Gentiles their punyishment.

Chap. III.

Punyishment because of the wickednesse of the Iewes: whom God therfore refused, and chose the Heithen.

The first Chapter.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, which came vnto Sophony the sonne of Chusi, the sonne of Gedolias, the sonne of Amarias & sonne of Hezechias: in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda. <sup>a</sup> I will gather vp all thinges in the londe (saith the LORDE) I wil gather vp man and beast: I wil gather vp the foules in the ayre, and the fysh in the see (to the greate decaye of the wicked) & wil vtterly destroye the men out of the londe, saith the LORDE. I wil stretch out myne honde vpon Iuda, and vpon all soch as dwel at Ierusalem. Thus wil I rote out the remnaunt of Baal from this place, and the names of the Kemuryus and prestes: yee & soch as vpon their house toppes worshipec & bowe them selues vnto the hoost of heauen: which sweare by the LORDE,<sup>b</sup> and by their Malchom also: which starte a backe from y LORDE, and nether seke after the LORDE, ner regarde him.

<sup>b</sup> Be still at y presence of the LORDE God, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde: yee the LORDE hath prepared a slayne offeringe, and called his gestes therto. And thus shall it happen in the daye of the LORDES a slaynofferinge: <sup>c</sup> I will vyset the prynces, the kinges children, & all soch as weere straunge clothinge. In the same daye also wil I vyset all those, that treade ouer the threshold so proudly, which fyll their lordes house with robbery and falsede. At y same tyme (saith the LORDE) there shall be herde a greate crie from the fyshporte, and an howlinge from y other porte, and a greate murthur from the hilles. Howle ye that dwel in the myll, for all the marchaunt people are gone, and all they that were laden with syluer, are rote out.

of trouble & heuynesse, a daye of vtter destruction & misery, a dareke & glomyng daye, a cloudy & stormy daye, a daye of the noyse of trompettes and shawmes, agaynst the stronge cities and hie towres. I wil bringe y<sup>e</sup> people in to soch vexacion, that they shal go aboute like blinde mē, because they haue synned agaynst the LORDE. Their bloude shalbe shed as the dust, & their bodies as the myre. <sup>a</sup>Nether their syluer ner their golde shalbe able to deluyer thē in that wrothfull daye of the LORDE. <sup>b</sup>but the whole londe shalbe consumed thorow the fyre of his gelousy: for he shall soone make cleue ryddaunce of all them that dwell in the londe.

The ij. Chapter.

<sup>a</sup>COME together and gather you, O ye frauwerde people: or y<sup>e</sup> thinge go forth that is concluded, & or the tyme be passed awaye as the dust: or the fearfull wrath of the LORDE come vpon you, yee or the daye of the LORDES sore displeasure come vpon you. <sup>c</sup>Seke the LORDE all yee meke harted vpon earth, ye that worke after his iudgmēt: seke rightuousnesse, seke lowlynesse: that ye maye be defended in the wrothfull daye of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE. <sup>d</sup>For Gaza shal be destroyed, & Ascalon shall be layed waist: They shal cast out Aszdod at the noone daye, and Accaron shal be pluckte vp by the rotes.

Wo vnto you y<sup>e</sup> dwel vpon the see coast, ye murthurous people: the worde of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE shal come vpon you. O Canaan thou londe of the Philistynes, I wil destroye the, so that there shal no man dwel in the eny more: & as for the see coast, it shal be byrdmens cotages & shepe foldes: yee it shalbe a porcion for such as remayne of the house of Iuda, to fede ther vpon. In y<sup>e</sup> houses of Ascalon shal they rest towarde night: for the LORDE their God shal vyset thē, & turne awaye their captyuite. I haue herde the despite of Moab, & the <sup>e</sup>blasphemies of the children of Ammon: how they haue shamefully intreated my people, and magnified them selues within the borders of their londe. Therefore as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel) Moab shalbe as Sodome, & Ammon as Gomorra: euen drie thorne hedges, salt pittes and a perpetuall wyldernes. The residue of my folke shall spoyle them, the remnaunt of my people shall haue them in possession. This shal happen vnto them for their pryde, <sup>f</sup>because they haue deale so shamefully with the LORDE of hostes people, and magnified them selues aboute them. The LORDE shall be grymme vpon them, and <sup>g</sup>destroye all the goddes in the londe. And all the Iles of the Heithen shal worshipe him, euery man in his place.

Ye Morias also shal perish with my swerde: <sup>h</sup>Yee he shall stretch out his honde ouer the north, and destroye Assur. As for Ninieue, he shal make it desolate, drye and waist. The flockes and all the beastes of the people shall lye in the myddest of it, pellicanes and storckes shall abyde in the vpper postes of it, foules shal synge in the wyndowes, and rauens shal syt vpon the balckes, for the bordes of Cedre shalbe ryue downe. <sup>i</sup>This is the proude and carelesse cite, that sayde in hir herte: I am, and there is els none. O how is she made so waist, y<sup>e</sup> the beestes lye therin? Who so goeth by, mocketh her, and poynteth at her with his fynger.

The iij. Chapter.

<sup>a</sup>WO to the abhominable, fylthie and cruel cite: which wil not heare, ner be reformed. Hir trust is not in the LORDE, nether wil she holde her to hir God. <sup>b</sup>Hir rulers within her are as roaringe lyons: hir iudges are as wolues in the euenynge, which leaue nothinge behynde them till the morow. But the iust LORDE that doth no vnright, was amonge them, euery mornynge shewinge them his lawe clearly, and ceased not. But the vngodly wil not lerne to be aszshamed. Therefore wil I rote out this people, and destroye their towres: yee and make their stretes so voyde, that no man shall go therin. But neuertheles they stonde vp early, to folowe the filthynes of their owne ymaginacions. And lo, in <sup>e</sup> tyme wil I destroye all those that vex the: <sup>f</sup>I wil helpe the lame, and gather vp the cast awaye: yee I wil get them honoure and prayse in all lōdes, where they haue bene put to shame. At <sup>g</sup> same tyme wil I bringe you in, and at the same tyme wil I gather you. I wil get you a name and a good reporte, amonge all people of the earth, when I turne backe youre captiuyte before youre eyes, saieth the LORDE.

Chap. II.

He geueth the rulers a corage. Of the ornāmetes and glory of the seconde temple, wherby is vnderstode the church of the faithfull.

The first Chapter.

IN the seconde yeaere of kynge Darius, <sup>a</sup>in the vj. moneth the first daye of the moneth, came the worde of the LORDE (by the prophet Aggeus) <sup>b</sup>vnto Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel <sup>ŷ</sup>prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, sayenge: Thus speaketh the LORDE of hoostes, and saieth: This people doth saye: The tyme is not yet come to buyde vp the LORDES house. Then spake the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus <sup>τ</sup>sayed: ¶Ye youre selues can fynde tyme to dwell in syled houses, and shal this house lye waist? Considre now youre owne wayes in youre hertes (saieth <sup>ŷ</sup>LORDE of hoostes) ye sowe moch, but ye bringe litle in: ¶Ye eate, but ye haue not ynough: ye drinke, but ye are not fylled: ye decke youre selues, but ye are not warme: ¶ye he <sup>ŷ</sup>earneth eny wage, putteth it in a broken purse.

33 Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: Cōsidre youre owne wayes in youre hertes, get you vp to the mountayne, fetch wod, <sup>τ</sup>buyde vp the house: ¶that it maye be acceptable vnto me, and that I maye shewe myne honour, saieth the LORDE. Ye loked for moch, and lo it is come to litle: <sup>τ</sup>though ye brynge it home, yet do I blowe it awaye. And why so, saieth the LORDE of hoostes? Euē because that my house lyeth so waist, ¶and ye仁ne every man vnto his owne house. Wherefore the heauen is forbyddē to geue you eny dew, and the earth is forbydden to geue you encrease. ¶I haue called for a drouth, both vpō the londe <sup>τ</sup>vpō the mountaynes, vpon corne, vpon wyne <sup>τ</sup>vpon oyle, vpon euery thinge that the grounde bryngeth forth, vpon men and vpon catell, yee and vpon all handy laboure.

Now when Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, <sup>τ</sup>Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest with the remnaunt of the people, herde the voyce of the LORDE their God, <sup>τ</sup>the wordes of the prophet Aggeus (like as the LORDE their God had sent him) the people dyd feare the LORDE. Then Aggeus the LORDES angel sayed in the LORDES message vnto the people: ¶I am with you, saieth the LORDE. So the LORDE waked vp the sprete of Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and the sprete of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, and the sprete of the remnaunt of all the people: ¶they came <sup>τ</sup>laboured, in the house of the LORDE of hoostes their God.

AVPON the xxiiij. daye of the sixte moneth, in the secōde yeaere of kinge Darius, the xxi. daye of the seuenth moneth, came the worde of the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus, sayenge: speake to Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, and to the residue of ŷ people, ⁊ saye: "Who is left amōge you, that sawe this house in hir first beuty? But what thinke ye now by it? Is it not in youre eyes, euē as though it were nothinge? Neuerthelesse be of good chere, o Zorobabel (saith the LORDE) <sup>b</sup>be of good conforte, o Iesua thou sonne of Iosedec, hye prest: take good hartes vnto you also, all ye people of the londe, saith the LORDE of hoostes, and do accordinge to the worde (for I am with you, saith the LORDE of hoostes) like as I agreed with you, when ye came out of the londe of Egypte: ⁊ my sprete shalbe amonge you, feare ye not.

B For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: "Yet once more will I shake heauē and earth, the see and the drye lōde: Yee I will moue all Heithen, ⁊ the comforte of all Heithen shall come, ⁊ so wil I fylł this house with honoure, saith the LORDE of hoostes. The syluer is myne, <sup>c</sup>⁊ the golde is myne, saith the LORDE of hoostes. Thus ŷ glory of the last house shalbe greater thē the first, saith the LORDE of hoostes: ⁊ in this place wil I geue peace, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The xxiiij. daye of the ix moneth in the seconde yeaere of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto the prophet Aggeus sayenge: Thus saith ŷ LORDE God of hoostes: Axe the prestes concernynge the lawe, ⁊ saye: "Yf one beare holy flesh in his cote lappe, ⁊ with his lappe do touch the bred, potage, wyne, oyle or eny other meate: shall he be holy also? The prestes answered, ⁊ saide: No. Then sayde Aggeus: Now yf one beyng defyled with a deed carcase, touch eny of these: shall it also be vnclene? The prestes gaue answeere ⁊ sayed: yee, it shall be vnclene. "Thē Aggeus answered, and sayde: Euen so is this people ⁊ this nacion before me, saith ŷ LORDE: and so are all the workes of their hōdes, yee and all that they offre, is vnclene.

And now (I praye you) cōsidre from this daye forth, and how it hath gone with you afore: or euer there was layed one stone vpō another in the temple of the LORDE: that when ye came to a corne heape of xx. busshels, there were scarce ten: <sup>a</sup>and that when ye came to the wyne presse for to poure out L. pottes of wyne, there were scarce xx. For I smote you with heate, blasinge ⁊ hale stones in all the labours of youre hondes: yet was there none of you, that wolde turne vnto me, saith the LORDE. Considre then from this daye forth and afore, namely, from the xxiiij. daye of the ix. moneth, vnto the daye that the foundation of the LORDES temple was layed: "Marek it well, Is not the sede yet in the barme? haue not the vynes, the ŷge trees, the pomgranates and olyue trees bene yet vnfrutefull? but frō this daye forth, I shal make them to prospere.

Morouer the xxiiij. daye of the moneth came the worde of the LORDE vnto Aggeus agayne, sayenge: Speake to Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and saye: I will shake both heauen and earth, and ouerthrowe the seate of the kingdomes, yee ⁊ destroye the mightie kingdome of the Heithē. I wil ouerthrowe the charettes, and those that syt vpon them, so that both horse and man shal fall downe, euery man thorow his neyghbours swerde. And as for the, o Zorobabel (saith the LORDE of hoostes) thou sonne of Salathiel, my seruauant: I wil take the (saith the LORDE) at the same tyme, and make the as a seale: for I haue chosen the, saith the LORDE of hoostes

The bi. Chapter.

B <sup>a</sup>MOROUER I turned me, lifynge vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, there came iiij. charettes out frō betwixte two hilles, which hilles were of brasse: <sup>c</sup>In the first charet were reade horse, In the secōde charet were blacke horse, In y thirde charet were whyte horse, In y fourth charet were horses of dyuerse colours, & stronge. Then spake I, and sayde vnto the angel that talked with me: O lorde, what are these? The angel answered, & sayde vnto me: <sup>d</sup>These are the iiij. wyndes of the heauen, which be come forth to stōde before the ruler of all y earth. That with the blacke horse wente in to the londe of the north, & the whyte folowed thē, and the sprekled horses wente forth towarde the south. These horses were very stronge, & wente out: and sought to go and take their iourney ouer the whole earth. And he sayde: get you hence, and go thorow the worlde. So they wēte thorow out the worlde. Then cried he vpon me, and spake vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, these that go towarde y north, shal still my wrath in the north cōtre.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Take of the presoners that are come from Babilon: namely, Heldai, Tobias and Idaia: & come thou the same daye, and go in to the house of Iosias the sonne of Sophony. Then take golde and syluer, and make crownes therof, and set them vpon the heade of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, the hie prest, and speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: Beholde, the man whose name is the braunch: <sup>e</sup>& he that shall springe vp after him, shal buylde vp the temple of the LORDE: yee euen he shall buylde vp the temple of the LORDE. <sup>f</sup>He shal beare the prayse, he shall syt vpon the LORDES trone, and haue the dominacion.

<sup>g</sup>A prest shall he be also vpon his trone, & a peaceable counsell shalbe betwixte them both. And the crownes shal be in the temple of the LORDE, for a remembrance vnto Helem, Tobias, Idaia and Hen the sonne of Sophony. And soch as be farre of, shal come and buylde the temple of the LORDE: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hostes hath sent me vnto you. And this shal come to passe, yf ye wil herken diligently vnto the voyce of the LORDE your God.

The biij. Chapter.

IT happened also in the fourth yeare of <sup>a</sup>kyng Darius, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary in the fourth daye of the ix. moneth, which is called Casleu: what tyme as Sarasar and Rogomelech and the men that were with them, sent vnto Bethel for to praye before y LORDE: and that they shulde saye vnto the prestes, which were in the house of the LORDE of hostes, and to the prophetes: <sup>b</sup>Shulde I wepe in the fyfte moneth, and absteyne, as I haue done now certayne yeares? Then came the worde of the LORDE of hoostes vnto me, sayenge: Speake vnto all the people of the londe, and to the prestes, and saye: when ye fasted and mourned <sup>a</sup> in the v<sup>e</sup> & vij. moneth (now this lxx. yeaes) dyd ye fast vnto me? When ye ate also and dronke, dyd ye not eate and drinke for youre owne selues? Are not these the wordes, which the LORDE spake by his prophetes afore tyme, when Ierusalem was yet inhabited and welthy. she and the cities rounde aboute her: when there dwelt mē, both towarde the south and in the playne countrees?

B And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary, sayenge: Thus saith <sup>y</sup> LORDE of hoostes: Execute true iudgment: shewe mercy and louyng kyndnesse, <sup>e</sup> euery man to his brother: Do the wyddowe, the fatherlesse, the straunger, and poore no wronge: and let no man ynagen euell agaynst his brother in his hert. <sup>e</sup> Neuertheles they wolde not take hede, but turned their backes, and stopped their eares, that they shulde not heare, yee they made their hertes as an Adamant stone, lest they shulde heare the lawe & wordes, <sup>d</sup> which the LORDE of hoostes sent in his holy sprete by the prophetes afore tyme.

Wherefore the LORDE of hoostes was very wroth at them. And thus is it come to passe, that like as he spake and they wolde not heare: euen so they cried, and I wolde not heare (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but scattered them amonge all Gentiles, whom they knewe not. Thus the londe was made so desolate, <sup>y</sup> there traueled no man in it nether to ner fro, for that pleasaunt londe was vtterly layed waist.

The viij. Chapter.

A SO the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I was in a greate gelousy ouer Sion, yee I haue bene very gelous ouer her in a greate displeasure. thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I wil turne me agayne vnto Sion, and wil dwel in the myddest of Ierusalem: <sup>f</sup> so that Ierusalem shalbe called a faithfull and true cite, the hill of the LORDE of hoostes, yee an holy hill.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes:

There shall yet olde men and women dwel agayne in the stretes of Ierusalem: yee and soch as go with stauies in their handes for very age. The stretes of the cite also shalbe full of yonge boyes and damselles, playunge vpon the stretes.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: yf the residue of this people thynke it to be vnpossible in these dayes, shulde it therefore be vnpossible in my sight, <sup>e</sup> sayeth the LORDE of hoostes? Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil delyuer my people from the londe of the east and west, and wil brynge them agayne: that they maye dwel at Ierusalem. <sup>a</sup> They shalbe my people, and I will be their God, in treuth and rightuousnesse. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: let youre hondes be stronge, ye that now heare these wordes by the mouth of the prophetes, which be in these dayes that the foundation is layed vpon the LORDE of hoostes house, that the temple maye be buylded. <sup>e</sup> For why? before these dayes nether men ner catel coude wyne eny thinge, nether might eny man come in and out in rest, for trouble: but I let euery man go agaynst his neighbour.

Neuerthelesse I wil now intreate the residue of this people nomore, as afore tyme (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but they shalbe a sede of peace. <sup>a</sup> The vynyarde shal geue hir frute, the gronde shal geue hir increase, and the heauens shal geue their dew: and I shal cause the remnaunt of this people, to haue all these in possession. And it shall come to passe, that like as ye were a curse amonge the Heithen (O ye house of Iuda and ye house of Israel) Euen so wil I delyuer you, that ye shalbe a blessinge: feare not, but let youre hōdes be stronge.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: like as I deuyed to puysh you, what tyme as youre fathers prouoked me vnto wrath (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and spared not: Euen so am I determed now in these dayes, for to do wel vnto the house of Iuda and Ierusalem, therefore feare ye not. Now the thinges that ye shal do, are these: <sup>e</sup> Speake euery man the treuth vnto his neighbour, execute iudgment truly and peaceably within your portes, none of you ymagyn euell in his hert agaynst his neyghboure, and loue no false oother: for all these are the thinges that I hate, sayeth the LORDE. And the worde of the LORDE of hostes came vnto me, sayenge: thus sayeth the LORDE of hostes: D The fast of the fourth moneth, the fast of the fifth, the fast of the seuenth, and the fast of the tenth, shal be ioye and gladnesse, and prosperous liye feastes vnto the house of Iuda: Only, loue the treuth and peace.

Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: There shall yet come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and they that dwell in one cite, shal go to another, sayenge: <sup>a</sup> Vp, let vs go, and praye before the LORDE, let vs seke the LORDE of hostes, I wil go with you. Yee moch people and mightie Heithen shal come and seke the LORDE of hostes at Ierusalem, and to praye before the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: In that tyme shal ten men (out of all maner of languages of the Gentiles) take one Iewe by the hemme of his garment, and saye: we wil go with you, for we haue herde, that God is amonge you.

The ii. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE shalbe receaued at Adrach, and Damascus shal be his offerynge: for the eyes of all mē and of the trybes of Israel shal loke vp vnto the LORDE. The borders of Hemath shal be harde therby, Tyrus also and Sidon, for they are very wise. <sup>b</sup> Tyrus shal make himself stronge, heape vp syluer as the sonde, and golde as the claye of the stretes. Beholde, the LORDE shal take her in, and haue her in possession: he shal smyte downe hir power in to the see, and she shalbe consumed with fyre. This shal Ascalon se, and be affrayed. Gaza shalbe very sory, so shal Accaron also, <sup>c</sup> because hir hope is come to confucion. For the kinge of Gaza shal perish, and at Ascalon shal no man dwel.

Straungers shall dwel at Aszdod, and as for y<sup>e</sup> pryde of y<sup>e</sup> Philistynes, I shal rote it out. Their bloude will I take awaye from their mouth, and their abhominaciōs from amonge their teth. Thus they shal be left for oure God, yee they shalbe as a pryncie in Iuda, and Accaron like as Iebusi. And so will I com-

pase my house rounde aboute with my men of warre, goinge to and fro: that no oppressoure come vpon them eny more. For that haue I sene now with myne eyes.

Reioyce thou greatly, o daughter Sion: be glad, o daughter Ierusalem. <sup>d</sup> For lo, thy kinge commeth vnto the, euen the rightuous and Sauoure: Lowly and symple is he, he rydeth vpon an asse, and vpon the foale of an asse. I wil rote out the charettes fro Ephraim, and the horse from Ierusalem, the batel bowes shal be destroyed. He shall geue the doctryne of peace vnto the Heithen, and his dominion shalbe from the one see to the other, and from the floudes to the endes of the worlde.

Thou also thorow the bloude of thy couenaunt: <sup>e</sup> shalt let thy presoners out of the pytte, wherein is no water. Turne you now to the stronge holde, <sup>f</sup> ye that be in prison, and longe sore to be delyuered: And this daye I bringe the worde, that I wil rewarde the dubble agayne. For Iuda haue I bent out as a bowe for me, and Ephraim haue I fylled.

Thy sonnes (o Siō) wil I raise vp agaynst the Grekes, and make the as a giauntes swarde: the LORDE God shalbe sene aboute thē, and his dartes shal go forth as the lightenyng. The LORDE God shal blowe the trompet, and shal come forth as a storme out of the south.

sayers se lyes, and tell but vayne dreames: the comfort that they geue, is nothyng worth. Therefore go they astraye like a flocke of shepe, and are troubled, because they haue no shepherde. " My wrothfull displeasure is moued at the shepherdes, and I will vyset the goates. For the LORDE of hostes wil graciously vyset his flocke (the house of Iuda) and holde them as a goodly fayre horse in the batell. <sup>b</sup> Out of Iuda shal come the helmet, the nale, the batelbowe, and all the princes together. They shalbe as the giauntes, which in the batell treade downe the myre vpon  $\gamma$  stretes. They shal fight, for  $\gamma$  LORDE shalbe with them, so that the horsmen shalbe confounded.

33 I wil cōforte the house of Iuda, and preserue the house of Ioseph. I wil turne them also, for I pytie them: and they shal be like as they were, when I had not cast them of. For I the LORDE am their God, and wil heare them. Ephraim shalbe as a giaunt, and their herte shalbe cherefull as thorow wyne: Yee their children shal se it, and be glad, and their herte shal reioyce in the LORDE. I wil blowe for them  $\tau$  gather them together, for I wil redeme them. They shal increace, as they increased afore. I wil sowe thē amonge the people,  $\gamma$  they maye thinke vpo me in farre countrees: they shal lyue with their childre, and turne agayne. I wil bringe them agayne also from the londe of Egipte, and gather them out of Assiria. I wil carye them in to  $\gamma$  londe of Galaad and to Libanus, and they shal wante nothyng. He shall go vpon the see of trouble, and smyte the see waves: so  $\gamma$  all the depe floudes shalbe dried vp. The proude boasting of Assur shalbe cast downe, and the scepter off Egipte shall be taken awaye. I wil comforte them in the LORDE, that they maye walke in his name, saith the LORDE.

The xi. Chapter.

2 OPEN thy dores (o Libanus) that the fyre maye consume thy Cedre trees. Howle ye Fyrr trees, for the Cedre is fallē, yee all  $\gamma$  proude are waisted awaye. Howle (o ye oke trees of Baasan) for  $\gamma$  mightie strenging wod is cut downe. Men maye heare the shepherdes mourne, for their glory is destroyed. Mē maye heare the lyons whelpes roare, for the pryde off Iordane is waisted awaye.

Thus sayeth the LORDE my God: Fede the shepe of  $\gamma$  slaughter, which shalbe slayne of those that possesse them: yet they take it for no synne, but they  $\gamma$  sell thē, saye: The LORDE be thanked, I am rich: Yee their owne shepherdes spare them not. Therefore wil I nomore spare those that dwell in the londe (sayeth the LORDE) but lo, I wil delyuer the people, euery man in to his neighbours honde, and in to the hōde of his kyng: that they maye smyte the londe, and out off their hondes wil not I delyuer them.

I myself fedde  $\gamma$  slaughter shepe (a poore flocke verely) and toke vnto me two staues: the one I called louyng mekenesse, the other I called wo, and so I kepte the shepe. Thre shepherdes destroyed I in one moneth, for I might not awaye with them, nether had they eny delyte in me. Then sayde I: I will fede you nomore, <sup>d</sup> the thinge that dyeth, let it dye: and that wil perishe, let it perishe,  $\tau$  let the rēnaunt eate, euery one the flesh of his neighbour. I toke also my louyng meke staff, and brake it, that I might disanull the conuenaunt, which I made with all people, And so it was broken in that daye.

Then the poore symple shepe that had a respecte vnto me, knewe therby, that it was the worde of the LORDE. And I sayde vnto them: yff ye thynke it good, bryng hither my pryce: yf no, then leaue. So they wayed downe xxx. syluer pens,  $\gamma$  value that I was pryed at. <sup>e</sup> And the LORDE sayde vnto me: cast it vnto the potter (a goodly pryce for me to be valued at of them) and I toke the xxx. syluer pens, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORDE.

Then brake I my other staff also (namely wo) that I might louyse the brotherheade betwixte Iuda and Israel. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take to the also the staff off a foolish shepherde: for lo, I will rayse vp a shepherde in the londe, which shall not seke after the thinges that be lost, ner care for soch as go astraye: he shall not heale the wounded, he shal not norish the thinge that is whole: but he shall eate the flesh off soch as be fat, and teare their clawes in peces.

O Idols shepherde, that leaueth the flocke. The swerde shal come vpon his arme and vpon his right eye. His arme shalbe clene dried vp, and his right eye shalbe sore blynded.

The xij. Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE hath deuysed for Israel.

A THUS saith the LORDE, which spred the beaucs abrode, "layde the foundation of the earth, and geueth man & breath of life: Beholde, I will make Ierusalem a cuppe of surfet, vnto all the people & are rounde aboute her: "Yee Iuda himself also shalbe in the sege agaynst Ierusalem. At the same tyme will I make Ierusalem an heuy stone for all people, so that all such as lift it vp, shalbe toarne and rête, and all the people of the earth shalbe gathered together agaynst it.

In that daye (sayeth & LORDE) I will make all horses abashed, and those that ryde vpon them, to be out of their wyttes. I will open myne eyes vpon the house of Iuda, and smyte all the horses of the people with blyndnesse. And the prynces of Iuda shall saye in their hertes: The inhabitors off Ierusalem shall geue me consolacion in the LORDE off hoostes their God. B "In that tyme will I make the prynces of Iuda like an hote burnynge ouen with wodde, and like a cresshet off fyre amonge the strawe: so that they shal cōsume all the people rōnde aboute them, both vpon the right honde and the left. Ierusalē also shalbe inhabited agayne: namely, in the same place where Ierusalem stondeh.

The LORDE shall preserue the tentes off Iuda like as afore tyme: so that the glory of the house of Dauid and the glory of the cytesyns of Ierusalem, shalbe but litle regarded, in comparison off the glory off Iuda. In that daye shall the LORDE defende the cītesyns of Ierusalem: so that the weakest then amonge them shalbe as Dauid: "and the house of Dauid shalbe like as Gods house, and as the angell off the LORDE before them.

C At the same tyme will I go aboute to destroye all such people as come agaynst Ierusalem. "Morouer, vpon the house off Dauid and vpon the cītesyns off Ierusalem, will I poure out the sprete of grace and prayer: "so that they shal lōke vpon me, whom they haue pearced: and they shall bewepe him, as men mourne for their only begotten sonne: Yee and be sory for him, as men are sory for their first childe.

The xij. Chapter.

IN that tyme shall the house off Dauid and the cītesyns off Ierusalem haue an open well, "to wash of synne and vncleennesse. And then (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) I will destroye the names off Idols out off the londe: "so that they shal nomore be put in remembraunce.

"As for the false prophetes also and the vn clene sprete, I shall take them out of the londe: So that yf eny off them prophecy eny more, his owne father and mother that begat him, shall saye vnto him: "Thou shalt dye, for thou speakest lyes vnder the name off the LORDE: Yee his owne father and mother that begat him, shall wounde him, when he prophecyeth. And then shall those prophetes be confounded, euery one off his vision when he prophecieth: nether shall they weare sack clothes eny more, to disceauē mē with all. "But he shall be fayne to saye: I am no prophet: I am an husbonde man, for so am I taught by Adam fro my youth vp. B And yf it be sayde vnto him: How came these woundes then in thine hondes? He shall answer: Thus am I wounded in the house off myne owne frendes.

"Arise (o thou swerde) vpon my shepherde, and vpon the pryncē of my people, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Smyte the shepherde and the shepe shalbe scatred abrode, and so will I turne myne honde to the litle ones. Then shall they call vpon my name, and I wil heare them: I will saye: it is my people. And they shal saye: LORDE, my God.

The xiiij. Chapter.

BEHOULDE, the daye of the LORDE cometh, that thou shalt be spoyled and robbed: for I wil gather together all the Heithen, to fight agaynst Ierusalem: so that the cite shalbe wonne, the houses spoyled, and the women defyled. The half of the cite shal go awaye in to captiuyte, and the residue of the people shal not be caried out of the cite.

After that shall the LORDE go forth to fight agaynst those Heithen, as men vse to fight in the daye of batell. The shall his fete stode vpon the mount oliuete, that lieth vpon the east syde of Ierusalem. And <sup>c</sup>he mount oliuete shal cleue in two, eastwarde, <sup>d</sup>and westwarde so <sup>e</sup>there shal be a greate valley: <sup>f</sup>and the halff mount shal remoue towarde the north, and the other half towarde the south.

And ye shall fle vnto the valley of my hilles, for the valley off the hylles shal reach vnto Asal. <sup>g</sup>Yee fle shall ye, like as ye fled for the earthquake in the dayes off Osias kynge of Iuda. And the LORDE my God shal come, and all sanctes with him. <sup>h</sup>In that daye shal it not be light, but colde and frost. This shalbe that speecvall daye, which is knowne vnto the LORDE: nether daye ner night, but aboute the euenynge tyme it shal be light. <sup>i</sup>In that tyme shall there waters of life runne out from Ierusalem: the half parte of them towarde the east see, <sup>j</sup>and the other half towarde the vttemost see, and shall continue both somer and wynter. <sup>k</sup>And the LORDE himself shalbe kynge ouer all the earth.

At that tyme shal there be one LORDE only, and his name shalbe but one. Men shal go aboute the whole earth, as vpon a felde: from Gibea to Remmon, and from <sup>l</sup>the south to Ierusalem. <sup>m</sup>She shalbe set vp, and inhabited in hir place: From Ben Iaminit porte, vnto the place of the first porte, <sup>n</sup>and vnto <sup>o</sup>the corner porte: and from the tower of Hanael, vnto the kynges wyne presses. There shall men dwell, and there shal be nomore cursinge, but Ierusalem shalbe safely inhabited.

This shalbe the plage, wherwith <sup>p</sup>the LORDE wil smyte all people, that haue fought agaynst Ierusalem: Namely, their flesh shal consume awaye, though they stonde vpon their fete: their eyes shall corrupte in their holes, and their tunge shal consume in their mouth.

In that daye shall the LORDE make a greate sedicion amonge them, so that one man shal take another by the honde, and laye his hondes vpon the hondes of his neyghboure. <sup>q</sup>Iuda shal fight also agaynst Ierusalem, <sup>r</sup>and the goodes of all the Heithen shalbe gathered together rounde aboute: golde and syluer and a very greate multitude off clothes. And so shal this plage go ouer horses, mules, camels, asses and all the beastes that shall be in the hooste, like as yonder plage was.

Euery one that remaineth then of all <sup>s</sup>the people, which came agaynst Ierusalem, shal go vp yearly, to worshippe the kynge (euene <sup>t</sup>the LORDE of hoostes) <sup>u</sup>and to keepe the feast off tabernacles. And loke what generacion vpon earth goeth not vp to Ierusalem, for to worshippe the kynge (euene the LORDE of hoostes) vpon the same shal come no rayne. <sup>v</sup>Yf the kynred of Egipte go not vp <sup>w</sup>and come not, it shall not rayne vpon them nether.

This shalbe the plage wherwith <sup>x</sup>the LORDE wil smyte all Heithen, that come not vp to keepe the feast of tabernacles: Yee this shalbe the synneplage of Egipte and the synneplage of all people, that go not vp to keepe the feast of tabernacles.

At that tyme shal the rydinge geer of <sup>y</sup>the horses be holy vnto the LORDE, and the kettels in the LORDES house shal be like the basens before the aluter: yee all the kettels in Ierusalem and Iuda, shalbe holy vnto the LORDE of hoostes: and all they that slaye offerings, shall come and take of them, and dight them therein. And at that tyme there shal be no mo Cananites in the house of the LORDE.

The Prophet Malachy.

What Malachy conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The benefites of God, shewed specially vnto Israel before all other: Agayne, the punyishment of the vnthanfulnessse, vnfaithfulnessse and covetousnesse of the prestes and the people.

Chap. II.

He threatneth punyishment and confucion vnto

the prestes, and commaundeth men to loue their wyues.

Chap. III.

Of Christes commynge, and of him that maketh redy his waye before him. Off the abrogacion of the olde leuiticall prestheade. Of the power of the iudge for to come and of that fearful daye.

The first Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE sheweth agaynst Israel by Malachy.

I HAUE loued you, sayeth  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE:  $\text{\textcircled{a}}$  yet ye saye: wherin hast thou loued vs? Was not Esau Jacobs brother, sayeth the LORDE? yet haue I loued Iacob, and hated Esau: "Yee I haue made his hilles waist, and his heretage a wyldernes for dragōs. And though Edom sayde: well, we are destroyed, we wil go buylde vp agayne the places that be waisted: yet (sayeth  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE of hoostes) what they buylded, that brake I downe:  $\text{\textcircled{b}}$  so that it was called a cursed londe, and a people, whom the LORDE hath euer bene angrie withall.

Your eyes haue sene it,  $\text{\textcircled{a}}$  ye youre selues must confesse, that  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE hath brought the londe of Israel to greate honoure. Shulde not a sonne honoure his father, and a seruaūt his master? Yf I be now a father, where is myne honoure? 'yf I be the LORDE, where am I feared? sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Now to you prestes, that despise my name. B And yf ye saye: wherin haue we despised thy name? In this, that ye offre vnclene bred vpō myne autler. And yf ye wil saye: wherin haue we offred eny vnclene thyng vnto the? In this that ye saye: the autler of the LORDE is not to be regarded. Yf ye offre  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  blynde, is not  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  euell? "And yf ye offre the lame and sick, is not that euell? Yee offre it vnto thy prynce, shal he be cōtent with the, or accepte thy personne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes?

And now make youre prayer before God, that he maye haue mercy vpon vs: for soch thynges haue ye done. Shal he regarde youre personnes (thynke ye) sayeth the LORDE of hoostes? Yee what is he amonge you, that wil do so much as to shut  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  dores, or to kyndle  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  fyre vpō myne autler for naught? I haue no pleasure in you, sayeth the LORDE off hoostes: and as for the meatofferinge, 'I wil not accepte it at youre honde.  $\text{\textcircled{c}}$  For from the rysinge vp of  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  sonne vnto  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  goinge downe of the same, my name is greate amonge the Gentiles: Yee in euery place shal there sacrifice be done, and a cleue meatofferynge offred vp vnto my name: for my name is greate amonge the Heithē, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. But ye haue vnhalowed it, in that ye saye, the autler of  $\text{y}$  LORDE is not to be regarded, and the thinge that is set therupon, not worthy to be eaten.

Now saye ye: It is but labour and trauayle, and thus haue ye thought scorue at it, (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) offerynge robbery, yee the lame and the sicke. Ye haue brought me in a meatofferynge, shulde I accepte it of youre honde, sayeth the LORDE? Cursed be the dyssembler, which hath in his flocke one that is male, and when he maketh a vowe, offereth a spotted one vnto the LORDE. For I am a greate kyng (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and my name is fearfull amonge the Heithen.

The ij. Chapter.

AND now (o ye prestes) this commaundement toucheth you: yf ye will not heare it, ner regarde it, to geue the glory vnto my name (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) <sup>a</sup> I wil sende a curse vpon you,  $\tau$  will curse youre blessings: yee curse them will I yf ye do not take hede. Beholde, I shal corrupte youre sede, and cast donge in youre faces: euen the donge of youre solempne feastes, and it shal cleue fast vpon you. And ye shall knowe, that I haue sent this commaundement vnto you: that my couenaunt which I made with Leui, might stonde, sayeth  $\text{y}$  LORDE of hoostes.

I made a couenaunt of life and peace with him: this I gaue him, that he might stonde in awe of me: and so he dyd feare me,  $\text{ad}$  had my name in reuerence. The lawe of treuth was in his mouth, and there was no wickednesse founde in his lippes. He walked with me in peace  $\text{ad}$  equyte, <sup>b</sup> and dyd turne many one awaye from their synnes. For the prestes lippes shulde be sure knowlege, that men maye seke the lawe at his mouth, for he is a messauger of the LORDE of hoostes. But as for you, ye are gone cleue out off the waye, and haue caused the multitude to be offended at the lawe: <sup>c</sup> ye haue broken the couenaunt of Leui, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore wil I also make you to be despised, and to be of no reputacion amonge all  $\text{y}$  people: because ye haue not kepte my wayes, but bene parciall in the lawe.

<sup>d</sup>Haue we not all one father? Hath not one God made vs? why doth euery one off vs then despise his owne brother, and so breake the couenaunt of oure fathers? Now hath Iuda offended: yee the abhominacion is done in Israel and in Ierusalē, for <sup>e</sup>Iuda hath defyled the Sactuary of the LORDE, which he loued, and hath kepte the daughter of a straunge God. But the LORDE shal destroye the mā that doth this (yee both the master  $\tau$  the scolar) out off the tabernacle of Iacob, with him that offreth vp meatofferynge vnto the LORDE off hoostes. Now haue ye brought it to this poynte agayne, that the autler of the LORDE is couered with teares, wepyng and mournyng: so that I will no more regarde the meatofferynge, nether wil I receaue or accepte eny thinge at youre hōdes.

And yet ye saye: wherefore? Euen because that where as the LORDE made a couenaunt betwixte  $\text{y}$  and the wife off thy youth, thou hast despised her: Yet is she thyne owne cōpanyon and married wife.

So dyd not <sup>f</sup>the one,  $\tau$  yet had he an excellent sprete. What dyd then the one? He sought the sede promised of God. Therefore loke well to youre sprete,  $\tau$  let no man despise  $\text{y}$  wife of his youth. Yf thou hatest her, put her awaye, sayeth the LORDE God of Israel, and <sup>g</sup>geue her a clothinge for the scorue, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Loke well then to youre sprete, and despise her not. Ye greue the LORDE with youre wordes, and yet ye saye: wherewithall haue we greued him? In this, that ye saye: All that do euell are good in the sight of God, and soch please him. Or els where is the God that punysheth?

The iij. Chapter

BEHOLDE, <sup>h</sup>I wil sende my messauger, <sup>i</sup> which shal prepare the waye before me: and the LORDE whom ye wolde haue, shal soone come to his temple, yee euen the messauger of the couenaunt whom ye longe for.

Beholde, he commeth, sayeth the LORDE

of hoostes. But who maye abyde the daye of his comynge? Who shalbe able to endure, when he appeareth? For he is like a gold-smithes fyre, and like washers sope. He shall syt him downe to trye and to cense  $\S$  syluer, he shal poure the children of Leui, and purifie them like as golde and syluer: that they maye brynge meatofferings vnto the LORDE in rightuousnes. Then shall the offeringe of Iuda and Ierusalem be acceptable vnto the LORDE, like as from the begynninge  $\tau$  in the yeaeres afore tyme. I will come  $\tau$  punyssh you,  $\tau$  I my self wil be a swift wytnes agaynst the witches, agaynst the aduouterers, agaynst false swearers: yee and agaynst those, that wrogeously kepe backe the hyrelinges dewty: which vexe the wyddowes  $\tau$  the fatherlesse,  $\tau$  oppresse the straunger, and feare not me, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. For I am the LORDE  $\S$  chaunge not,  $\tau$  ye (o children of Iacob) wil not leaue of:  $\S$  ye are gone awaye fro myne ordinaunces,  $\tau$  sens  $\S$  tyme of youre forefathers haue ye not kepte them.

$\S$  Turne you now vnto me, and I wil turne me vnto you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Ye saye: Wherin shal we turne? Shulde a man vse falsede and disceate with God, as ye vse falsede and disceate with me? Yet ye saye: wherein vse we disceate with the? In Tythes and heaue offerynges.  $\S$  Therefore are ye cursed with penury, because ye dyssemble with me, all the sorte of you.

Brynge euery Tythe in to my barne,  $\S$  there maye be meat in myne house: and proue me withall (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) yf I wil not open the wyndowes of heauen vnto you, and poure you out a blessing with plenteousnesse. Yee I shal reprove the consumer for youre sakes, so that he shall not eate vp the frute of youre grounde, nether shal  $\S$  vynyarde be baren in the felde, sayeth  $\S$  LORDE of hoostes: In so moch that all people shal saye, that ye be blessed, for ye shall be a pleasaunt lode, sayeth the LORDE off hoostes.

Ye speake hard wordes agaynst me, sayeth the LORDE. And yet ye saye: What haue we spoken agaynst the? Ye haue sayed: It is but lost labour, to serue God:  $\S$  What profit haue we for keypyng his commaundementes, and for walkinge humbly before the LORDE off hoostes? Therefore maye we saye, that the proude are happie, and that they which deale with vngodlynesse, are set vp: for they tempte God, and yet escape.

But they that feare God, saye thus one to another: The LORDE cōsidreth and heareth it. Yee it is before him a memorial boke written for such as eare the LORDE, and remembre his name. And in the daye that I wil make (saith  $\S$  LORDE of hoostes) they shalbe myne owne possession: and I wil fauoure them, like as a man fauoureth his owne sonne, that cloth him seruyce. Turne you therfore, and conside what difference is betwixt the rightuous and vngodly: betwixt him that serueth God, and him that serueth him not.

For marck, the daye cometh that shall burne as an ouē:  $\S$  and all the proude, yee and all such as do wickednesse, shalbe straw: and the daye that is for to come, shall burne thē vp (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) so that it shal leaue them nether rote ner braunch. But vnto you that feare my name, shall the Sōne of rightuousnesse aryse,  $\tau$  health shal be vnder his winges. Ye shal go forth,  $\tau$  multiplie as  $\S$  fat calves. Ye shal treade downe  $\S$  vngodly: for they shalbe like the ashes vnder the soles of your fete, in the daye  $\S$  I shal make, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Remember the lawe of Moses my seruaut, which I committed vnto him in Oreb  $\S$  for all Israel, with the statutes and ordinaunces. Beholde,  $\S$  I will sende you Elias  $\S$  prophet: before the cōmyng off the daye of the great and fearfull LORDE. He shall turne the hertes of the fathers to their children,  $\S$  and the hertes of the children to their fathers, that I come not, and smyte the earth with cursynge.

The translatoure vnto the reader.

THESE bokes (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not iudged amonge the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other scripture, as thou mayest perceaue by S. Jerome in epistola ad Paulinum. And the chefe cause therof is this: there be many places in them, that seme to be repugnaunt vnto the open and manyfest trueth in the other bokes of the byble. Neuertheles I haue not gathered them together to the intent that I wolde haue them despysed, or litle sett by, or that I shulde thinke them false, for I am not able to proue it: Yee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open scripture (tyme, place, and circumstance in all thinges considered) they shulde nether seme contrary, ner be vntruly & peruersly aledged. Treuth it is: A mā face can not be sene so wel in a water, as in a fayre glasse: nether cā it be shewed so clearly in a water that is stered or moued, as in a styll water. These & many other darck places of scripture haue bene sore stered and myxte with blynde and cuetous opynions of men, which haue cast soch a myst afore the eyes of ȳ symple, that as longe as they be not cōferred with the other places of scripture, they shall not seme other wyse to be vnderstonde, then as cuetousnes expoundeth them. But who so euer thou be that readest scripture, let the holy goost be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another vnto the: As for soch dreames, visions and darck sentences as be hyd from thy vnderstandinge, comnytte them vnto God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the sprete of God (which is the author therof) shal lede the in all trueth.

As for the prayer of Salomō (which thou findest not herin) ȳ prayer of Azarias, and the swete songe that he and his two felowes songe in the fyre: the first (namely the prayer of Salomon) readest thou in the eight chapter of the thirde boke of the kynges, so that it appeareth not to be Apocryphum: The other prayer and songe (namely of the thre children) haue I not founde amonge eny of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodotios translacion. Neuertheles, both because of those ȳ be weake and scrupulous, and for their sakes also that loue soch swete songes of thankesgeuinge: I haue not left them out: to the intent that the one shulde haue no cause to complayne, and that the other also might haue the more occasion to geue thanks vnto God in aduersite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

Chap. IX.

Of the counsell that was taken, as touchinge the vnclane mariage.

The first Chapter.

AND Iosias helde the feast of Easter in Ierusalem vnto the LORDE,<sup>a</sup> and slewe y<sup>e</sup> Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth. He set y<sup>e</sup> prestes also in ordre (acordige to their daylie courses) beyng arayed in longe garmētes in the temple of the LORDE. And he spake vnto the Levites the holy ministers of Israel, that they shulde halowe them selues vnto the LORDE, to set the holy arke of the LORDE, in the house that kynge Salomō the sonne of Dauid had buylded and sayde: Ye shal nomore beare the Arke vpon youre shulders. Now serue youre LORDE, & take the charge of his people of Israel, after youre vyllagies and youre trybes: acordinge as kynge Dauid the kynge of Israel hath ordered, & acordinge as Salomon his sonne hath honorably prepared: Yee loke y<sup>e</sup> all do seruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordninge and distribucion of the princypull mē which are appoynted out of the trybes, to do seruyce for the childrē of Israel. <sup>a</sup> Kyll <sup>β</sup> Passeouer, <sup>γ</sup> prepare offeringes for youre brethren, and do accordinge to the commaundemēt of <sup>δ</sup> LORDE, which he gaue vnto Moses. And vnto <sup>ε</sup> people <sup>ζ</sup> was foude, Iosias gaue xxx. thousande of shepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, <sup>η</sup> thre thousande oxē. These the kynge (of his kyngly liberalite) gaue vnto the people, accordinge as he had promysed: <sup>θ</sup> to the prestes (for the Passeouer) he gaue two thousande shepe <sup>ι</sup> and an hundreth oxē. Morouer Iechonias <sup>κ</sup> Semeias and Nathanael brethren, <sup>λ</sup> Hasabias, Iehiel and Iosabad, gaue them to the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe and fyue hundreth bullockes.

And whan these thinges were brought to passe, the prestes and the Leuites stode goodly in their ordre, and had the vnuenuded bred thorow out <sup>μ</sup> trybes. And after the ordninge of the pryncipall men in the trybes, they offred vnto the LORDE in the sight of the people, accordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses, <sup>ν</sup> <sup>ξ</sup> so they rosted the Easterlambe as accordinge was. As for the thāk offeringes <sup>ο</sup> the other, they dight thē in ketels <sup>π</sup> pottes, <sup>ρ</sup> sett them before the people with good will, and afterwarde before them selues and the prestes. For the prestes offred the fatt, vntyll the tyme was expyred, but the Leuites prepared for them selues <sup>σ</sup> for their brethren the childrē of Aaron. The syngers also <sup>τ</sup> children of Asaph stode in their ordre, accordinge as Dauid had denyed. So dyd Asaph, Zachary <sup>υ</sup> Iedithū, which were appoynted by the kynge. Morouer the porters <sup>φ</sup> dorekeepers stode by the dores <sup>χ</sup> <sup>ψ</sup> diligently, so <sup>ω</sup> none wente out of his stondinge <sup>ω</sup> seruyce: for their brethren (the Leuites) prepared for them. Thus were all thinges perfourmed, that belonged to the offrynge of the LORDE. In that daye they helde the Passeouer, <sup>ω</sup> offred thank offeringes besyde <sup>ω</sup> sacrifice of <sup>ω</sup> LORDE, accordinge to <sup>ω</sup> commaundement of kynge Iosias.

Leuites, <sup>ω</sup> Iewes <sup>ω</sup> all Israel, of all thē <sup>ω</sup> were at Ierusalē. In <sup>ω</sup> xviii: yeaere of <sup>ω</sup> raigne of Iosias was this Passeouer kepte. And with a perfecte hert dyd kynge Iosias ordre all his workes (before <sup>ω</sup> LORDE) <sup>ω</sup> <sup>ω</sup> things <sup>ω</sup> were wryttē of hī in tymes past, cōcernynge those <sup>ω</sup> synned <sup>ω</sup> were vngodly agaynst <sup>ω</sup> LORDE before all people, <sup>ω</sup> <sup>ω</sup> sought not the worde of <sup>ω</sup> LORDE vpon Israel. After all these actes of kynge Iosias, Pharao <sup>ω</sup> kynge of Egipte wētē vp, <sup>ω</sup> came towarde <sup>ω</sup> Carcamis by Euphrates, <sup>ω</sup> Iosias wētē to mete hī. Then sent the kynge of Egipte vnto Iosias, sayenge: what haue I to do with <sup>ω</sup>, o kynge of Iuda? I am not sent of <sup>ω</sup> LORDE to fight agaynst <sup>ω</sup>, for my warre is upō Euphrates, go thou <sup>ω</sup> waye home agayne in all <sup>ω</sup> haist. And Iosias wolde not turne agayne vpon his charet, but vndertoke to fight agaynst him, <sup>ω</sup> herkened not vnto <sup>ω</sup> worde of <sup>ω</sup> prophet, which he tolde him out of the mouth of God, but pitched a battaill agaynst him in <sup>ω</sup> felde of Mageddo. And the prynces preassed to kynge Iosias. Then sayde the kynge vnto his seruantes: <sup>ω</sup> Cary me awaye out of the battayll, for I am sore wounded. And immediatly his seruantes toke him awaye out of the front of the battayll. Then satt he vp vpon the secōde charett, came to Ierusalē, dyed, <sup>ω</sup> was buried in his fathers sepulchre. And in all Iewry they mourned for Iosias, yee the rulers also with their wyues made lamētacion for him vnto this daye: And this was done euer still in Israel.

These thinges are written in the boke of the stories of <sup>ω</sup> kynges of Iuda: namely, all the actes <sup>ω</sup> workes of kynge Iosias, his kyngly power <sup>ω</sup> maiesty, his vnderstandinge in the lawe of God, <sup>ω</sup> what he dyd, yee thinges which are not wryttē in the boke of the kynges of Israel <sup>ω</sup> Iuda. <sup>ω</sup> And <sup>ω</sup> people toke Iechonias the sonne of Iosias, <sup>ω</sup> made him kynge in <sup>ω</sup> steade of Iosias his father, whan he was xxxij. yeaere olde. And he raigned ouer Israel thre monethes. And the kinge of Egipte put him downe, <sup>ω</sup> he shulde not raigne in Ierusalē, <sup>ω</sup> raysed vp a taxinge of the people: namely, an C. talentes of syluer <sup>ω</sup> one talēt of golde. The kinge of Egipte also made Ioachim his brother kynge of Iuda <sup>ω</sup> Ierusalē. As for thē of the kynges counsell with the kynge himself and Zaraceles his brother, he toke thē, <sup>ω</sup> caried thē awaye presoners into Egipte. Fyue

And he dyd euell also in  $\text{f}$  sight of  $\text{f}$  LORDE,  $\tau$  cared not for  $\text{f}$  wordes  $\text{f}$  were spokē vnto hi by  $\text{f}$  prophet Ieremy at  $\text{f}$  mouth of the LORDE.<sup>6</sup> And where as he had made on oath vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor, he man-swore himself,  $\tau$  fell frō him hauninge a stiff neck  $\tau$  hert,  $\tau$  trāsgressed all  $\text{f}$  statutes  $\tau$  ordinaunces of the LORDE God of Israel. The rulers also  $\tau$  heades of  $\text{f}$  people of the LORDE dyd moch euell,  $\tau$  became vngodly, more thē the Heithen, beynde defyled in all manner of abhominaciōs: Yee  $\tau$  defyled  $\text{f}$  holy tēple of the LORDE at Ierusalē. And the f God of their fathers sent his messaungers vnto thē, to turne them backe  $\tau$  to call thē agayne frō their synnes: for he wolde fayne haue spared thē for his holy tabernacles sake. Neuertheles, they had his messaungers in derision:  $\tau$  loke what God spake vnto thē by his prophetes, they made but a sporte of it. This drew on so longe, tyll the LORDE was wroth with his people for their vngodlynes,  $\tau$  tyll he caused the kinges of  $\text{f}$  Caldees to come vp, which slew their yonge men with the swerde, yee euen in the compass of their holy tēple,  $\tau$  spared no body, nether yonger olde, nether mayden ner yonge man: but they were all deluyered in to the power of the kynges of  $\text{f}$  Caldees,  $\tau$  all the holy vessels of the LORDE and the kynges treasures toke they,  $\tau$  caried them vnto Babilon. <sup>7</sup> As for the house of the LORDE, they brēt it, & brake downe the walles of Ierusalċ, set fyre ypon hir towres, destroyed all hir noble buyldings and brought them to naught, and the people that were not slayne with the swerde, they earied vnto Babilon.

Thus became they þ̅ presoners ⁊ bōde mē of þ̅ kyng of Babilon, tyll they were delyuered ⁊ raygned for them selues, when the wordes of the LORDE were fulfilled, which he promysed them by the mouth of the prophet Ieremy, and tyll the londe had hir rest:
namely, all the time þ̅ it laye wayest, had it rest ⁊ quyetnes lxxvij. yeares.

The ii. Chapter.

NOW whā kyngē Cyrus raignēd ouer the Persians, ⁊ whā the LORDE wolde perfourme the worde ȝ he had promysed by the mouth of the prophet Ieremy: the LORDE raysed vp the sprete of Cyrus, the kyngē of the Persiān, so ȝ he caused this wyrtynge to be proclaimed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kyngē of ȝ Persians: The LORDE of Israel that hys LORDE hath made me kyngē of the lōde, and commaunded me to buylde him an house at Ierusalem in Iewry. Yf there be eny now of youre people, ȝ LORDE be with him, and go vp with him to Ierusalem. And all they that dwell rounde aboute ȝ place, shal helpe the, whether it be with golde, with syluer, with giftes, with horses and necessary catell, and all other thinges that are brought with a fre wyll to the house of the LORDE at Ierusalē.

Then the pryncipall mē out of the trybes and vyllages of Iuda and Ben Iamin stode vp: so dyd the prestes also ⁊ the leuites (whō the LORDE had moued) to go vp, and to buydle the house of the LORDE at Ieru-sālē. And they that were aboute them, helped them with all maner of golde, and syluer, and cattell also and with many liberrall giftes, and this dyd many one, whose mynde was stered vp therto. Kyngc Cyrus also brought forth the vessels and ornamētes, that were halowed vnto the LORDE (which Nabuchodonosor the kyngc of Babilon had caried awaye from Ierusalem, and consecrated them to his Idoll and ymage) and deliuered them to Mithridatus his treasurer, and by him they were deliuered to Salmanasar y debyte in Iewry. And this was the nōbre of them: Two thousande and iij. C. syluer boules, xxx. syluer basens, xxx. basens of golde, ij. M. and iij. C. vessels of syluer, and a thousande besyde. All the vessels of golde and syluer were v. M. viij. C. and lx. These were nombred vnto Salmanasar, and them that were come agayne with him to Ierusalē out of the captiuyte of Babilon. Now in the tyne of kynge Artaxerses the kynge of Persia, these men: Balemus and Mithridatus, Sabellius, Rathimus, Balthemus, Semelius y scribe, and other that dwelt in Samaria t in other places vnder y dominion therof. Wrote a letter vnto kynge Artaxerses, wherin they complayned vnto the kynge of them in Iewry and Ierusalem. The letter was made after this maner:

C Syr, thy seruantes Rathimus the story wryter, Sabellius the Scribe, t other iudges of thy courte in Celosyria and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifest to our lorde the kynge, that the Iewes which are come vp frō you vnto vs in to the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to set vp the tēple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be sett vp agayne, they shal not only refuse to geue trybutes and taxinges, but also rebell vtterly agaynst the kynge. And for so moch as they take this in hande now aboute the temple, we thought it reason, to thinke no scorne of it, but to shewe it vnto our lorde the kynge, t to certifie him therof: to the intent y yf it please the kinge, he maye cause it be sought in the boke of olde: and thou shalt fynde soch warnynge wrytten, and shalt vnderstonde, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and disobedient, that it hath subdued kynges and cities, and that the Iewes which dwell therin, haue euer bene a rebellious, obstinate, vnfaithfull and fightynge people, for the which cause this cite is waysted. Wherefore now we certifie oure lorde the kynge, that yf this cite be buylded and occupied agayne, t the walles therof set vp a new, thou canst haue no passage in to Celosyria and Phenices.

D Then wrote the kynge to Rathimus the story wryter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius y scribe, and to the other officers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epistle which thou sentest vnto me, and haue commaunded to make diligent search, and haue founde, that the cite hath euer resisted kynges, that the same people are dishobedient, and haue caused moch warre, t that mightie kynges haue raigned in Ierusalem, which also haue raysed vp taxinges of Syria and Phenices. Wherefore, I haue commaunded those people, that they shal not buylde the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they procede no further with the buyldinge: for so moch as it might be the cause of warre, and displeasure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rathymus and Sabellius the scribe and the rulers in the londe had red the wrytinge of kynge Artaxerses, they gatt them together, and came in all the haist to Ierusalem with an hoost of horsemen, and with moch people of fote, and forbad them to buylde. And so they left of from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the seconde yeare of kynge Darius.

The iij. Chapter.

KYNGE Darius made a greate feast vnto A his seruantes, vnto all his courte, t to all the officers of Media and Persia, yee and to all the debytes t rulers that were vnder him, from India vnto Ethiopia, an hundreth t xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dronken beinge satisfied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kynge wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to slepe, and so awaked.

Then the thre yonge men, that kepte the kynges personne, and watched his body, commoned amonge them selues, and spake one to another: Let every one of vs saye some thinge, and loke whose sentence is wyser and more excellent then the other, vnto him shal kinge Darius geue greate giftes, and clothe him with purple. He shal geue him vessels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and coverings: he shall make him a costly charett t a brydle of golde, he shall geue him a bonet of whyte sylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he shal be the seconde t pryncipall nexte vnto kynge Darius, t that because of his wyszdoine, and shalbe called y kynges kynsman.

So euery one wrote his meaninge, sealed it B and layed it vnder the kynges pelowe, and sayde: whan the kyng aryseth, we will geue him oure wrytinges: and loke whose worde the kyng and his chefe lordes iudge to be the most wysely spoken, the same shall haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a stronge thinge. The secōde wrote: The kyng is strōger. The thirde wrote: wemen haue yet more strength, but aboue all thinges y<sup>e</sup> trueth beareth awaye the victory. Now whan the kyng was rysen vp, they toke their wrytinges and deliuered them vnto him, and so he red them. Then sent he forth to call all his chefe lordes, all the debytes and rulers of the countrees of Media and Persia. And whan they were sett downe in the councell, the wrytinges were red before them. And he commaunded to call for y<sup>e</sup> yonge mē, y<sup>e</sup> they might declare their meanynges thē selues by mouth. So when they were sent for, and came in, y<sup>e</sup> kyng sayde vnto them: shew vs and make vs to vnderstōde, what the thinges are that ye haue wrytten.

Then beganne the first (which had spokē of the strength of wyne) and sayde: O ye men, wyne is maruelous strōge,<sup>a</sup> and ouercōmeth them y<sup>e</sup> drynke it: it disceaueth the mynde, and bryngeth both the poore man and y<sup>e</sup> kyng to dotage and vanite. Thus doth it also with the bondman and with the fre, with the poore and rych: it taketh awaye their understandinge, and maketh them careles and mery, so that none of them remembreth eny heuynes, dett or dewtie: It causeth a man to thinke also that y<sup>e</sup> thinge which he doth, is honest and good: and remembreth not that he is a kyng, nor y<sup>e</sup> he is in auctorite, and y<sup>e</sup> he ought not to do soch thinges. Morouer, whan men are drynckinge, they forgett all frendshipe, all brotherly faithfulness and loue: but as soone as they are dronckē, they drawe out the swerde and wil fight: and whā they are layed downe frō the wyne, and so rysen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Iudge ye now, Is not wyne the strongest? For who wolde els take in hande, to do soch thinges? And whan he had spoken this, he helde his tongue.

The iiii. Chapter.

Then the secōde (which had sayde, y<sup>e</sup> the kyng was stronger) beganne to speake, sayēge: O ye men, are not they the strongest and most excellent, y<sup>e</sup> cōquere the lōde and the see, and all y<sup>e</sup> is in y<sup>e</sup> see and in the earth? Now is the kyng lorde of all these thinges, and hath dominion of thē all: and loke what he cōmaūdeth, it is done. Yf he sende his mē forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hilles, walles and towres. They are slayne, and slaye (other men) them selues, and ouer passe not y<sup>e</sup> kynges worde. Yf they get the victory, they brynge the kyng all the spoyle. Likewyse, the other y<sup>e</sup> medle not with warres and fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they brynge trybute vnto y<sup>e</sup> kyng. And yf y<sup>e</sup> kyng alone do not cōmaūde to kyll, they kyll: yf he cōmaūde to forgeue, they forgeue: yf he cōmaūde to smyte, they smyte: yf he byd dryue awaye, they dryue awaye: yf he commaūde to buylde, they buylde: yf he cōmaūde to breake downe, they breake downe: yf he cōmaūde to plante, they plante. The comon people and y<sup>e</sup> rulers are obediēt vnto him. And y<sup>e</sup> kyng in the meane season sytteth hī downe, eateth and drynkeh, and taketh his rest: thē kepe they watch rōūde aboute y<sup>e</sup> kinge, and not one of thē darre gett him out of y<sup>e</sup> waye, to do his owne busynes, but must be obediēt vnto y<sup>e</sup> kinge at a worde. Iudge ye now o ye men, how shulde not he go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediēt? And whan he had spokē this, he helde his tonge. The thirde (whose name was Zorobabel, which had spokē of wemen and of y<sup>e</sup> trueth) begūne to saye after this maner: O ye mē, it is not y<sup>e</sup> greate kyng, it is not the multitude of mē, nether is it wine y<sup>e</sup> excelleth: Who is it thē, y<sup>e</sup> hath y<sup>e</sup> lordshipe ouer thē? Haue not wemen borne the kyng, and all y<sup>e</sup> people y<sup>e</sup> rule these thinges? Haue not wemen borne thē, and brought thē vp, y<sup>e</sup> plante the vynes, wherout y<sup>e</sup> wyne cōmeth? They make garmētes for all mē, they geue honour vnto all men, and with out wemen can not men lyue. Yf they gather golde and syluer and all precious thinges, and se a fayre and wel fauoured womā, they leaue all together, and turne their eyes onely vnto the woman, and gape vpon her, and haue more desyre vnto her, then vnto the syluer and golde, or eny maner of precious thinge. A mā leaueth his father<sup>b</sup> and brought him vp, he leaueth his owne natural couētre, and cleueth vnto the woman: yee he ioperdeth his life with the woman, and remembreth nether father, ner mother, ner countre. By this then ye must nedes knowe,  $\text{y}$  weemen haue  $\text{y}$  domynion ouer you.

Doth it greue you? A mā taketh his swerde  $\text{a}$  goeth his waye to steale, to kyl, to murther, to sayle vpon the see,  $\text{a}$  seyth a lyou, and goeth in the darcknes: and when he hath stollen, disceaue  $\text{a}$  robbed, he bringeth it vnto his loue. Agayne, a man loueth his wyfe better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their wyttes  $\text{a}$  become bondmen for their wyues sakes: many one also haue perished,  $\text{a}$  haue bene slayne,  $\text{a}$  haue synned because of weemen.

C And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greate in his power,  $\text{a}$  all lōdes stode in awe of him,  $\text{a}$  no man darre laye hande vpon him: yet dyd I se,  $\text{y}$  Apame ( $\text{y}$  daughter of the greate kynge Bartacus) the kynges cōcubine, satt besyde the kynge vpō the right hāde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and set it vpon hir owne heade, and smote the kynge with hir left hande. Morouer, the kynge loked vpō her with open mouth: yf she laughed vpon him, he laughed also: but yf she toke eny displeasure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her,  $\text{a}$  to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

O ye men, are not weemen then stronger? Greate is the earth, and hie is the heauen that do these thinges. Then the kynge  $\text{a}$  the prynces loked one vpon another. So he beganne to speake of the trueth: O ye men, are not wemē stronger? Greate is the earth, hie is the heauen, swyft is the course of the Sonne, he compaseth the heauen rounde aboute,  $\text{a}$  fetcheth his course agaiue to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greate is the trueth, and stronger then all thinges. All the earth calleth vpon the trueth, the heauen prayseth it, all workes shake and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is vnrighteous, weemen are vnrighteous: all the children of men are vnrighteous, yee all their workes are vnrighteous, and there is no trueth in them, in their vnrighteousnes also shall they be destroyed and perish. <sup>a</sup>As for  $\text{y}$  trueth, it endureth, and is allwaye stronge: it lyneth, and cōquereth for euermore worlde without ende.

D The trueth accepteth no personnes, it putteth no difference betwixte rych or poore, betwixte  $\text{y}$  mightie or symple, but doth right vnto euery mā, whether they be euel or good,  $\text{a}$  all men are louingly dealt withall in the workes of it. In the iudgment of it there is no vnrighteous thinge, but strength, kingdome  $\text{a}$  power and maiesty for euermore. Blessed be the God of trueth.

And with that he helde his tōge, and all  $\text{y}$  people cried  $\text{a}$  sayde: Greate is the trueth, and aboue all. Then sayde the kynge vnto him: Axe what thou wilt, more then is appointed in the wrytinge, and I shal geue it the, for thou art founde wyser then thy companyons: thou shalt sytt nexte me, and be my kynsman. Then sayde he vnto the kynge: Remember thy promyse and vowe, which thou hast vowed and promysed (in the daye whan thou camest to the kyngdome) to buylde vp Ierusalem, and to sende againe all the vessels and Iewels, that were taken awaye out of Ierusalem: which Cyrus separated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde sende them agayne: And thy minde was to buylde vp the temple, which the Edomites brēt, whan Ierusalem was destroyed by the Caldees. This onely (O kynge) is the thinge that I requyre, this is  $\text{y}$  maiesty, which, I desyre  $\text{a}$  axe of the: that thou performe the vowe, which thou with thine owne mouth hast made vnto the kynge of heauen.

E Then Darius the kynge stode vp, and kyssed him, and wrote a letter vnto all the debytes and shreues, to all  $\text{y}$  lordes and nobles,  $\text{y}$  they shulde conuey him forth,  $\text{a}$  all them  $\text{y}$  wolde go vp with him. He wrote a letter also vnto all  $\text{y}$  shreues  $\text{y}$  were in Celosyria  $\text{a}$  Phenices,  $\text{a}$  vnto Libanus,  $\text{y}$  they shulde harle cedre trees from Libanus vnto Ierusalem, to buylde  $\text{y}$  cite withall. Morouer he wrote vnto all  $\text{y}$  Iewes that were gone out of his realme in to Iewry because of the freedom,  $\text{y}$  no officer, no ruler ner shreue shulde come to their dores: and that all their londe which they had conquered, shulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomytes shulde geue ouer the cities and villages of the Iewes, which they had taken in: yee  $\text{a}$  that they shulde yearly geue xx. talētes to  $\text{y}$  buyldinge of the temple, vntill the tyme that it were fynished: and to the daylie halowinge of the brent offeringes (as it is commaunded) ten talentes yearly also: And y<sup>e</sup> all they which come from Babilon to buylde the cite, shulde haue fre lybertie, they ⁊ their children, and all the prestes.

f He wrote the greatnesse also, ⁊ commaunded that the holy garment shulde be geuen thē, wherein they ministred: and wrote that commaundementes shulde be geuen to the Leuites, vntill the daye, that the house were fynished and Ierusalem buylded vp: and commaunded that all they that watched the cite, shulde haue their porcions and wagies.

He gaue ouer also all the vessell y<sup>e</sup> Cyrus had separated from Babilon: ⁊ all y<sup>e</sup> Cyrus had geuē in cōmaundement, y<sup>e</sup> same charged be also, y<sup>e</sup> it shulde be done, ⁊ sent vnto Ierusalem. Now whan this yonge mā was gone forth, he turned his face towarde Ierusalē, ⁊ prayd y<sup>e</sup> kyng of heauē, ⁊ sayde: Of y<sup>e</sup> cōmeth victory, of the cōmeth wyszdome ⁊ clearnesse, ⁊ I am thy seruauant. Blessed art thou, which hast geuen me wyszdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of oure fathers.

And so he toke the letters, ⁊ wente vnto Babilon: And whan he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethrē y<sup>e</sup> were at Babilō, ⁊ they prayd y<sup>e</sup> God of their fathers, y<sup>e</sup> he had geuē them refreszshinge ⁊ lyberte to go vp, ⁊ to buylde Ierusalē ⁊ the temple (which is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes ⁊ gladnesse, seuen dayes longe.

The b. Chapter.

A*FTER this, were the prynciall mē of all y<sup>e</sup> vyllages chosen in the trybes ⁊ kinreddes, that they shulde go vp with their wines and children, with their seruauantes and maydens, with all their catell ⁊ substance. And Darius the kyng sent with them a thousande horsmen, to conueye them safely vnto Ierusalem: and their brethrē were glad, playenge vpon instrumentes, and synginge.

And these are the names of the mē, which wente vp out of the vyllages accordinge to the trybes. The prestes that serued in the temple: The sonnes of Sel, the sonnes of Gaspha, the sonnes of Tobloch, the sonnes of Caria, the sonnes of Sub, the sonnes of Heliu, the sonnes of Labana,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Arnacha,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Acub, the sonnes of Vtha, the sonnes of Cetha, the sonnes of Aggab, the sonnes of Obay, the sonnes of Anani, the sonnes of Cana,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Geddu,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of An,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Radin,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Desanon, the sonnes of Nechoba, the sonnes of Caseba, the sonnes of Goza, the sonnes of Ozul, the sonnes of Sinona, the sonnes of Atra,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Hastem,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Asiana,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Manei,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Nasisin,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Accufa,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Agista,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Azui,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Fauon, the sonnes of Phasalon, the sonnes of Meeda, the sonnes of Sasa, the sonnes of Cared,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Barcus, the sonnes of Sarea,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Coesi,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Nasit,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Agista, the sonnes of Pedon: Salomon his sonnes, the sonnes of Asophot, the sonnes of Phazida, the sonnes of Celi,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Dedon, the sonnes of Gaddahel, the sonnes of Zapheus,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Aggia, the sonnes of Sacharet,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Sabathē, the sonnes of Saroneth,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Malsit,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Ania,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Sasus,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Addus,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Suba,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Eura,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Rahotis, the sonnes of Phasphat,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Mahmon. All these mynistred in the Sanctuary,  $\tau$  were seruauntes of Salomon: euen iij. C. and lxxxij.

Chelmellat Thelarsa (whose prynces were Carnelā  $\tau$  Careth)  $\tau$  might not shewe forth their cities  $\tau$  kynreddes, how they were of Israel: The sonnes of Dalarus,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Tubē,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Nechodaicus. Of  $\hat{y}$  prestes  $\hat{y}$  executed  $\hat{y}$  office of  $\hat{y}$  presthode,  $\tau$  were not founde: The sonnes of Obia,  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Achisos, the sonnes of Addin, which married one of  $\hat{y}$  daughters of Phargeleu,  $\tau$  were named, after him. The writinge of  $\hat{y}$  same kynred was sought in  $\hat{y}$  register of their generacion, but it was not founde: and therefore were they forbyddē to execute  $\hat{y}$  office of  $\hat{y}$  presthode. Vnto these sayde Nehemias and Astharas,  $\hat{y}$  they shulde haue no porcion in  $\hat{y}$  Sanctuary, tyll there rose vp an hie prest,  $\hat{y}$  were well instructe in the playne clearnes  $\tau$  trueth. Of all Israel (besyde seruauntes  $\tau$  maydens) there were xliij. M. iij. C.  $\tau$  xl. Now were there of seruauntes  $\tau$  maydens, vij. M. iij. C. and xxxvj. Of synginge mē  $\tau$  synginge wemen there were ij. C.  $\tau$  lxxv. Foure hundred  $\tau$  xxxv. Camels. Seuen thousande  $\tau$  xxxvj. horses. Two hundred thousande  $\tau$  xlv. Mooles. Fyue thousande and xxxv. Asses.

Their heades also and the rulers in the trybes, when they came to Ierusalem,  $\tau$  wolde buylde  $\tau$  sett vp  $\hat{y}$  tēple of God againe in his place, they gaue (after their abylyte) vnto the tēple, to  $\hat{y}$  treasure  $\tau$  to  $\hat{y}$  seruyce of the Sactuary, xij. M. poundes of golde, v. thousande of syluer,  $\tau$  an hundred prestes garmētes. And so dwelt the prestes  $\tau$  the Levites,  $\tau$  the people  $\hat{y}$  wente out to Ierusalē  $\tau$  in the countre there aboute, the syngers also  $\tau$  the porters, euery one of Israel in his owne lande.

E So whan the seuenth moneth came, and whan the childrē of Israel were euery man<sup>e</sup> at his busines, they came all with one cōsent in to the court, which was before  $\hat{y}$  east dore. And there stode Iesua the sonne of Iosedec and his brethren  $\hat{y}$  prestes,  $\tau$  Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and his brethren, settinge vp an altur, to offre brent sacrifices vpon it, as it is written in  $\hat{y}$  lawe of Moses.

There came people also of other countrees, and the Heithen out of all londes set vp the altur in his place, and offred sacrifices  $\tau$  brent offerynges vnto the LORDE in the mornynge. And so they helde the feast of tabernacles, as it is commaunded in the lawe.<sup>d</sup>

And daylie offred they as acordinge was, and made the sacrifices appoynted, the offerings also of the Sabbathes and of the new Moones, and all holy feastes. <sup>a</sup>And all they that vowed offeringes vnto the LORDE, beganne at the new Moone of  $\frac{y}{y}$  seuēth moneth to offre vnto God, for the temple of the LORDE was not yet buylded. And they gaue vnto the Masons and Carpēters, money, meate  $\tau$  drynke with chearfulnesse. Vnto them of Sydon also and Tyre they gaue cartes,  $\frac{y}{y}$  they shulde cary Cedre trees from Libanus to be ieastes and beames, and that they shulde make shippes in the hauen of Ioppa, acordinge as it was appoynted and ordeyned, by Cyrus kyng of the Persians.

And in the seconde yeare they came in to the temple of God at Ierusalem. In the seconde moneth beganne Zorobabel<sup>b</sup> the sonne of Salathiel, and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, and their brethren the prestes and Leuites, and all they that were come vnto Ierusalem out of the captiuite of Babilon,  $\tau$  layed the foundacion of the temple, in the new Moone of the seconde moneth in the seconde yeare  $\frac{y}{y}$  they were come in to Iewry and Ierusalem. And they appoynted the Leuites (that were aboue xx. yeare olde) vnto the seruyce of the LORDE: so Iesua and his sonnes and his brethren all the Leuites stode together, and perfourmed the lawe  $\tau$  ordinance in the house of the LORDE.

And the prestes stode and had their garments  $\tau$  trompettes,  $\tau$  the Leuites, the sonnes of Asaph had Cymbals, geuyng thanks, and prayes vnto the LORDE, acordinge as Dauid the kyng of Israel had ordeyned.<sup>c</sup> And the songe that they dyd synge vnto the LORDE, was after this maner: O synge vnto the LORDE,<sup>d</sup> for he is gracious, and his goodnes vpon Israel endureth for euer. And all the people blew out with trompettes, and sunge with loude voyce, praysynge the LORDE together in the rearinge vp of the house of the LORDE. There came also from amonge the prestes and Leuites the rulers and elders, acordinge to the trybes and kynreds (soch as had sene the house afore) to the buyldinge of this temple with greate crye and greate mournynge, many also with trompettes and greate ioye: In so moch, that the trompettes might not wel be herde for the wepyng and mournynge. For the comon people blew goodly vpo the trompettes.

Then came the enemies of the trybes of Iuda and Ben Iamin,<sup>e</sup> to knowe what that trōpettyng and noyse of shawmes might be. And they perceaued  $\frac{y}{y}$  it was they which were come agayne out of captiuite,  $\tau$  wolde buylde the temple a new vnto the LORDE God of Israel. So they wente to Zorobabel and Iesua and to the rulers of the vyllages,  $\tau$  sayde vnto them: Shal we buylde with you also? for we like wyse haue herde youre LORDE,  $\tau$  we walke after the same maner, from the dayes of Aszbazareth the kinge of Assiria, which brought vs hither. Then Zorobabel and Iesua and the rulers of the vyllages of Israel sayde vnto them: It is not mete, that ye shulde buylde the temple of oure God with vs: we oure selues alone wil buylde vnto the LORDE, like as Cyrus<sup>f</sup> the kyng of the Persians hath commaunded vs.

But the Heithen in the londe layed them selues against those that were in Iewry, helde vp the buyldinge from them, layed wayte vpo them preuely, stopped soch as brought eny thinge to them, forbad them to buylde,  $\tau$  hyndered those that made thē passage, that the buyldinge shulde not be fynished:  $\tau$  this contynued so longe as kyng Cyrus lyued:  $\tau$  so they put of the buyldinge for the space of two yeare, vntill  $\frac{y}{y}$  raigne of kyng Darius.

The vi. Chapter.

NOT with stondinge, in the seconde yeare <sup>a</sup> of the raigne of Darius,<sup>e</sup> Aggeus  $\tau$  Zachary the sonne of Addo prophecied vpon them in Iewry and Ierusalem, in the name of the God of Israel. Then Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec stode vp,<sup>b</sup> and beganne to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, when the prophetes of the LORDE helped them.

At the same tyme came Sysenes the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, with the landlordes and his companyons, and sayde vnto them: Who hath bydden  $\tau$  commaunded you to buylde the house? to make the rofe and all other thinges agayne? And who are the workemen, that buylde them? Neuer-theles the elders of the Iewes had soch grace of the LORDE, that they wolde not be lett (though they were prouoked therto) but buylded on still, untill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an answer receaved from him. The letter that these men sent vnto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

B Sysennus the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, and the land lordes with their cōpaniōs, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, sende their salutaciō vnto Darius the kynge. We certifie oure lorde the kynge, that we came in to the londe of Iewry, & wente to Ierusalem: where we founde them buyldinge the greате house of God and the tēple, with greате costly fre stone and with goodly tymbre for the walles: yee they make greате haist with the worke, & helpe one another, and it goeth forth prosperously in their handes, and with greате diligence & worshippe is it made. Then axed we the elders, who had cōmaunded them to make vp the house and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, to ꝑ intēt that we might certifie the perfectly, and wryte vnto the, the names of those ꝑ were ꝑ rulers of the worke. So they gaue vs this answer: we are the seruantes of the LORDE, which made heauen and earth: & as for this house,<sup>a</sup> it hath bene buylded and set vp afore tyme by the greате and mightie kynge of Israel. But whan oure fathers prouoked God vnto wrath, & synned agaynst the God of Israel, <sup>b</sup> he gaue the ouer in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe ꝑ house and brēt it, and caried away the people presoners vnto Babilon.

C Neuertheles, in the first year that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon,<sup>c</sup> Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buyle vp this house agayne: and all the ornaments that Nabuchodonosor caried away from Ierusalem vnto Babilon, and appropriated vnto his owne temple: those brought Cyrus forth agayne, and deluyered them to Zorobabel & to Salmanasar the vndershreue, commaundynge them, ꝑ they shulde brynge those same ornamētes agayne to Ierusalē in to ꝑ tēple, & to begynne from ꝑ tyme forth, to buyle the tēple agayne in his owne place. The Salmanasar layed the foundation of ꝑ LORDES house at Ierusalem, and euer sence haue they buylded, & yet is it not ended. And therefore (O kynge) ꝑ thou thynkest it good, let it be sought in the Lybraries & rolles of kynge Cyrus: ꝑ it be founde thē, that it is done with the counsell and cōsent of kynge Cyrus, and ꝑ oure lorde ꝑ kynge be so mynded, let him wryte vnto vs therof.

D Then cōmaunded kynge Darius, to seke in the Lybraries:<sup>d</sup> and so at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde soch a wrytinge: In the first year of the raigne of Cyrus, the same kynge Cyrus cōmaunded, ꝑ the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem shulde be buylded agayne (& odoures to be made there continually vnto the LORDE) whose heyth shalbe ten cubites, ꝑ bredth lx. cubites & iij. square with thre hewen stones, with a loft of tymbre of the same cōuntre, yee with a new loft, & the expenses therof to be geuen of ꝑ house of kynge Cyrus. And the ornamētes of golde & syluer, ꝑ Nabuchodonosor toke out of the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, shalbe set agayne in the temple at Ierusalē, where they were afore. Sysennus also the vndershreue in Syria and Phenices, ꝑ prynces and their companions, and the other ꝑ be head rulers in Syria and Phenices, shall not medle ner haue eny thinge to do with that place.

E I Cyrus haue cōmaunded also, that they shal buyle the house of the LORDE whole vp: & haue ordeyned them, to helpe those ꝑ be come out of captiuyte, tyll the house of the LORDE be fynished: & out of the tribute and taxinge that is yearly raysed vp in Syria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne summe, to the offerynge of the LORDE: and the same to be deluyered vnto Zorobabel the officer: that he therewithall maye ordeyne oxen, rammes, lambes, & corne, salt, wyne and oyle, and that continually euery year: after the expences which the prestes that be at Ierusalem, shew to be made daylie:<sup>e</sup> this shalbe geuen vnto them without delaye, that they maye offer sacrifices daylie to the hyst God, for the kynge and for his seruantes, and to praye for their lyues. Let it be proclaimed also on euery syde, that who so euer breaketh or despyseth this cōmaundement of ꝑ kynge, shalbe hanged vpon a galow (made of his owne good) & all his goodes shalbe seasoned vnto  $\hat{y}$  kynge. The LORDE therefore (whose name is there called vpon) rote out and destroye all  $\hat{y}$  kynges and people, that vndertake by violence to hynder the same, or to deale vncourtously with the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem. I Darius the kinge haue ordeyned, that these thinges shalbe done with all diligence.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN Sysennes  $\hat{y}$  vndershreue in Celsosyria and Phenices, and the other landlordes with their companyons, obeyed the thinges that kynge Darius had ordered, were diligent in the holy workes,  $\tau$  were felow helpers with the olde rulers of the Iewes. And so the worke of the Sanctuary wente forth and prospered, whan Aggeus and Zachary prophecied. And they perfourmed all thinges thorow the commaundement of the LORDE God of Israel, and after the deuyce of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerses kynges of Persia.

And thus was oure house fynished, vnto the xxij. daye of the moneth Addar in  $\hat{y}$  vj. yeare of kynge Darius. And the children of Israel the prestes  $\tau$  the Leuites,  $\tau$  the other that were come out of captiuyte,  $\tau$  soch as were ioyned vnto them, dyd accordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses. And in the dedicacion of the temple they offred an hundredth oxen, an C. rammes, iij. C. lambes,  $\tau$  xij. goates for the synnes of all the people of Israel, after  $\hat{y}$  nombre of the trybes of Israel. The prestes also  $\tau$  the Leuites stode arayed in the prestly garmetes, after  $\hat{y}$  trybes, ouer all  $\hat{y}$  workes of the LORDE God of Israel, accordinge to  $\hat{y}$  boke of Moses, and the porters by all the dores.

And the children of Israel (with those  $\hat{y}$  were come out of captiuyte) helde the Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth, whan the prestes and the Leuites were sanctified. They that came out of captiuyte, were not all sanctified together: but the Leuites were all sanctified together. And so all they that came out of captiuyte, kylled the easter lambe, for their brethre, for the prestes  $\tau$  for them selues. And the childre of Israel  $\hat{y}$  came out of captiuyte,  $\tau$  escaped frō all  $\hat{y}$  abhominacions of the Heithē, sought the LORDE, and kepte the feast of vneleuended bred vij. daies longe, eatinge  $\tau$  drynkyng  $\tau$  were mery before the LORDE:  $\hat{y}$  the LORDE had turned the deuyce of the kynge of Assiria,  $\tau$  comforted their handes to the workes of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE God of Israel.

The viij. Chapter.

AND after him, whan Artaxerses the kynge of  $\hat{y}$  Persiās raigned,<sup>a</sup> there wēte vnto him Eszdras the sonne of Saraia, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Helchia,  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoe,  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Eleazar,  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Aaron  $\hat{y}$  first prest. This Eszdras wēte vp from Babilon (for he had good vnderstandinge in  $\hat{y}$  lawe of Moses,  $\hat{y}$  was geuē of the LORDE God of Israel, to be taught  $\tau$  done in dede.) And  $\hat{y}$  kinge fauoured him,  $\tau$  dyd him greate worships and honoure, after all his desyres. There wente vp with him also certayne of  $\hat{y}$  children of Israel, of the prestes, of  $\hat{y}$  Leuites, of the syngers, porters, and mynisters of  $\hat{y}$  temple at Ierusalem.

In the vij. yeare of the raigne of kynge Artaxerses, in the v. moneth,  $\hat{y}$  is in the vij. yeare of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v. moneth,  $\tau$  came the hye wayte to Ierusalē after his commaundement, like as the LORDE had prospered their iourney. For in these Eszdras gat greate instruccion,  $\hat{y}$  he shulde leaue none of  $\hat{y}$  thinges behynde, which were in  $\hat{y}$  lawe  $\tau$  cōmaundementes of God. And he taught whole Israel all righteousnes  $\tau$  iudgment.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerses,  $\tau$  deliuered  $\hat{y}$  wrytinges ( $\hat{y}$  were come frō Artaxerses the kynge) to Eszdras the prest  $\tau$  rede of the lawe of the LORDE: And this is  $\hat{y}$  copie of  $\hat{y}$  letter: Kynge Artaxerses sendeth his gretinge vnto Eszdras the prest  $\tau$  rede of the lawe of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE: Of frendshipe  $\tau$  good will I haue ordeyned and charged, yf there be eny of the Iewes, of  $\hat{y}$  prestes  $\tau$  Leuites in my realme, which desyareth  $\tau$  is contēt to go with the vnto Ierusalē,  $\hat{y}$  he maye do it. Therefore yf eny be mynded to beare the cōpany, let the come together,  $\tau$  go with the (like as I am contēt  $\tau$  my vij. frendes my cōcelers:) to se what they do at Ierusalē  $\tau$  in Iewry,  $\tau$  kepe  $\hat{y}$  thinges acord-

inge as thou hast in  $\hat{y}$  lawe of the LORDE:
 B  $\tau$  to bringe the giftes vnto God the LORDE of Israel,  $\hat{y}$  I  $\tau$  my frendes haue promysed to Ierusalē,  $\tau$  all the syluer  $\tau$  golde  $\hat{y}$  is in  $\hat{y}$ countre of Babilon, vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE to Ierusalē, with the thinge  $\hat{y}$  is geuē for the people in the LORDES temple at Ierusalem:
 Yee that the same syluer  $\tau$  golde maye be gathered, and oxen, rammes, shepe  $\tau$  goates and other that belōge to these thinges: and that they maye offer sacrifices vnto the LORDE, vpon the aulter of their LORDE, which is at Ierusalem.

And what so euer thou  $\tau$  thy brethrē wyl do with the syluer  $\tau$  golde,  $\hat{y}$  do after  $\hat{y}$  mynde, $\tau$  after the cōmaundement of the LORDE thy God:  $\tau$  like wyse with all the holy vessels, $\hat{y}$  are geuē the for the seruyce of the house of the LORDE thy God:  $\tau$  other thinges what soeuer is necessary for the to the worke of the temple,  $\hat{y}$  shalbe geuē the of the kynges treasure:  $\tau$  loke what thou with thy brethrē wilt do with the golde and syluer, that do after  $\hat{y}$  wil of the LORDE. And I kynge Artaxerxes haue commaunded the keepers of $\hat{y}$  treasures in Syria and Phenices, that what soeuer Eszdras the prest and reder of the lawe of the LORDE doth wryte, it shalbe geuen him: tyll an C. talentes of syluer, and of golde in lyke maner: Of corne also an C. measures, and tyll an hūdreth vessels of wyne,
 and other plenteous thinges without nombre.
 Let all thinges be done after the lawe of  $\hat{y}$ hyst God, that the wrath of God aryse not in the realme of the kynge and of his sonnes.
 I commaunde you also, that ye requyre no taxinge ner tribute of the prestes, Leuites, syngers, and mynisters of the temple, ner of the wryters: and that no man haue auctorite to medle eny thinge against them. As for the (O Eszdras) set thou iudges and arbiters in the whole lande of Syria and Phenices, after the wysdome of God: and lerne all such as are ignoraunt in the lawe of God thy LORDE, and let all them that offende agaynst the lawe, be punyshed: whether it be with death, with payne, to be condemned in money, or to be banyshed.

Then sayde Eszdras  $\hat{y}$  wryter: Blessed be $\hat{y}$  God of oure fathers, that hath geuen so good a mynde and wyll in to the hert of the kynge, to magnifie his house  $\hat{y}$  is at Ieru-salem, and hath made me to be accepted in the sight of  $\hat{y}$  kynge, of his counsell, of his frēdes and of his nobles. And so I was sted-fast in my mynde, accordinge as the LORDE my God helped me, and I chose out men of Israel, to go vp with me. And these are the heades<sup>a</sup> (after their kynreds  $\tau$  houses of their fathers) that wente vp with me from Babilon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerxes: Of the sonnes of Phares, Gersonius. Of  $\hat{y}$  sonnes of Siemarith, Amenus. Of the sonnes of Dauid, Accus, the sonne of Cecilia.

Of the sonnes of Phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hundreth and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captaine of Moabilon, Zaraei, and with him ij. C. and
 l. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Iechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Salamaasias, Gotholie, and lxx.
 with him. Of the sonnes of Zaphacia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxxx. Of the sonnes of Iob, Abdias Ieheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Bania, Sali-moth the sonne of Iosaphia, and with him an
 C. and lx. men. Of the sonnes of Beer, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij.
 men. Of the sonnes of Eseud, Iohannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Adonicā those that were the last, and these are their names: Eliphalam  $\hat{y}$
 sonne of Gebel and Semeias,  $\tau$  with him lxx.
 men. All these called I together by the water Thia, where we pitched oure tentes thre dayes, and there I mustered them.

<sup>a</sup>As for the sonnes of the prestes and Leuites, I founde none there. Then sent I vnto Eleazar,  $\tau$  Eccelom, and Masman,  $\tau$ Malobam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Ioribinnathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollanū
 (these were the leders and men of experieñ) $\tau$  I sent them worde, that they shulde come vnto Loddeus, which was by the place of the treasury,  $\tau$  commaunded them that they shulde speake vnto Loddeus and to his brethren  $\tau$  to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mē, as might execute the prestes office in the house of the LORDE oure God. And with the mightie hāde of oure LORDE God, they brought vnto vs mē of good experieñ, from amōge the sonnes of Moolius, the sonne of Leui,  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Israel, Sebebeiam  $\tau$  the sonnes  $\tau$  his brethrē Aszbīn

And of them ¶ seruēd in the temple, whom Dauid had ordeyned, and the pryncipall men that ministred for the worke vnto the Leuites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened vp in wrytynge.

¶ Then commaunded I a fastynge vnto ¶ yonge men before the LORDE,<sup>a</sup> ¶ I might desyre of him a prosperous iourney ¶ a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for oure children and for the cattell, because of the layenges awayte: ¶ I durst not require of the kynge men of horse ¶ of fote, to conuey vs safely agaynst oure enemies, for we had sayde vnto the kynge, that ¶ power of the LORDE oure God shulde be with them, that seke him with their whole hert. And therefore we besought God oure LORDE earnestly because of these thynges, and he was mercifull vnto vs, and herde oure prayer. And I separated from amonge ¶ rulers of the people, ¶ from ¶ prestes of ¶ temple xij. men, ¶ Sebeia ¶ Asania, ¶ ten men of their brethren with them. And I weied thē the golde ¶ the syluer ¶ all the prestly ornāmētes of the house of oure God, which the kynge ¶ his counsell, ¶ his prynces ¶ whole Israel had geuē. And whan I had weyed it, I gauē thē an Cl. talētes in syluer, an C. talentes of syluer vessell, an C. talentes of golde, ¶ of goldē vessell seuē tymes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall) xij. glisteringe as the golde, ¶ saide vnto thē: ye also are holy vnto the LORDE, ¶ the vessels are holy, ¶ the golde ¶ the syluer is promised vnto the LORDE the God of oure fathers. Be diligent now ¶ kepe it, vntill the tyme ¶ ye deluyer it to the rulers of the people, to ¶ prestes, to the Leuites ¶ to ¶ pryncipall mē of the cities of Israel in Ierusalem, ¶ in the chambre of the house of oure God.

¶ So ¶ prestes ¶ the Leuites which receaued of me the golde,<sup>b</sup> the syluer ¶ the vessell, brought it to Ierusalē in to the tēple of the LORDE. And from Thia we brake vp the xij. daye of the first moneth, tyll we came to Ierusalē. And whan the thirde daye was past, the weyed golde ¶ syluer was deluyered in ¶ house of the LORDE the fourth daye, vnto Marimoth the sonne of Ior the prest, ¶ with him was Eleazar ¶ sonne of Phineas, and with thē were Iosabudus ¶ sonne of Iesnet, Medias ¶ the sonne of Bauus, ¶ certayne of the Leuites to the nombre ¶ to the waighte: ¶ the waight of them was writtē vp the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captiuyte, they offred sacrifice vnto the LORDE the God of Israel: euē xij. oxen for all Israel, lxxxvj. rammes, lxxij. shepe, xij. goates for synne, xij. kyne for a thank-offeringe, all to the sacrifice of the LORDE. And ¶ kynges comission deluyered they vnto ¶ stewardes and debytes of the kynge, and to the vndersherues in Celosyria and Phenices.

¶ Now whan these thynges were done, the rulers came vnto me, and sayde: The generacion of Israel, the prynces, ¶ prestes and Leuites, the straunge people and indwellers of the londe, haue not put awaye their vnclennesse, from the Cananites, Hethites, Pheresites, from the Moabites, Egipcians ¶ Edomites. For both they and their sonnes haue mengled them selues with the daughters of them, ¶ the holy sede is mixte with the outlandish Heithen, ¶ sens the begynnyng of their raigne haue the rulers and heades bene partakers of their wickednesse.

As soone as I had herde these thynges, immediatly I rent my holy garmentes, and pulled out ¶ hayre of my heade ¶ my beerd, ¶ sat me downe soroufull ¶ heuy. So all they that were moued thorow the worde of the God of Israel, came vnto me: and I sat still full of heuines vntill the euenynge sacrifice. Then stode I vp frō fastinge, hauynge rente clothes ¶ the holy garnēt, kneeled downe vpon my knees, helde out my hādes vnto ¶ LORDE, ¶ sayde: O LORDE, I am confounded ¶ ashamed before thy face, for oure synnes are become many vpon oure heades, ¶ oure wickednesses are exalted vnto the heauē: for sens ¶ tyme of oure fathers we are in greate sinne vnto this daye. And for the synnes of vs ¶ oure fathers, we with oure brethren ¶ with oure prestes haue bene deliuered vnto the kynges of the earth, in to the swerde, ¶ in to captiuite, ¶ became a spoyle with confucion ¶ shame vnto this daie. And now O LORDE God, how greate is the mercy ¶ we have gottē of the? in ¶ thou hast left vs a rote ¶ a name in the place of thy Sanctuary, to discouer oure light in the house of  $\text{f}$  LORDE oure God,  $\alpha$  geuē vs meate at all tymes of our ministracion. And whan we were in captiuyte, we were not forsaken of the LORDE oure God: but he made the kynges of Persia gracious  $\alpha$  fauourable vnto vs, so  $\text{f}$  they gaue vs vytayles  $\alpha$  meate, yee  $\alpha$  leue to buylde vp the tēple of oure LORDE God agayne, to repayre the waisted places of Sion, and to dwell in Iewry  $\alpha$  Ierusalem. And now O LORDE, what shall we saye, hauynge all these thinges in possession? For we haue broken thy cōmaundementes, which thou gauest vnto vs by the handes of thy sernautes the prophetes, sayenge: The londe  $\text{f}$  ye go vnto,  $\alpha$   $\text{f}$  is geuen you for an heretage to haue in possession, is defyled with the vnclennes  $\alpha$  fylthynges of the Heithen,  $\alpha$  with their abhominacion haue they poluted it altogether. Therefore shal ye not ioyn<sup>a</sup> youre daughters vnto their sonnes, ner mary youre sonnes vnto their daughters: Morouer, ye shall neuer seke to make peace with them,  $\text{f}$  ye maye increase  $\alpha$  eate the best in the lande,  $\alpha$   $\text{f}$  ye maye deuyde  $\text{f}$  inheritaunce of the lande vnto youre children for euermore. As for the thinge  $\text{f}$  now happeneth vnto vs, it commeth all for oure wicked workes and greate synnes. yet hast thou geuen vs soch a rote,  $\text{f}$  we are come againe in to oure owne londe: and we are so wicked,  $\text{f}$  we haue brokē thy statutes  $\alpha$  cōmaundementes agayne,  $\alpha$  mengled oure selues with the vnclēnes of the outlandish Heithen. O LORDE, art thou angrie with vs? wilt thou rote vs cleane out?  $\text{f}$  oure rote  $\alpha$  name remayne nomore? O LORDE God of Israel, thou art true, for oure rote endureth yet vnto this present daye. And beholde, now are we before  $\text{f}$  in oure synnes, now can we not stonde before the in them.

$\text{b}$  And whan Eszdras with this prayer had knowleged the synne, wepinge,<sup>b</sup>  $\alpha$  lyce flat vpon the grounde before the tēple, there gathered vnto him from Ierusalem a greate multitude of men  $\alpha$  wemen, of yonge men  $\alpha$  maydens, for there was a very greate wepinge and mourninge in the cōgregacion. So whan Iechonias the sonne Ieheli one of the children of Israel cried, he sayde vnto Eszdras: we haue synned agaynst the LORDE, because we haue married outlandish women of the Heithē. Now art thou ouer all Israel.

We wil swaere an ooth therfore vnto  $\text{f}$  LORDE,  $\text{f}$  we shal put awaye all oure wyues which we haue takē of the Heithē, with their childrē: like as it is appoynted the by oure fore elders. Stonde vp then, open thou it and declare it playnely vnto vs acordige to the lawe of  $\text{f}$  LORDE: for the matter belongeth vnto  $\text{f}$ ,  $\alpha$  we wyll helpe the, quyte thy self manly. So Eszdras arose, and toke an ooth of the rulers of  $\text{f}$  prestes  $\alpha$  of  $\text{f}$  Leuites  $\alpha$  of all Israel, to do after these thinges, and they swaere.

The ii. Chapter.

$\text{a}$  THEN Eszdras stode vp from the courte of the tēple without,  $\alpha$  wente in to the chāber of Ionathas the sonne of Nasabus,  $\alpha$  remayned there,  $\alpha$  ate no meate ner dronke drynke, for the multitude of the wickednes of the people. And there was made a proclamacion in all Iewry  $\alpha$  at Ierusalem, for all soch as were gathered at Ierusalē out of captiuyte,  $\text{f}$  who so euer came not to Ierusalē within two or thre dayes (acordinge to the iudgment of the olde lordes of counsell) his goodes shulde be taken from him,  $\alpha$  he excluded from the cōgregacion of the captiuyte. And in thre dayes were all they of the trybe of Iuda  $\alpha$  Ben Iamin gathered together at Ierusalem, the xx. daye of  $\text{f}$  ix. moneth. And  $\text{f}$  whole multitude sat trēblinge in the courte of the temple, for it was wynter. So Eszdras arose vp,  $\alpha$  sayde vnto them: ye haue done vnrighteously, in that ye haue taken outlandish wyues to mariage,  $\alpha$  so to increase the synnes of Israel. And now knowlege the same,  $\alpha$  geue prayse vnto the LORDE God of oure fathers,  $\alpha$  perfourme his wil, departinge from the Heithen of the londe,  $\alpha$  from the outlandish wyues. Then cried the whole multitude with loude voyce,  $\alpha$  sayde: like as thou hast spokē, so wil we do: But for so moch as the people  $\text{b}$  are many,  $\alpha$   $\text{f}$  wynter here, we maie not stōde without  $\text{f}$  house: agayne, this worke is not a thinge,  $\text{f}$  can be fynished in a daye or two, for we be many  $\text{f}$  haue synned in these thinges: Ordene therefore,  $\text{f}$  the rulers of the multitude and all they that dwell with vs, and as many as haue outlandish wyues, the prestes also and iudges of euery place, maye stonde in the tyme appoynted, tyll they

lowse vp the wrath of the LORDE in this busynes.

Then Ionathas the sonne of Ezeli, ⁊ Ozias and Thecam receaued ⁊ charge of this matter, ⁊ Bozoramus, ⁊ Leius and Sabatheus helped the therto. After this, all they stode vp ⁊ were come out of captiuyte. And Eszdras the prest chote vnto him the pryncipall men from amonge the fathers acordinge to their names, ⁊ in the new moone of the tenth moneth they sat together, to examen this matter. And so the matter was a determyng (concernyng the men ⁊ had outlandish wyues) vntill the new moone of the first moneth. And of the prestes ⁊ had mixte the selues with outlandish wyues, there were founde:<sup>a</sup> Of the sonnes of Iesu the sonne of Iosedec ⁊ his brethren, Mazeras, Eleazar, Ioribus ⁊ Ioadeus, which offred them selues to put awaye their wyues, ⁊ to offere a ranme for their ignoraunce. And of the sonnes of Gemmeri, Masseas, ⁊ Esses ⁊ Ieelech Azarias. Of ⁊ sonnes of Fosera, Limosias, Hismaen, Nathanea, Iussio, Ieddus, ⁊ Talsas. And of the Leuites, Iosabds, Semeis and Colnis, Caletas, Facteas, Colnas and Elionas. Of the syngers of the Sactuary, Eliarib, Zackarus. Of the porters, Sallumus ⁊ Tolbanes. And of Israel, of the children of Foro, Osi ⁊ Remias, ⁊ Geddias, ⁊ Melchias, Michelus, Eleazarus, Iemebias ⁊ Bannas. And of the childre of Iolaman, Chianas, Zachary, Ietzrelus, Ioddus, Erimoth ⁊ Elias. And of ⁊ sonnes of Iathoim, Eliadas, Liasamus, ⁊ Zochias, Larimoth, Sabdis ⁊ Tebedias. And of ⁊ sonnes of Zebes, Iohānes Amanias, Zabdias, ⁊ Emeus. And of the sonnes of Bannus, Olammus, Maluchus, Ieddus, Iasub, Asabus ⁊ Ierimoth. And of ⁊ sonnes of Addin, Naatus ⁊ Moosias ⁊ Caleus ⁊ Raanas Maasuas, Mathathias, Besel, Bannus, and Manasses.

And of the sonnes of Naue, Nones, Afeas, Melchias, Sameas, Simō, Ben lamin, Malchus ⁊ Marras. And of the sonnes of Asom, Carianeus, Mathathias, Bannus, Eliphalach, Manasses, Semei. Of the sonnes of Bannus, Jeremy, Moodias, Abamas, Iohel, Baneas, Pelias, Iona, Marimoth, Eliasib, Mathaneus, Eliasis, Orizas, Dielus, Semedius, Zambris ⁊ Ioseph. Of ⁊ sonnes of Nobeus, Idelus, Mathathias, Sabadius, Zecheda, Sedmi, Iesseus, ⁊ Baneas. All these had takē outlādish wemē to mariage, ⁊ they put the awaye with their childre.

The prestes ⁊ Leuites, ⁊ all they ⁊ were of Israel, dwelt at Ierusalem ⁊ thorow out all ⁊ londe, in the new moone of the seuenth moneth, ⁊ the childre of Israel were in their dwellynges. And ⁊ whole multitude came together vpon ⁊ floore at ⁊ east syde<sup>b</sup> of the holy porte of ⁊ tēple. And they spake vnto Eszdras ⁊ hie prest ⁊ reder, ⁊ he wolde brynge ⁊ lawe of Moses, which was geuē of ⁊ LORDE God of Israel. So Eszdras the hie prest brought the lawe vnto the whole multitude, to man and woman, ⁊ to all prestes, ⁊ they might heare the lawe, in the new moone of the seuenth moneth. And he red in ⁊ floore ⁊ is before ⁊ holy porte of ⁊ tēple, from the mornyng early vntill the euenyng, before men ⁊ wemen. And they applied their mynde all vnto the lawe.

And Eszdras the prest ⁊ reder of ⁊ lawe stode vp vpon a scaffolde of wodd, which was made therefore: ⁊ vpon his right hande there stode by him Mathathias, Samus, Ananias, Azarias, Vrias, Ozechias, ⁊ Balsamus: Vpon his lefte hāde stode Faldeus, Misael, Malachias, Abuschas, Sabus, Nabadias, ⁊ Zachary. Then toke Eszdras ⁊ boke before the whole multitude, for he was ⁊ pryncipall and had in most honoure of the all. And whā he had red out ⁊ lawe, they stode all straight vp vpon their fete. So Eszdras prayned the LORDE the most hye God, the Allmightie God of hoostes. And all ⁊ people answered, Amen: ⁊ helde vp their hādes, fell downe flat vpon the earth, ⁊ prayned ⁊ LORDE: Iesus, Beneas, Sarebias, Iaddimus, Accubus, Sabatheus, Calithes, Azarias, Ioradus, Ananias, ⁊ Philias the Leuites which taught the lawe of the LORDE, ⁊ red the lawe of the LORDE in the cōgregaçon, ⁊ euery man sett those before ⁊ vnderstode the lawe. Then spake Atharathes vnto Eszdras the hye prest ⁊ reder, ⁊ to the Leuites ⁊ taught the multitude, sayenge: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE: ⁊ all they ⁊ had herde the lawe, wepte. So Eszdras sayde: Departe your waye then, ⁊ eate the best, ⁊ drynke the swetest, ⁊ sende giftes vnto them ⁊ haue nothinge: for this daye is holy vnto the LORDE, and be not ye sory. Then wente they their waye euerychone, ate and dronke and were mery, ⁊ sent rewardes vnto thẽ y had nothinge, y they also might eate with gladnesse: for they were exceedingly reioysed, thorow the wordes that were red vnto them in the lawe: And so they were all gathered together at Ierusalem to holde the feast, accordinge to the couenaunt of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God of Israel.

The first Chapter.

(þe sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, þe sonne of Helchia, þe sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoe, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarahias, the sonne of Vzi, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abisu, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the sonne of Aaron, of the trybe of Leui) which was presoner in the lande of the Meedes, in the raigne of Artaxerxes kynge of Persia.

And the wordes of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Go thy waye & shew my people their synfull dedes, & their children their wickednesses, which they haue done against me, that they maye tell their childers childrē the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increased in them. And why? they haue forgotten me, & haue offred vnto straunge goddes. Am not I euen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egipte, from the house of bondage? But they haue prouoked me vnto wrath, & despyed my counceils. Pull thou out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe."

It is a people without lernynge & nourture. How longe shal I forbearē them, vnto whom I haue done so moch good? Many kynges haue I destroyed for their sakes:<sup>c</sup> Pharaο with his seruantes and all his power haue I smytten downe and slayne:<sup>d</sup> All þe nacions haue I destroyed and roted out before them, and in þe east haue I brought two landes and people to naught, euen Tyre & Sydon, and haue slayne all their enemies. Speake thou therfore vnto them, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE:<sup>e</sup> "I led you thorow the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes sence the begynnyng. I gaue you Moses to be your captayne, and Aaron to be the prest:<sup>f</sup> I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, & greute wōders haue I done amōge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE."

C Thus sayeth the allmightie LORDE: I gaue you quales to eate, and tentes for youre succoure: Neuertheles ye murmured, and ascribed not þe victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yee this same daie do ye yet murmur. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you? Whan ye were hongrie in the wilderness, dyd ye not crie vnto me: Why hast thou brought vs in to this wilderness, to kill vs? It had bene better for vs, to haue serued þe Egipcians, then to dye in this wilderness. The had I pitie vpon youre mourninges, and gaue you Manna to eate. Ye ate angels foode. Whā ye were thyrstie, dyd not I hew þe hardstone, & caused water vnto flowe thereout? For the heate, I couered you with þe leaues of the trees. A good pleasaunt fatt londe gaue I you: I cast out the Cananites, the Pheresites and Philistynes before you. What shal I do more for you, saith the LORDE?

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE:<sup>g</sup> "Whan ye were in the wilderness, in the water of the Amorites, beyng a thyrst & blasphemynge my name, I gaue you not fyre for youre blasphemies, but cast a tre in to þe water, and made the ryuer swete. What shal I do vnto the, O Iacob? Thou Iuda woldest not obeye me. I wil turne me to another people, & vnto those will I geue my name, that they maye kepe my statutes. Seinge ye haue forsakē me, I wil forsake you also. Whan ye desyre me to be gracious vnto you, I shal haue no mercy vpon you. Whan ye call vpō me, I wil not heare you. For ye haue defyled youre hādes with bloude, and youre fete are swift to commytt manslaughter. Ye haue not forsaken me (in a maner) but youre owne selues, sayeth the LORDE."

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE:<sup>h</sup> "I haue I not prayed you, as a father his sonnes, as a mother hir daughters, and as a nurse hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and I shulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my children, and I shulde be youre owne father? I gathered you together, as an henne gathereth hir chickens vnder hir wynges. But now what shal I do vnto you? I shal cast you out fro my face. Whan ye offre vnto me, I shal turne my face from you: for your solempne feast dayes, youre new moones and youre circumcisions haue I forsaken. I sent vnto you my seruantes the prophetes, whom ye haue taken and slayne, and torne their bodies in peces, whose bloude I wyll requyre of youre handes, sayeth the LORDE.

f Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: youre house must be desolate. I wil cast you out as the wynde doth y strawe: youre children shal not be frutefull, for they haue despysed my commaundement, and done y thinge y is euell before me. Your houses wil I geue vnto a people y shal come, and they y neuer herde me, shal beleue in me: ⁊ they vnto whō I neuer shewed token, shal do the thinge y I comaunde thē. They haue sene no prophetes, yet shal they call their synnes to remembraunce, and knowlege thē. I reporte me vnto the grace, that I wil do for the people which is to come, whose children reioyce in gladnes: ⁊ though they haue not sene me with bodely eyes, yet in sprete they beleue the thinge that I saye. And now brother, beholde what greate worshippe, and se y people that cometh from the east, vnto whom I wyll geue the dukedome of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, of Oseas, Amos, and Micheas, of Ioel, Abdy, Ionas, Naum and Abacuc, of Sophony, Aggeus, Zachary and Malachy, which is called also an angel (or messauger) of the LORDE.

The ii. Chapter.

a THUS sayeth the LORDE: I brought this people out of bondage, I gaue thē my comaundementes by my seruantes y prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but despysed my counsels. The mother that bare them, sayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye children, for I am a wyddow ⁊ forsaken: I brought you vp with gladnesse, but with sorow and heynes haue I lost you: for ye haue synned before the LORDE youre God, and done y thinge that is euell before him. But what shall I now do vnto you? I am a wyddow and forsakē: go youre waye (o my children) and axe mercy of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytnesse ouer the mother of these childrē, which wolde not kepe my couenant: y thou brynge them to cofucion, and their mother to a spoyle, that she beare no more. Let their names be scatred abroad amonge the Heithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought scorn of my couenant.

b Wo be vnto the Assur, thou that hydest the vnrighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remembre what I dyd vnto Sodom and Gomorre, whose land is turned to pitch and aszshes. Euen so also wyll I do vnto all them, that heare me not, sayeth the Allmightie LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE vnto Esdras: Tell my people, y I will geue them the kyngdome of Ierusalem, which I wolde haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vnto me, and geue them the euerlastynge tabernacles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellynge oyntment: they shal nether labour ner be weery. Go ye youre waye, ⁊ ye shall receaue it. Praye for youre selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therein. Now is the kingdome prepared for you, therfore watch. Take heauē and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lyue sayeth y LORDE. Mother embrace thy children, and brynge them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

c And those that be deed wyll I raise vp agayne from their places, and brynge them out of y graues, for I haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the children, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. And for thy helpe I shal sende the my seruantes Esay and Ieremy, after whose counsell I haue sanctified ⁊ prepared for the, xij. trees with dyuerse frutes, and as many welles flowinge with mylek and hony, ⁊ seuen mountaynes, whervpō there growe roses and lilies, wherin I wyl fyll my children with ioye. Execute iustice for the wyddowe, be iudge for the fatherlesse: geue to y poore: defende the cofortlesse: clothe the naked: heale the wounded and sick: laugh not a lame man to scorn: defende the crepell, and let the blinde come in to y sight of my clearnes. Kepe the olde ⁊ yonge within thy walles: where so euer thou fyndest the deed, tokē them, and burye them, and I shal geue the the first place in my resurreccion. Holde styll (O my people) and take thy rest, for thy quyetes is come. Fede thy children O thou good norsse, establish their fete: As for the seruantes whom I haue geuen the, there shal not one of them perishe, for I wyl seke theſe from thy nombre, vexe not thy self.

For whan the daye of trouble and heuynes commeth, other shal wepe and be sorowfull, but thou shalt be mery and plenteous. The Heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothinge agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal couer the, so that thy children shal not se the fyre euerlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childre, for I wyll deluyer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remembre thy deed childre, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy vnto them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Allmightie.

Enbrace thy childre, vntyll I come and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles runne ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I Eszdras receaued a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Israel. But whan I came vnto theſe, they set me at naught, and despyed the commaundement of ꝑ LORDE. And therefore I saye vnto you O ye Heithen, that heare and vnderstonde: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you euerlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Be ready to the rewarde of the kyngdome, for the euerlastinge light shall shyne vpon you for euernore. Fle the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulness of youre glory. I testifie my sauoure openly: O receaue the gift ꝑ is geuen you, and be glad, geuyng thanks vnto him, that hath called you to the heauenly kyngdome. Aryse vp, and stonde fast: beholde the nombre of those that be sealed in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmetes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shutt vp thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy children whom thou longest for, is fulfilled: beseke the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnynge, maye be halowed.

I Eszdras sawe vpon the mount Sion a greute people, whom I coude not nombre, ꝑ they all prayded the LORDE with songes of thankesgeuyng. And in the myddest of theſe there was a yonge mā of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon euery one of thy heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I marueled at greatly. So I axed ꝑ angell, ꝑ sayde: Syr, what are these? He answered and sayde vnto me: These be they, that haue put of the mortall clothinge and put on the immortall, and haue testified ꝑ knowleged the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receaue the rewarde.

Then sayde I vnto the angell: what yonge personne is it, that crowneth them, ꝑ geueth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde vnto me: It is ꝑ sonne of God, whom they haue knowleged in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commende them, that stode so stify for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what maner of thinges and how greute wonders of the LORDE thy God, thou hast sene.

The iij. Chapter.

IN the thirtie yeare of the fall of the cite, ꝑ I was at Babilon ꝑ laye troubled vpō my bed, ꝑ my thoughtes came vp ouer my hert: for I sawe ꝑ desolacion of Sion, ꝑ the plenteous wealth of them ꝑ dwelt at Babilon: ꝑ my sprete was sore moued, so that I begāne to speake fearfull wordes to the most hyest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnynge, whan thou plantēdest ꝑ earth, (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundement vnto ꝑ people, and a body vnto Adam, ꝑ which was a creature of thy handes, and hast brethed in him the breth of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradise, which gardē of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaundemēt to loue ꝑ waye, which he transgressed, ꝑ immediatly thou appoyntēdest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nacions, trybes, people, ꝑ kynredes out of nombre. ꝑ And euery people walked after their owne wil, and did nyce thinges before the: and as for thy commaundementes, they despyed them.

ꝑ But in processe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, vpon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water

floude also in these. Neuertheles one of them thou leftest: namely, Noe with his housholde, of whom come all righteous mē. And it happened that, whan they ſ dwelt vpon the earth, beganne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greате people, they beganne to be more vngodly then the first.

Now whan they all lyued so wickedly before the, <sup>a</sup> thou didest chose the a man from amonge them, whose name was Abram. Him thou louedest, and vnto him only thou shewedst thy wyll, and maydest an euerlastinge couenaunt with him, promysinge him, that thou woldest neuer forsake his sede. <sup>b</sup> And vnto him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Jacob and Esau. As for Jacob thou didest chose him, and put backe Esau. And so Jacob became a greате multitude.

And it happened that whā thou leddest his sede out of Egipte, thou broughtest thē vp to the mount Sion, <sup>c</sup> bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, mouyng the grounde, makynge the depthes to shake, and troublynge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest geue the lawe vnto the sede of Jacob, and diligence vnto the generaciō of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not awaye from thē that wicked hert, that thy lawe might brynge forth frute in them. For the first Adam bare a wicked hert, transgressed, and was overcome, and so be all they ſ are borne of him. <sup>d</sup> Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed awaye, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed awaye, and the yeares were brought to an ende. <sup>e</sup> Then didest thou raise the vp a seruaunt called Daud, whom thou commaundedst to buylde a cite vnto thy name, and to offere vp incense and sacrifice vnto the therin. This was done now many yeares.

Then the inhabitants of the cite forsoke the, and in all thinges dyd euē as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou gauest thy cite ouer in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, ſ they shal therefore haue the domynion of Sion? For whan I came there, and sawe their vngodlynnes, and so greате wickednesse, that it coude not be nōbred: yee whan my soule sawe so many euell doers (in ſ xxx. yeare) my hert fayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in soch vngodlynnes, and sparest ſ wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserued thine enemies, <sup>f</sup> and this hast thou not shewed me.

I cannot perceauce how this happeneth. Do they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there eny other people, ſ knoweth the, sayynge the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so beleued ſ couenautes, as Jacob? And yet their rewarde appeareth not, and their labour hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the Heithē, <sup>g</sup> and I see, ſ they be rych <sup>h</sup> and wealthy, <sup>i</sup> and theynke not vpon ſ commaundementes. Weye thou therefore oure wickednesse now in ſ balauance, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be no where founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, ſ hath not synned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundementes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and Heithen.

The iiii. Chapter.

AND the angell that was sent vnto me (whose name was Vriel) gaue me answer, and sayde: Thy hert hath takē moche vpon it in this worlde, and thou thinkest to comprehend the waye of the Hiest. Then sayde I: yee my lordē. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the thre wayes, and to sett forth thre symilitudes before the: wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thou desyrest to se, and I shal shewe the from whēce the wicked hert commeth. And I sayde: tell on my LORD. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weye me the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde vnto me: Yf I shulde axe the, how depe dwellinges are in the see? Or how greате water springes are vpon  $\hat{y}$  firmamēt? Or how greate water sprynges are in the begynnyng of the depe? Or which are the outgoinges of Paradise? Peraduſture thou woldest saye vnto me: I neuer wente downe yet in to  $\hat{y}$  depe ner hell, nether dyd I euer clymme vp in to heauen. Neuertheles now haue I axed the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thorow thou hast traauayled, and from the which thou canst not be separated: and yet canst thou geue me no answeere of them.

B He sayde morouer vnto me: Thine owne thinges, and such as are growne vp with  $\hat{y}$ , canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to cōprehende the waye of the Hyest, and now outwardly in the corrupte worlde, to vnderstōde the corrupcion  $\hat{y}$  is eydent in my sight? Thē sayde I vnto him: It were better that we were not at all, thē that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffre, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wēte in a wod, and the trees toke soch a deuyce and sayde: <sup>a</sup> Come let vs go, and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddess.

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner toke this deuyce, and sayde: Come, let vs go vp, and fight agaynst the trees of the wodd, that we maye make our lond the wyder. The thought and denyce of the wodd was but vayne and nothinge worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wod: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewyse to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stoped them.

C Yf thou were iudge now betwixte these two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cōdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue deuyed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me  $\tau$  sayde: Thou hast geuen a right iudgment, why iudgest thou not thy self also? For like as the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see to his floudes: <sup>b</sup> euen so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstōde nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboue the heauens, maye onely vnderstōde the thinges, that are aboue the hea-uens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseeke the (O LORDE) let me haue vnderstōdinge: for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy hye thinges, but of soch as we daylie medle withall: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the Heithen, and for what cause the people (whom thou euer hast loued) is geuen ouer, to be punyshed of vngodly naciōs: and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wrytten couenantes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the worlde as the greshopers, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to optayne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouer vs? Of these thinges haue I axed question.

Then answered he me and sayde: The more thou searchest, the more thou shalt maruel, for the worlde hasteth fast to passe awaye, and can not comprehend the thinges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, <sup>c</sup> for this worlde is full of vnrigheteousnes and weaknes.

But as concernynge the thinges wherof thou axest me, I wyl tell the. The euell is sowne, but the destruction therof is not yet come. Yf the euell now that is sowne, be not turned vpsyde downe, and yf the place where  $\hat{y}$  euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then can not the thinge come  $\hat{y}$  is sowne with  $\hat{y}$  good. For the corne of euell sede hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnyng, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp vnto this tyme? and how moch shal he yet brynge forth, vntyll he come in to the barne?

E Pondre now by thyself, whā  $\hat{y}$  corne of euell sede is cutt downe, how greate a barne shal it fyl? I answered and sayde: How and whā shal these thinges come to passe? Wherfore are oure yeares few  $\tau$  euell? And he answered me, sayēge: Haist not thou to moch vpon the Hyest, for thy haistynes to be aboue him is but in vayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not  $\hat{y}$  soules also of the righteous axe question of these thinges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion? Whan commeth the frute of my barne, and my rewarde? And vpō this Ieremiel the archangel gaue them answeere, and sayde: <sup>d</sup> Euē whan the nombre of the sedes is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the worlde in the balauce: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntyll the same measure be fulfilled. Then answered I and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, now are we all full of synne, and for oure sake peraduenture it is not, that the barne of the righteous shall not be fylled, because of the synnes of thē that dwell vpon earth.

f So he answered me, & sayde: Go y waye to a woman with childe, and axe her, when she hath fulfilled hir ix. monethes, yf hir childesbed maye kepe y byrth eny lōger within her. Thē sayde I: No LORDE, that can she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secrete places of soules are like y preuy chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that trauallyeth, maketh haist, when the tyme & necessite of the byrth is at hande: Euē so doth she haist to delyuer it that is comytted vnto her. Loke what thou desyrest to se, it shalbe shewed the from the begynnyng. Then answered I and sayde: Yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mete therefore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come thē is past, or more past then is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

6 And he saide vnto me: Stonde vp vpō y right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, & beholde, an whote burnyng ouē wente ouer before me: & it happened y whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this there wēte ouer before me a watery cloude, and sent downe moch rayne with a storme: & whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remayned still. Then sayde he vnto me: like as the rayne is more then the droppes, and as the fyre exceedeth the smoke, euen so y measure of the thinges that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: May I lyue (thynkest thou) vntyll that tyme? Or what shall happen in those dayes? He answered me, and sayde: As for the tokes wherof thou axest me, I maye tell the of thē in a parte: but as touchinge * y life, I may not shewe the, for I am not sent therfore.

* Some rede, my life.

The b. Chapter.

NEUERTHELESSE, as concernynge the tokens, mark this: Beholde, the dayes shal come, that they which dwell vpon earth, shalbe takē in a greate nombre, & the waye of the trueth shalbe hyd, and the lōde shalbe baren from faith: but iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, like as thou hast sene now, and as thou hast herde lōge ago. And the londe that thou seist now to haue rule, shalt thou shortly se waist. But yf God graunte the to lyue, thou shalt se after y thirde trompet, that the Sonne shal sodenly shyne agayne in the night, and the Moone thre tymes in the daye, & bloude shal droppe out of wodd, and the stone shal geue his voyce, and the people shalbe vnquyete: and euen he shal rule, whom they hope not that dwell vpon earth, and the foules shal flyt, and the Sodomytish see shal cast out his fish, and make a noyse in the night, which many shal not knowe, but they shal all heare the voyce therof.

B There shalbe a cōfucion also in many places, and the fyre shal be oft sent agayne, and the wyld beasts shal go their waye, & menstruous women shal beare monsters, and salt waters shalbe founde in the swete: one frende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyt and vnderstandinge be hyd and put asyde in to their secrete places, & shalbe sought of many, and yet not be founde: then shal vnrighteousnes and voluptuousnes haue the vpperhande vpon earth. One lande also shal axe another, and saye: Is righteousness gone thorow the? And it shal saye: No. At the same tyme shal men hope, but nothinge opayne: they shal laboure, but their wayes shall not prospere.

To shewe the soch tokens I haue leue, and yf thou wylt praye agayne, & wepe as now, and fast seuen dayes, thou shalt heare yet greater thinges. Then I awaked, and a fearfulness wente thorow all my body, & my mynde was feble and carefull, so that I almost swowned withall. So the angell that was come to talke with me, helde me, comforted me, and sett me vp vpon my fete.

C And in the seconde night it happened, y Salathiel the captayne of the people came vnto me, sayenge: Where hast thou bene?

and why is thy countenance so heuy? Knowest thou not, y Israel is comytted vnto the, in the londre of their captyute? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherde that leaueth his flock in the handes of wicked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: Go thy waye fro me, and come not nye me: ¶ he herde it, and as I sayde, so wete he his waye fro me. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepyng, like as Vriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that y thoughtes of my hert were very greuouse vnto me agayne, ¶ my soule receaued y sprete of vnderstandynge, ¶ I began to talke with the most hyest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wod of y earth ¶ of all the trees therof, thou hast chosen y one onely vynyarde: and of all londes of the whole worlde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the grounde thou hast chosen the one lylic: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryuer: and of all builded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all y foules that are created, thou hast named the one doue: and of all the catell y are made, thou hast prouyded y one shepe: ¶ amoge all y multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vnto this people whom thou loudest, thou gauest a lawe, y is proued of all.

¶ And now O LORDE, why hast thou geue this one people ouer vnto many? ¶ vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou scatred y one onely people amonge many? which treade the downe, yee which haue euer withstonde y promyses, ¶ neuer beleued y couenautes? And though thou werest enemye vnto y people, yet shuldest thou punysh the with thine owne handes. Now whā I had spokē these wordes, the angell y came to me y night afore, was sēt vnto me, ¶ sayde vnto me: Heare me, ¶ herke to y thinge y I saye, ¶ I shal tell y more. And I sayed: Speake on my LORDE. The sayde he vnto me: Thou art sore vexed ¶ troubled for Israels sake. Louest thou y people better, then him y made them? And I sayde: No LORDE, but of very grefe ¶ cōpassion haue I spokē. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hyest, and to seke out parte of his iudgment. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not.

And I sayde: wherefore LORDE? Where vnto was I borne then? Or why was not my mothers childesbed then my graue? So had I not sene the mysery and trouble of Iacob, and the trauayle of my people of Israel.

And he sayde vnto me: Nōbre me y things, y are not yet come: gather me together y droppe, that are scatred abroad: make me y floures grene agayne, y are wythered: opē me the thinge that is closed: and bringe me forth the wyndes, that are shutt vp: Shewe me the ymage of a voyce, and then shal I declare the the thinge, that thou labourst to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who may knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellynge with mē? As for me, I am vn wise: how maye I the speake of these thinges, wherof thou axest me? The sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of these thinges y I haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not fynde out my iudgment, or in the ende the loue that I haue promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde o LORDE, yet art thou nye vnto them that haue no ende: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde vnto me: I wyll lycken my iudgment vnto a ryng. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered ¶ sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that haue bene made, and that be now, and that are for to come) in one, that thou mightest shewe thy iudgment the sooner?

Then answered he me and sayde: The creature may not haist aboue the maker, nether maye the worlde holde the at once, that shalbe created.

And I sayde: How hast thou sayde then vnto thy seruaut, that thou luyng maker hast made the creature luyng at once, ¶ the creature bare it? eūē so might it now also beare them that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Axe the childesbed of a womā, and saye vnto her: Yf thou bringest forth childrē, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therefore, to brynge forth ten children at once. And I sayde: she can not, but must do it one after another.

Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I geuen a childesbed vnto the earth, for those that haue not tasted death fro their byrth and the heart of the indwellers shalbe changed, and turned in to another meynynge. for euell shalbe put out, and discreete shalbe quenched. As for both, it shal flourish, corruption shalbe overcome: and the truth, which both haue so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

E And it happened when he talked with me, that I looked demurely vpon him, before who I stode; and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe þy the tyme of þy night for to come.

¶ Yet thou wilt praye yet twice, and fast seven dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, & greater then before: for thy praye is heere before the Highest: for why? the Mightie hath sent thy righteous dealynges, he hath sent also thy chastite, which thou hast had ever since thy youth: and therefore hath he sent me to shewe thee all these thinges, and to saye vnto thee: Be of good comforte, and feare not, and haust not with þy tymes that are past to thyke vayne thinges, and make no haust of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, þy I crepte agayne, and fasted seven dayes in like manner, that I might fulfill the three weekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my heart vexed within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the Highest: for my sperte was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distress, and I sayde: O LORD, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnyng (even the first daye) and saydest: Let heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the sperte, and the darknesses were yet on every syde, and sylence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a layre light to come forth out of thy treasures; that thy worke might appeare and be seene.

E Vpon the seconde daye thou saydest the sperte of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a dryeisen betwixte the waters, that the one parte might remayne above, and the other beneath. Vpon the thirde daye thou broughtest in passe, þy the waters were gathered in the seventh parte of the earth. Sixe partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intent þy men might seme and occupy husbandrie therein. As wene as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediately there was growen innumerable frute, & many diverse pleasures & desyres of temptation, flowers of changinge colour and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Vpon the fourth daye thou commaundedst that the Sonne shoulde geue his shyne, and þy Moone his light: the starres didest thou sett in order, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce euen vnto man,<sup>4</sup> that was for to be made. Vpon the fifth daye thou saydest vnto the seventh parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shoulde bringe forth diverse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the domine water and without soules, brought forth þy many beastes at the commaundment of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderful workes. Then didest thou preserue two soules, þy one thou calledst Lamech and the other Lemathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seventh parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Lamech thou gauest one partye, which was dried vp the thirde daye, that he shoulde dwell in the same parte, wherein are a thousande hilles. But vnto Lemathan thou gauest the seventh parte, namely the watyr, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wilt, and when.

Vpon the sixte daye thou gauest commaundment vnto the earth, that before the it shoulde bringe forth beastes, cattell and all þy crepe, & thyestes this: Adam also, whom thou maydest lord of all thy creature. Of him came we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this haue I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe how that the worlde is made for our sake. As for the other people which also came of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but to bee a spelle, and hast likened the abundance of them into a droppe (that fallith) from the rube of the house.

And now O LORD, the Heaue which haue now bene reported as nothinge, haue begunne to be lordes over vs, and to deuoure vs: but as thy people (whom thou hast called þy first borne, thy only begotten, and thy first borne) are growen in to their handes and power. If the worlde now be made for our sake, why haue we not the inheritance in that be sowne vpon it by processe of tyme. For like as a yonge childe maye not brynge forth the thinges that belonge to the aged, euen so haue I ordered the worlde which I made.

And I axed and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geuē me a waye, I wyl speake before ſ: for oure mother of whō thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge. ⁊ now she draweth nye vnto age. He answered me ⁊ sayde: Axe a woman that beareth children, ⁊ she shal tell the. Saye vnto her: wherefore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but less of stature? And she shal answer the: They ſ be borne in the youth of strēth, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the child-eszbed fayleth) are other wyse. Cōsidre now thy self, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and haue passed ouer the strength of youth. Then sayde I: LORDE I beseke the, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruauant, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

The vi. Chapter.

AND he sayde vnto me: In the begynnyng whan the grounde was made, before the worlde stode, or euer ſ wyndes blew, before it thondred and lightened, or euer the foundations of Paradise were layed, before the fayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were established, before ſ innumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer ſ highnesses of ſ ayre were lifted vp, afore ſ measures of the firmament were named, or euer ſ chymneys in Sion were hote, and or the presente yeares were sought out, and or euer the inuencions of them ſ now synne, were put asyde, before they were sealed that now gather faith for a treasure: then dyd I cōsidre and pondre all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered I and sayde: which shalbe the partyng asunder of the tymes? Or whan shalbe the ende of the first, and the begynnyng of it that foloweth? And he sayde vnto me: From Abrahā vnto Isaac, whā Iacob ⁊ Esau were borne of him, Iacobs hande helde first the hele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this worlde, and Iacob is the begynnyng of it that foloweth. The hande of man betwixte the hele and the hande. Other question (Esdras) axe thou not.

I answered then and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseke the, shewe thy seruauant the ende of thy tokē, wherof thou shewdest me parte the last night. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stōde vp vpon thy fete, and heare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greate mocion, but ſ place where thou stōdest shal not be moued. And therefore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not afrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundation of ſ earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and quaketh, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that whā I had herde it, I stode vp vpon my fete and herkened: and beholde, there was a voyce ſ spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, ſ dayes come, ſ I wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to vyset them that dwell vpō earth, and wyl begynne to make inquisition of them, what they be ſ haue hurte equyte with vnrighteousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shalbe fulfilled: and whan the worlde, that shal vanish awaye, shalbe ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokens.

The bokes shalbe opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, ⁊ the children of a yere olde shal speake with their voyces: the womē with childe shal brynge forth vntymely children of thre or foure monethes olde, and they shall lyue, and be raysed vp: ⁊ sodēly shal the sowne places appeare as the visowne, the full store houses shal sodenly be founde emptie, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which whā euery man heareth, they shalbe haistely afrayed. At that tyme shall frendes fight<sup>a</sup> one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare with them.

The sprynges of the welles shal stonde styll, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so euer remayneth from all these thinges that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre worlde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they that haue not taisted death frō their byrth: and the hert of the indwellers shalbe chaunged, and turned in to another meanyng: for euell shalbe put out, and disceate shalbe quenched. As for faith, it shal florish, corrupcion shalbe ouercome: and the trueth, which hath bene so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

D And it happened when he talked with me, that I loked demurely vpō him, before whō I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe ſ, the tyme of ſ night for to come.

Yf thou wilt praye yet more, and fast senē dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, ⁊ greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the Hyst: for why? the Mightie hath sene thy righteous dealynge, he hath sene also thy chasite, which thou hast had euer sence thy youth: and therefore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to saye vnto the: Be of good comforte, and feare not, and haist not with ſ tymes that are past to thyneke vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, ſ I wepte agayne, and fasted seuen dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre wekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hert vexed within me agayne, and I begaune to speake before the Hyst: for my sprete was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnynge (euen the first daye) and saydest: Let<sup>a</sup> heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the sprete, and the darcknesses were yet on euery syde, and sylence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene.

32 Vpon the seconde daye thou maydest the sprete of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder ⁊ to make a deuyision betwixe the waters, that the one parte might remaine aboue, and the other beneth. Vpon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, ſ the waters were gathered in the seuenth parte of the earth: Sixe partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intēt ſ men might sowe and occupie huszbandrie therin. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediatly there was greate innumerable frute, ⁊ many dyuerse pleasures ⁊ desyres of temptacion, floures of chaungeable coloure and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Vpon the fourth daye thou cōmaundedst that the Sonne shulde gene his shyne, and ſ Moone hir light: the starres didest thou sett in ordre, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce euen vnto man,<sup>b</sup> that was for to be made. Vpō the fifth daye thou saydest vnto the seuenth parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde bringe forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the domme water and without soule, brought forth luyngge beastes at the commaundement of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderous workes. Then didest thou preserue two soules, ſ one thou caldest Enoch and the other Leuiathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seuenth parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou gauest one parte, J which was dried vp the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherin are a thousande hilles. But vnto Leuiathā thou gauest the seuenth parte, namely the moyst, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wilt, and whan.

Vpon the sixte daye thou gauest cōmaundement vnto the earth, that before the it shulde brynge forth beastes, catell and all ſ crepe, ⁊ (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou maydest lorde of all thy creatures: Of him come we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this haue I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worlde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people which also come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but be like a spetle, and hast likened the abudaunce of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rofe of the house.

And now (O LORDE) the Heithē which haue euer bene reputed as nothinge, haue begōne to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuoure vs: but we thy people (whom thou hast called ſ first borne, thy only begotten, and thy feruent louer) are geuen in to their handes and power. Yf the worlde now be made for oure sakes, why haue we not the inheritance in possession with the worlde? How longe shal this endure?

The vii. Chapter.

AND it happened after that I had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had bene by me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vnto me: Vp Esdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: speake on LORDE my God. Thē sayde he vnto me: The see is sett in a wyde place, y<sup>e</sup> it might be depe and greate: but the intraunce is narrow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go in to the see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? Yf he wente not thorow the narrow, how might he come in to the brode?

Item, another. A cite is buylded and sett vpon a brode felde, and is full of all goodes: the intraunce is narrow and sodane, like as yf there were a fyre at the right hande, and a depe water at the left, and as it were onely one strate path betwixte thē both, so small, that there coude but one man go there.

Yf this cite now were geuen to an heyre, & he neuer wente thorow this parlous waye, how wolde he receaue his inheritāce? And I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: Euen so is Israel also a porcion. And why? for their sakes haue I made the worlde: & whan Adam trāsgressed my statutes, then was y<sup>e</sup> thinge iudged that was done. Then were y<sup>e</sup> intraunces of the worlde made narrow, full of sorrow and trauayle: They are but few & euell, full of paret and laboure. For the intraunces of the fore worlde were wyde and sure, and brought immortall frute.

B Yf they now which are entred in to this worlde, maye not comprehend these straye and wayne thinges, moch lesse maye they cōprehende and vnderstonde the secrete thinges: Why disquietest thou thy self then, seynge thou art but a corruptible mā? And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall? And why hast thou not receaued in to thine hert the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

Thē sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordered in thy lawe,<sup>a</sup> that the righteous shulde inheret these thinges, but that the vnfaithfull and vngodly shulde perishe. Neuer-theless the righteous shall suffre straye thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that haue lyued vngodly & suffred straye thinges, shal not se the wyde.

And he saide vnto me: There is no iudge aboute God, and none that hath vnderstandinge aboute the Hyest. For there be many y<sup>e</sup> perish, because they despyse y<sup>e</sup> lawe of God that is sett before them. For God hath geuen straye commaundement to such as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde lyue: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshed.

Neuertheles they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymagined wayne thinges, & purposed to synne, and sayde morouer, that there was no God, & that God regarded it not. His wayes haue they not knowne, his lawe haue they despyed, & denyed his promyses: in his statutes & ordinaunces haue they not bene faithfull & stedfast, and haue not performed his workes.

And therefore Esdras, vnto the full, plenty: C and to the empye, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, y<sup>e</sup> these tokens which I haue tolde the, shal come to passe, & the bryde shall appeare: & the earth y<sup>e</sup> now passeth awaye, shalbe shewed: & who so euer is deliuered from y<sup>e</sup> foresayde euels, shal se my wōders. For my sonne Iesus shal be openly declared, with those y<sup>e</sup> be with him: and they y<sup>e</sup> remayne, shal be mery in foure hundreth yeares.

After these same yeares shall my sonne Christ dye, and all men that haue life: and y<sup>e</sup> worlde shalbe turned in to the olde sylence seuen dayes, like as in the fore iudgmentes, so that no man shall remayne. And after seue dayes, the worlde that yet awaketh not, shalbe raysed vp, & shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that haue slepte in her, and so shall the dust those that dwell in sylce, and the secrete places shal deliuer those that be committed vnto them. And y<sup>e</sup> most hyest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, & all misery shal vanysh awaye, and lōge suffringe shalbe gathered together. But the iudgment shal contynue, y<sup>e</sup> trueth shal remayne, and faith shal waxe strōge, the worke shal folowe, and the rewarde shall be shewed, the righteousnesses shall watch, and the vnrighteousneses shall beare no rule.

D Then sayde I: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites,<sup>a</sup> ⁊ Moses for the fathers ⁊ synned in the wyldernes, ⁊ he ⁊ came after him for Israel, in ⁊ tyme of Ahas and Samuel: and Daniid for ⁊ destruccion, and Salomon for them that came in to the Sanctuary, ⁊ Helias for those that receaued rayne, and for the deed, that he might lyue: and Ezechias for ⁊ people in the tyme of Senacherib: ⁊ dyuerse other in like maner, which haue prayed for many.

Euc so now, seynge ⁊ corrupte is growne vp. and wickednes increased, and the righteous haue prayed for the vngodly, wherefore shal it not be so now also?

He answered me, and sayde: This present worlde is not ⁊ ende, there remaineth moch honoure in it, therefore haue they prayed for the weake. But the daye of dome shalbe the ende of this tyme, and ⁊ begynnyng of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corrupcion vanysmeth, all voluptuousnes is lowsed, all myszbeleue taken awaye, righteousness growne, and the verite spronge vp. Then shall no man be able to saue him that is destroyed, ner to oppresse him ⁊ hath gottē ⁊ victory. E I answered the, ⁊ sayde: This is my first ⁊ last sayenge: ⁊ it had bene better, not to haue geuen the earth vnto Adam: or els whan it was geueū him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to lyue in heuynes, ⁊ after death to loke for punysment? O thou Adā, what hast thou done? For though it was thou ⁊ synned, thou art not fallē alone, but we all ⁊ come of the. For what profit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortall tyme, where as we medle with deadly workes? ⁊ that there is promysed vs an euerlasting hope, where as we oure selues are euell and vayne? ⁊ ⁊ there are layed vp for vs dwellynge of health ⁊ fredome, where as we haue lyued euell? and that the worships of ⁊ Hyest is keppe to defende them, which haue led a pacient life, where as we haue walked in ⁊ most wicked wayes of all? and that there shalbe shewed a paradise, whose frute endureth for euer, wherin is fredome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in? for we haue walked in vnpleasaunt places: And that the faces of them which haue absteyned, shal shyne about the starres, where as oure faces shalbe blacke and darcke? For whyle we lyued and dyd vnrighteously, we considered not, that we shulde suffre therfore after death?

The answered he me, and sayde: This is J the consideraacion ⁊ thought of the battayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouercome, he shall suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shall receaue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, wherof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life,<sup>f</sup> that thou mayest lyue. Neuertheles they beleued him not, nether the prophetes after him, No ner me which haue spoken vnto them, that heuynes shulde not reach vnto them to their destruccion, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred the selues to be enfourmed in saluacion.

I answered then ⁊ sayde: I knowe LORDE, that the Hyest is mercyfull, in ⁊ he hath mercy vpon them, which are not yet in the worlde, and vpon those also that walke in his lawe:<sup>e</sup> and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towarde those that haue synned in their workes: and that he is liberrall to geue where as it requyreth: and that he is of greате mercy, for he multiplieth his louynge kyndnesses towarde those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his merieies, the worlde shal not be made lyuynge, with those that dwell therein: He geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his goodnesse, that they which haue done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made lyuynge. And yf the iudge forgauē not those ⁊ be healed with his worde, and yf he wolde destroye ⁊ multitude that stryue, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

The viij. Chapter.

AND he answered me, sayēge: The most A hyest made this worlde for many, but the worlde to come for few. I wyl tell the a synmilitude, Eszdras: As whan thou axest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geueth moch moulde, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it ⁊ golde cometh of.

Euen so is it with the worke of this worlde. There be many created,<sup>a</sup> but few shall be preserued. Then answered I ⁊ sayde: Then swalowe vp the witt (thou soule) and deuoure the vnderstandinge, for thou art agreed to herken and to geue eare, and wyllinge to prophecie: for thou hast no longer space geuen the, but only to lyue. O LORDE, wilt thou not geue thy seruauit leue, ⁊ we maye praye before the, and that thou mayest geue sedē vnto oure hert, and buylde oure vnderstandinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that euery one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, maye lyue?

For thou art alone, and we all are one workmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childesbed, and thou guest the membres, and thy creature is preserued in fyre and water: ⁊ ix. monethes doth thy worke suffre thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preserueth and it ⁊ is preserued, shal both be kepte together: ⁊ whan tyme is, the childesbedd delyuereth ⁊ thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

B For thou hast commaunded the brestes to geue mylke vnto the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be nourished for a tyme: and then thou disposest and ordrest it with thy mercy, bryngest it vp with thy righteousnes, nuturest it in thy lawe, and refourmest it with thy vnderstandinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it lyuynge as thy worke. Seinge then that thou destroyest him, which with so greates labours is created and fashioned thorow thy commaundement, thou coudest lyghtly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preserued.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am sory: and of thy inheritaunce, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and for Iacob, for whose sake I am greued: therefore begynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, euen of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue herde the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therefore heare my voyce, and vnderstode my wordes, and I shal speake before the.

This is the begynnynge of the wordes of Esdras, before he was receaued: O LORDE, thou that dwellest in euerlastyngnesse, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose stole is exceeding hye, whose glory and maiesty maye not be comprehēded, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with trembling, whose keepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose worde is true, whose talkynge is stedfast, whose commaundement is stronge, whose ordynauce is fearfull, whose loke dryeth vp the depthes, whose wrath maketh the mountaynes to melt awaye, ⁊ whose trueth beareth wytnes: O heare ⁊ prayer of thy seruauit, and marck with thine eares the petition of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wil speake: and so lōge as I haue vnderstandinge, I will answer. O lōke not vpō the synnes of thy people, which serue ⁊ in the trueth. Haue no respecte vnto the wicked studies of the Heithen, but to the desyre of those that kepe thy testimonies with sorowes. Thinke not vpon those that haue walked faynedly before the, but vpon them, which with wyll haue knowne thy feare.

Let it not be thy wyll to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to lōke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indignacion at them, which are worse then beastes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in ⁊ righteousness and glory: for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

D For yf thou hast mercy vpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousness: for ⁊ righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue rewarde. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generacion, that thou shuldest be so rough towardes him?

<sup>b</sup> For of a trueth there is no man amonge them that be borne, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done anysse. For in this (O LORDE) thy righteousness ⁊ thy goodnes shalbe prayed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not ryche in good workes.

<sup>b</sup> 3 Re. 8. g.    2 Par. 6. f.    1 Ioh. 1. b.

Then answered he me and sayde: Some thinges hast thou spoken a right, and acording vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wil not verely cōsidre the worke of them, which haue synned before death, before the iudgment, before destruccio, "but I wyll reioyse ouer the worke and thought of y<sup>e</sup> righteous.
I wil remembre also the pilgrynage, the ho-lymakynge and the rewarde. Like as I haue spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the huszbād man soweth moche sēd vpon the grounde, and planteth many trees, and yet allwaye the thinge that is sowne or plāted is not all kepte safe, nether doth it all take rote: Euen so is it of them that are sowne in the worlde, they shal not all be preserued.

I answered then & sayde: Yf I haue founde grace, then let me speake. Like as the hus-bāde mans sēd perisheth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to moche rayne vpon it: Euen so perisheth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is like vnto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou hast made all thinges, and lickened him vnto the huszbande mans sēd.
Be not wroth at vs (O LORDE) but spare thy people, and haue mercy vpon thine owne inheritaunce: O be mercifull vnto thy creature.

Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for such as be to come. For thou wātest yet moche, seynge thou mayest loue my creature aboute me: I haue oft tynes drawne nye vnto the, but neuer to the vnrighteous.
In this also thou art maruelous before the Hyest, in that thou hast humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and hast not regarded thine owne self, y<sup>e</sup> thou art had in soch ho-noure amonge the righteous. Therefore shal greate wrechidnes and mysery come vpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in y<sup>e</sup> worlde, for they haue walked in greate pryde.

But vnderstonde thou for thy self, and seke out glory for such as be like the: for vnto you is paradise opened, the tre of life is plāted, the tyme to come is prepared, plen-teousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wysdome. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and moth is hyd from you, & into hell flyeth corrupcion in forgetfulness. Sorowes are vanyshed awaye, and in the ende is shewed the treasure of immortalite. And therefore axe thou no more questions, cōcernynge the multitude of them that perishe. For they haue taken libertie, despyed the Hyest, thought scorn of his lawe, and forsaken his wayes.

Morouer, they haue troden downe his righteous, and sayde in their hert, that there is no God, yee and that wittingly, for they dye. For like as the thinge that I haue spoken of, is made ready for you: Euē so is thyrst and payne prepared for them. For it was not his wil that man shulde come to naught: but they which be created, haue defyled the name of him that made them, and are vnthankefull vnto him, which prepared life for them. And therefore is my iudgment now at hande. These thinges haue I not shewed vnto all men, but vnto few: namely, vnto the,
and to such as be like the.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde O
LORDE, now hast thou shewed me the multitude of the tokens, which thou wilt begyne to do at the last: but at what tyme and whan, thou hast not shewed me.

The ii. Chapter.

HE answered me then and saide: Measure thou the tyme diligently in it self, whan thou seist that one parte of the tokens come to passe, which I haue tolde y<sup>e</sup> before:
so shalt thou vnderstonde, that it is the very same tyme, wherin the Hyest wil begynne to vysit the worlde, which he made. And whā there shalbe sene earthquake and vproure of the people in the worlde, then shalt thou well vnderstonde, that the most hyest spake of those thinges, from the dayes that were before the, euen from the begynnynge.

For like as all that is made in the worlde, hath a begynnynge and ende, and the ende is manifest: Euen so the tynes also of the Hyest haue playne begynnynge in wonders and signes, and the ende in workynge and in tokens. And euery one that shalbe sauēd, and shal be able to escape by his workes & by faith (wherin ye haue beleued) shal be preserued from the saide pears, and shal se my sauoure in my londe and within my borders, for I haue halowed me from the worlde. Then shall they be in carefulnesse,

* Gen. 4. a.

which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue cast them out despytfully, shall dwell in paynes.

B For such as in their life haue receaued benefites, and haue not knowne me, and they that haue abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yet fredome, and whan they had yet open rowme of amendenēt and conuersion, ⁊ vnderstode not, but despyed it: ⁊ same must knowe it after death in payne. And therefore be thou nomore carefull, how the vngodly shalbe punyshed, ⁊ how the righteous shalbe saued, and whose the worlde is, and for whom the worlde, and whan it is. Then answered I and sayde: "I haue talked before ⁊ now I speake, and wyl speake also herafter, that there be many moo of them which perish, then shal be saued, like as the floude is greater then the droppe.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the sede: as the floures be, so are the colours also: soch as the workman is, soch is also ⁊ worke: and as the huszband man is himself, so is his huszbandrye also, for it was the tyme of the worlde. And whan I prepared for them that are now, or euer the worlde was made, whan in they shulde dwel, then was there no man that withstode me.

C Now whan euery one was, and the maker also in the worlde which is now prepared, and the moueth that ceaseth not, and the lawe which is vnsearcheable, their maners were corrupte. So I considered the worlde, and beholde, there was parell, because of ⁊ thoughtes that were come in to it. And I sawe, and spared thē greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plante from amonge many generacions. Let the multitude perish thē, which are growne vp in vayne, and let my grape ⁊ wynebery be kepte: euen my plante: for with greate labour haue I made it vp.

Neuertheles yf thou wilt take vpon the yet seuen dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast in them) go thy waye then in to ⁊ felde of floures, where no house is buylded, and eate onely of the floures of the felde, taist not flesh, drinke no wine, but eate floures onely. Praye vnto the Hyst contynually, so will I come, and talke with the.

D So I wente my waye and came in to the felde which is called Ardath (like as he commaunded me) and there I sat amonge ⁊ floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and ⁊ meate of the same satisfied me. After senen dayes I sat vpon the grasse, ⁊ my hert was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the Hyst, and saide: O LORDE, thou ⁊ shewest thy self vnto vs, ⁊ thou hast declared and opened thy self vnto oure fathers in the wyldernes, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a baren place, whan they came out of Egipte, and thou spakest, sayēge: Heare me O Israel, and marke my wordes thou sede of Iacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and it shal brynge frute in you, ⁊ ye shalbe honoured in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaued the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinaunces and statutes, ⁊ the frute of ⁊ lawe was not declared: for it might not, for why? it was thine. For they that receaued it, perished, ⁊ because they kepte not ⁊ thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome whan the grounde receaueth E sede, or the see a shipp, or a vessell meate and drynke, that, whan it perisheth or is broken wherin a thinge is sowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges also perishe ⁊ are broken, which are sowne or putt therein. But vnto vs it hath not happened so: for we ⁊ haue receaued the lawe, perish in synne, and oure hert also which receaued the lawe: notwithstandinge ⁊ the lawe perisheth not, but remaineth in his labour.

And whan I considered these thinges in my hert after this maner, I loked aboute me with myne eyes, ⁊ vpon the right syde I sawe a woman, which mourned sore, made greate lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir clothes were rent in peeces, ⁊ she had aszshes vpon hir heade.

F Thē let I my thoughtes go, ⁊ I was in, ⁊ turned me vnto her, ⁊ sayde: wherfore wepest thou? why art thou so sory ⁊ discomforted? And she sayde vnto me: Syr, let me bewaile my self ⁊ take yet mores sorowe: for I am sore vexed in my mynde, ⁊ brought very lowe. And I said vnto her: what ayleth ⁊? Or who hath done eny thinge to ⁊? tell me. She sayde: I haue bene vnfrutefull and baren, and haue had an huszband thirtie yeares. And these xxx. yeares I do nothinge els daye and night and all houres, but make my prayer to ꝑ Hyest. After thirtie yeares God herde me thy handmayden, looked vpon my misery, considered my trouble, and gaue me a some, and I was glad of him, so was my husbād also and all my neighbours, and we gaue greate honoure vnto ꝑ Mightie. And I norished him with greate trauayle. So whan he grewe vp, ꝑ came to the tyme, that he shulde haue a wife, I made a feast.

The r. Chapter.

AND it happened that whan my sonne wente in to his chamber, he fell downe, and dyed: thē ouerthrew we all the lightes, and all my neighbours rose vp to cōforte me. Thē toke I my rest vnto the secōde daye at night: ꝑ whan they had all rested, ꝑ they might comforte me, I rested also, and rose vp by night, and fled, and am come hither in to this felde, as thou seist: and am purposed not to come in the cite, but to remayne here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but continually to mourne and to fast, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditations and thoughtes fall, that I was in, and spake to her in displeasure: Thou foolish woman, seist thou not oure heynes and mournyng, and what happeneth vnto vs? how Sion oure mother is all wofull and sory, and how she is cleane brought downe and in misery? seinge we be all now in heynes, ꝑ make oure mone (for we be all soroufull.) As for the heynes that thou takest, it is but for one sonne. Demaunde the earth, and she shal tell the, that it is she which ought (by reason) to mourne, for the fall of so many that growe vpon her. For from the begynnyng all men are borne of her, ꝑ other shal come: and beholde, they walke almost all in to destruction, and many of them shalbe roted out.

Who shulde then (by reason) make more mournyng, then she, that hath lost so greate a multitude? and not thou, which art sory but for one. But yf thou woldest saye vnto me: My mournyng is not like the mournyng of the earth, for I haue lost the frute of my body, which I bare with heynes: as for the earth, according to the ordynance of ꝑ earth onely, so that many are gone away in her, as it is come to passe: Then saye I vnto the: like as thou hast borne with trauayle ꝑ sorowe, euen so the earth also from the begynnyng geueth hir frute vnto man, for him ꝑ made her. And therefore witholde thy sorowe and heynes by thy self, and loke what happeneth vnto ꝑ, beare it strōgly. For yf thou iudgeth the marek ꝑ ende of God to be righteous and good, and receauest his counsell in tyme, thou shalt be commended therein. Go thy waye then in to the cite to thy husbāde.

And she sayde vnto me: that wyl I not do, I will not go in to the cite, but heare will I dye. So I communed more with her, and sayde: Do not so, but be cōceled, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion? Be of good comforte because of the sorowe of Ierusalem. For thou seist that oure Sanctuary is layed waist, oure autler broken, oure temple destroyed, oure playenge of instrumentes and synginge layed downe, the thankesgeuyng put to sylence, oure myrth is vanished awaye, the light of oure candlestick is quenched, ꝑ Arke of the cōuenant is takē from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called vpon ouer vs, is dishonoured, oure children are put to shame, oure prestes are brent, oure Leuites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wyues rauyshed, oure righteous men spoyled, and oure childe destroyed, oure yonge men are brought in bōdage, and oure strōge worthies are become weake: and Sion (which seale is ꝑ greatest of all) is lowshed vp from hir worshippe: for she is deliuered in to the handes of them that hate vs.

And therefore shake of ꝑ greate heynes, and putt awaye the multitude of sorowes: that the Mightie maye be mercyfull vnto the, and that the Hyest maye geue the rest from ꝑ laboure and trauayle. And it happened, that whan I was talkyng with her, hir face dyd shyne ꝑ glyster, so that I was afraied of her, and mused what it might be. And immediately she cast out a greate voyce, very fearfull, so that ꝑ earth shoke at the noyse of the woman: and I looked, and beholde, the woman appeared vnto me nomore: but there was a cite buylded, and a place was shewed from the grounde and foundaacion.

Then was I afraied, and cried with loude voyce, and sayde: where is Vriel the angell, which came to me at the first? For he hath caused me to come in many consideracions and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcion, and my prayer to rebuke. And as I was speakynge these wordes, he came vnto me, and loked vpon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne vnderstandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde vnto me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderstandinge vexed? and the vnderstandinge of thy hert, and wherfore art thou sory? And I sayde: Because thou hast forsaken me: and I haue done acordynge vnto thy wordes, I wente in to the felde, and there haue I sene thynges, that I am not able to expresse. He saide vnto me: Stöde vp and be manly, and I shal geue the exortacion.

Then sayde I: Speake on to me my LORDE, forsake me not, lest I dye in vayne: for I haue sene that I knewe not, & herde that I do not knowe. Or shall my vnderstondynge be disceaned, and my mynde? But now I beseke the, that thou wilt shewe thy seruauent of this wöder. He answered me thö and sayde: heare me, and I shall enfourme the, and tell the wherfore thou art afraied, for the Hyst hath opened many secrete thynges vnto the.

He hath sene that thy waye is right, and that thou takest sorowe continually for thy people, and makest greate lamentacion for Sion: and therefore vnderstonde the vision which thou sawest a litle whyle agoo after this maner: Thou sawest a woman mournynge, and thou hast comforted her: Neuertheles now seist thou the licknes of the woman no more, but thou thoughtest there was a cite buylded: and like as she tolde the of the fall of her sonne, so is this the answer: The woman whom thou sawest, is Sion: and where as she tolde the, that she hath bene thirtie yeaeres vnfrutefull and baren, those are the xxx. yeaeres, wherin there was no offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeaeres Salomon buylded her, and offred, and then bare the baren a sonne. And where as she tolde the, that she nourished him with laboure, that was the dwellynge of Ierusalem. But where as the sonne dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of Ierusalem. And thou sawest hir lickenesse, how she mourned for hir sonne: and what els happened vnto her, I haue shewed y.

* 4 Esd. 9. a.

And now God seyth, that thou art sory in thy mynde, and suffrest from y hert for her: and so hath he shewed the hir cleannesse, and the faynes of hir bewtye.

And therefore I bad the remayne in the felde, where no house is buylded. For I knew y the Hyst wolde shew this vnto the, therfore I commaunded the to go in to the felde, where no foundation ner buyldinge is. For in the place where the Hyst wyll shewe his cite, there shall be no mans buyldinge. And therefore feare not, and let not thine hert be afraied, but go thy waye in, and se the glorious and fayre buyldinge, and how greate it is, and how greate thou thinkest it after the measure of thine eyes, & then shalt thou heare as moch as thine eares maye comprehend. For thou art blessed aboue many other, and art called with the Hyst, as y few. But tomorrow at night thou shalt remayne here, and so shal the Hyst shewe the visions of hie thynges, which he wyll do vnto them that dwell vpon earth in y last dayes. So I slepte the same night like as he cömaunded me.

The ri. Chapter.

THEN sawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from y see an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and thre heades: And I sawe, and beholde, he spred his wynges ouer all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and so they were put together agayne. And I behelde, and out of his fethers there grew other litle contrary fethers: the heades rested, the head in the myddest was greater then the other, yet rested it with the residue.

Morouer I sawe, that the Aegle flew with his wynges, and rained vpon earth, & ouer all them that dwell vpon the earth: and I sawe y all thynges vnder heauen were subiecte vnto him, and no man spake against him, no not one creature vpon earth. I sawe also that the Aegle stode vp vpon his clawes, & gaue a sounde with his fethers, & a voyce sayge after this maner: watch not all together, slepe euery mā in his owne place, & watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preserued at the last. Neuertheles I sawe, y the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddest of his body. And I nombred his cötrary fethers, & beholde, there were eight of them. And I loked, & beholde, vpon the right syde there arose one fether, and raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, when it raigned, the ende of it came, and the place therof appeared no more. So the nexte folowing stode vp, and raigned, and had a greate tyme: and it happened, when it raigned, the ende of it came also like as the first, so that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto it, and sayde: Heare thou, which hast kepte in the earth so longe, this I saye vnto the, before thou begynnest to appeare nomore: There shal none after thee atteyne vnto thy tyme. Then arose the thirde, and raigned as the other afore, and appeared nomore also. So wete it with all the residue one after another, so that euery one raigned, and the appeared nomore. The first looked, and beholde, in processe of tyme the fethers which folowed were set vp vpon the right syde, which they might rule also: and some of the ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for some of the were set vp, but ruled not. After this the first looked, and beholde, which xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: and there was nomore vpon the Aegles body, but two heades that rested, six fethers. Then sawe I also, which the six fethers were parted in two, and remayned vnder the heade, which was vpon the right syde, for the foure continued in their place. So the first looked, and beholde, they that were vnder the wynges, thought to set vp them selues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one set vp, but shortly it appeared nomore, and the seconde were sooner awaye then the first. And I behelde, and lo, the two thought also by the selues to raigne: and when they so thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at rest, namely, it that was in the myddest, for that was the greater of the two heades. And then I sawe, that the two heades were fylled with him, and the heade was turned with them which were by him, and ate vp which two vnder wynges, which wolde haue raigned.

But this heade put which whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all those which dwelt vpon earth with much labour, and he had the gouernaunce of the worlde, ouer all the foules that haue bene. After this the first looked, and beholde, the heade that was in the myddest, suddenly appeared nomore, like as which wynges: then came the two heades, which ruled vpon earth, and ouer those that dwelt therein. And I beholde, and lo, the heade vpon the right side, denoured it that was vpon the left syde. And I herde a voyce, which sayde vnto me: loke before the, and conside the thinge that thou seist. Then I sawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennyng haistely out of which wod, and he sent out a mans voyce vnto the Aegle, and sayde: Heare thou, I wil talke with the, and the Hiest shal saye vnto the: Is it not thou that hast the victory of the foure beastes, whom I made to raigne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that which ende of their times might come thorow the?

And the fourth came, and ouerwanne all the beastes that were past, and had power ouer the worlde with greate fearfulness, and ouer the whole compasse of the earth with the most wicked labour, and so longe time dwelt he vpon the earth with disceate, and the earth hast thou iudged not with trueth. For thou hast troubled the meke, thou hast hurte the peaceable and quyet, thou hast loued lyers, and destroyed the dwellinges of them that brought forth frute, and hast cast downe the wallis of such as dyd the no harme. Therefore is thy wrongeous dealing and blasphemie come vp vnto the Hiest, and thy pryde vnto the Mightie. The Hiest also hath looked vpon the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abhominacions are fulfilled. And therefore appeare nomore thou Aegle, and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngacious heades, and thy synfull clawes, and all thy wayne body: that the earth maye be refreshed, and come agayne to herself, when she is deliuered from thy violence, and that she maye hope for which iudgment and mercy of him that made her.

The xij. Chapter.

AND it happened when which Lyō spake these wordes vnto which Aegle, which heade which afore had which vpperhade, appeared nomore: nether dyd which foure wynges appeare eny more, which came to hi, and were sett vp to raigne, and their kyngdome was small and full of vproure.

And I sawe, which beholde, they appeared nomore, and which whole body of which Aegle was brēt, and the earth was in greate feare. Then awaked I out of the traunce of my mynde, and from greate feare, and sayde vnto my sprete: Lo, this hast thou geuen me, in which thou searchest out the wayes of the Hyest: lo, yet am I weery in my minde, and very weake in my sprete, and litle strēth is there in me, for the greate feare that I receaued this night. Therefore wil I now beseke the Hyest,  $\hat{y}$  he wyl comforte me vnto the ende,  $\pi$  I sayde: B LORDE LORDE yf I haue founde grace before thy sight, and yf I am iustified with  $\hat{y}$  before many other,  $\pi$  yf my prayer be come vp before thy face, cōforte me then, and shew me thy seruauent the interpretacion  $\pi$  playne differēce of this horrible sight, that thou mayest perfectly cōforte my soule: for thou hast iudged me worthy, to shew me  $\hat{y}$  last of tymes.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the interpretacion of this sight, The Aegle whom thou sawest come vp from the see, is the kingdome which was sene in the vision of thy brother "Daniel, but it was no expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

Beholde, the dayes come, that there shal ryse vp a kyngdome vpō earth, and it shal be feared aboue all the kyngdomes  $\hat{y}$  were before it. In the same kyngdome shal xij. kynges raigne, one after another. For the secōde shal begynne to raigne, and shal haue more tyme thē the other,  $\pi$  this do  $\hat{y}$  xij. wynges signifie, which thou sawest. C As for the voyce that spake, and that thou sawest go out from the heades but not from  $\hat{y}$  body, it betokeneth, that after the tyme of that kyngdome there shall aryse greate stryuynges, and it shal stonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it shal not yet fall, bot shal be set in to his begynnynge. And  $\hat{y}$  eight vnderwynges which thou sawest hāge vnto  $\hat{y}$  wynges of hī, betokē,  $\hat{y}$  in hī there shal aryse eight kynges, whose tyme shalbe but small,  $\pi$  their yeares swift,  $\pi$  two of them shal beare. But whan the middest tyme commeth, there shal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two shal be kepte vnto  $\hat{y}$  ende.

And where as thou sawest three heades restynge, this is the interpretacion: In his last shal the Hyest rayse vp three kyngdomes, and call many agayne in to thē,  $\pi$  they shal haue the dominion of the earth, and of those that dwell therin, with moch labourē aboue all those  $\hat{y}$  were before thē. Therefore are they called  $\hat{y}$  heades of the Aegle: for it is they  $\hat{y}$  shal bringe forth his wickednes agayne,  $\pi$   $\hat{y}$  shal perfourme  $\pi$  fynish his last. And where as thou sawest, that  $\hat{y}$  greate heade appeared no more, it signifieth, that one of them shal dye vpō his bed,  $\pi$  yet with payne, for the two that remayne, shalbe slayne with the swerde. For the swerde of the one shal deuoure the other, but at the last shal he fall thorow the swerde himself.

And where as thou sawest two vnderwinges D vpon the heade that is on the right syde, it signifieth, that it is they, whō the Hyest hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a small kyngdome,  $\pi$  full of trouble. The Lyon whō thou sawest rysinge vp out of the wodde and roaringe, and speakinge vnto the Aegle, and rebukynge him for his vnrighteousnesse, is the wynde, which the Hyest hath kepte for them and for their wickednesse vnto the ende: he shal reprove them, and rente them asunder before them. For he shal sett them luyunge before the iudgment, and shal rebuke them: for the residue of my people shal he delyuer with trouble, those  $\hat{y}$  be preserued ouer myne endes: and he shal make them ioyfull vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue spoken vnto the from the begynnynge. This is the dreame that thou sawest, and this is the interpretacion. Thou only hast bene mete to knowe the secrete of the Hyest.

Therefore wryte all these thinges  $\hat{y}$  thou hast sene in a boke, and hyde them, and teach thē the wyse in the people, whose hertes thou knowest maye comprehendē and kepe these secretes. But wayte thou here  $\hat{y}$  self yet seven dayes moo, that it maye be shewed the, what so euer it pleaseth the Hyest to declare vnto the, and with that he wente his waye.

And whan all the people perceaued,  $\hat{y}$  the E seven dayes were past,  $\pi$  I not come agayne into  $\hat{y}$  cite, they gathered them all together from the least vnto the most,  $\pi$  came vnto me, and sayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynst the,  $\hat{y}$  thou forsakest vs,  $\pi$  systter here in this place? For of all people thou only art left vs, as a grape of the vyne, and as a candell in a darcke place, and as an hauen  $\pi$  shippe preserued from  $\hat{y}$  tēpest. Haue we not els aduersite ynough, but thou must forsake vs? Were it not better for vs, that we had bene brent with Sion? For we are no better, then they  $\hat{y}$  dyed there:

and they wepte with loude voyce. Then answered I the  $\tau$  sayde: Be of good cōforte O Israel,  $\tau$  be not heuy thou house of Iacob: for  $\gamma$  Hyest hath you in remēbraūce,  $\tau$   $\gamma$  Mightie hath not forgottē you in tētaciō. As for me, I haue not forsakē you, nether am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, because of  $\gamma$  myserie of Israel, that I might seke mercy for  $\gamma$  lowe estate of youre Sāctuary. And now go youre waye home euery mā, and after these dayes wyl I come vnto you. So the people wēt their waye in to the cite, like as I commaunded them: but I remayned still in the felde seuen dayes, as  $\gamma$  angell bad me, and I ate onely of the floures of the felde, and had my meate of the herbes in those dayes.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND it happened after the seūē dayes,  $\gamma$  I dreamed a dreame by night. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the see, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I loked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and whan he turned his countenance to cōsider, all the thinges trembled that were sene vnder him: and whan the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brent that herde him, like as the earth whan it feleth the fyre.

After these I sawe,  $\tau$  beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of mē out of nōmbre from the foure wyndes of the heauē, to fight agaynst  $\gamma$  man, that came out from  $\gamma$  see. And I loked,  $\tau$  beholde, he graued himself a greate mōūtayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grauen,  $\tau$  I coude not.

I sawe after these,  $\gamma$  all they which came to fight agaynst him, were sore afrayed, and yet durst they fight. Neuertheles whan he sawe the fearsnesse and violence of the people, he nether lift vp his hande ner helde swerde, ner eny weapen: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes  $\gamma$  wynde of the flamme: and out of his tōge he cast out sparkes and stormes, and they were all myxte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flāmes, and  $\gamma$  greate storme,  $\tau$  fell with a russhe vpon  $\gamma$  people, which was prepared to fight  $\tau$  brēt the vp euerychone: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust  $\tau$  smoke. Whan I saw this, I was afrayed.

Afterwarde sawe I the same man come B downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there came moch people vnto him: some were glad some were sory, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I sick thorow greate feare, and I awaked, and sayde: thou hast shewed  $\gamma$  seruauant all  $\gamma$  wōders frō  $\gamma$  begynnyng,  $\tau$  hast counted me worthy,  $\gamma$  thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpretacon of this dreame. For thus I cōsidre in my understandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes,  $\tau$  moch more wo vnto thē that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heynes.

Now vnderstonde I  $\gamma$  thinges that are layed vp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therfore are they come in to greate parells, and many necessities, like as these dreames declare. Yet is it easier,  $\gamma$  he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the worlde, and now to se  $\gamma$  thinges  $\gamma$  shal happen in  $\gamma$  last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The interpretation of the sight shall I shewe the, and I wyl open vnto the, the thinge  $\gamma$  thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the interpretation. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. They that be fallen in to harme, are soch as haue workes  $\tau$  faith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therefore, that they which be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deed. This is the meanyng of the vision. Where as thou sawest a man comynge vp from the depe of the see,  $\gamma$  same is he whom God the Hyest hath kepte a greate season, which by his owne self shall deluyr his creature,  $\tau$  he shal orde thē that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest,  $\gamma$  out of his mouth there came a blast of wynde, fyre and storme,  $\tau$  how  $\gamma$  he lift vp nether swerde ner weapen, but  $\gamma$  the ruszshinge in of him destroyed the whole multitude,  $\gamma$  came to fight agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, whan God wyl deluyr thē  $\gamma$  are vpon earth,  $\tau$  in a traunce of mynde shall he come vpon thē,  $\gamma$  dwell in the earth. And one shal vndertake to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one place agaynst another,<sup>a</sup> one people agaynst another, ¶ one realme agaynst another. When this cometh to passe, then shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and the shal my sonne be declared, who thou sawest clymme vp as a ma. And whan all  $\hat{y}$  people heare his voyce, euery man shal in their owne lode leaue the battayll,  $\hat{y}$  they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shall be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to ouercome him by fightinge. But he shal stode vpon the toppes of the mount Sion. Neuertheles Sion shall come,  $\tau$  shall be shewed, beyng prepared  $\tau$  buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grauen forth without eny hādes. But my sonne shal rebuke the people  $\hat{y}$  are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginacions: and their paynes wherwith they shal be punyshed, are likened vnto the flamme: and without eny labour shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is cōpared vnto the fyre.

¶ And where as thou sawest, that he gathered another peaceable people vnto hi: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye prisoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whon <sup>b</sup> Salmanasar the kinge of Assiria toke prisoner, and caried them ouer  $\hat{y}$  water, and so came they in to another londe.

But they gaue them this counsell,  $\hat{y}$  they shulde leaue the multitude of the Heithē, and to go forth in to a farther countre, where neuer mankynde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narrow passages of the water of Euphrates, and God shewed tokens for thē, and helde styll the floude tyll they were passed ouer: for thorow that countre there was a greate waye, namely of a yeaere and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwelt they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne,  $\hat{y}$  Hyest shall holde styll the sprynges of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal dēfede his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, ¶ shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man commynge vp from the depe of the see?

And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cāst nether seke out ner knowe these thinges that are in the depe of the see, euen so maiest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretation of the dreame which thou sawest, therefore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought it. <sup>c</sup> Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstandinge thy mother, and therefore haue I shewed the  $\hat{y}$  treasure of the Hyest. After three dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous thinges wyl I declare vnto the.

Then wente I forth in to  $\hat{y}$  felde, geuyng prayse and thanks greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and because he gouerneth the same, and soch as is in tyme, and there I satt three dayes.

The xiiii. Chapter.

VPON the thirde daye I satt vnder an oke tre, then came there a voyce vnto me out of the bush,  $\tau$  sayde: Eszdras, Eszdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode vp vpon my fete. Thē spake he vnto me: In the bush dyd I appeare vnto Moses,  $\tau$  talked with him, whā my people serued in Egipte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egipte,  $\tau$  brought him vpō  $\hat{y}$  mount Sion, where I helde him by me a longe season, and tolde him my wonderous workes, and shewed him  $\hat{y}$  secretes of the tymes, and the ende, and commaunded him, sayēge: These wordes shalt thou declare,  $\tau$  not hyde thē. And now I saye vnto the, that thou laye vp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretacions which I haue shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of all, thou shal be turned and remayne with my counsell, and with soch as be like the, vntyll  $\hat{y}$  tymes be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to waxe olde. For the tyme is deuyded in to twolue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remayneth there that, which is after  $\frac{1}{2}$  half of  $\frac{1}{2}$  tenth parte.

B Therefore prepare and ordre thy house, and reforme thy people: comforte such of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destruction: let go from the mortall thoughtes: cast awaye the burthens of man: put of the weake nature: laye vp in some place  $\frac{1}{2}$  thoughtes that are most heny vnto the, and haist the to flyt from these tymes: for soch euell  $\frac{1}{2}$  wickednesse as thou hast now sene happē, shal they do yet moch worse. For the weaker that the worlde and the tyme is, the more shal  $\frac{1}{2}$  synne and wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vpon earth. For the trueth is fled farre awaye,  $\frac{1}{2}$  lesynge is hard at haunde. For now haisteth the vision to come, that thou hast sene.

C Then answered I and sayde: Beholde LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and reforme the people which are present. But they  $\frac{1}{2}$  shal be borne afterwarde, who wyl exhorte or rebuke the? Thus the worlde is set in darknes, and they  $\frac{1}{2}$  dwell therein, are without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, because no man knoweth the thinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. Yf I haue foude grace before the, sende the holy goost in to me, and I shall wryte all that hath bene done in the worlde sens the begynnyng, which was wrytten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, may lyue.

And he answered me, sayge: Go  $\frac{1}{2}$  waye, gather thy people together,  $\frac{1}{2}$  saye vnto the, that they seke the not for xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many boxe trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabria, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wryte swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a cādle of vnderstōdinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be perfourmed which thou shalt begynne to wryte. And then shalt thou declare some thinges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vnto  $\frac{1}{2}$  wyse. Tomorrow this houre shalt thou begynne to wryte.

D Then wēte I forth (as he commaūded me) and gathered all  $\frac{1}{2}$  people together, and sayde: Heare these wordes o Israel: Oure fathers from the begynnyng were straungers in Egipte, from whēce they were delyuered, and receaued the lawe of life,  $\frac{1}{2}$  which they kepte not, which ye also haue trasgressed after the. Then was this lond and the lond of Sion parted amōge you by the lot to possesse. But youre fathers and ye youre selues also haue done vnrighteousnes,  $\frac{1}{2}$  haue not kepte the wayes which the Hyest cōmaunded you. And for so moch as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thinge that he had geuen you. And now are ye here and youre brethren amōge you. Therefore yf so be that ye wil subdue youre owne vnderstandinge, and reforme youre hert, ye shal be kepte aliuē,  $\frac{1}{2}$  after death shal ye opteyne mercy. For after death shal the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and  $\frac{1}{2}$  names of the vngodly with their workes shalbe declared. Let no mā therfore come now vnto me, ner axe eny question at me these xl. dayes.

So I toke the fyue men (as he commaunded E me) and we wente in to the felde, and remayned there. The next daye a voyce called me sayge: Esdras, Open thy mouth,  $\frac{1}{2}$  drynke that I geue the. The opened I my mouth,  $\frac{1}{2}$  beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the colour of it was like fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And whā I had drunken it, my hert had vnderstōdinge, and wysdome grew in my brest: for my sprete was kepte in remembraunce, and my mouth was opened and shut no more. The Hyest gaue vnderstōdinge vnto the fyue men,  $\frac{1}{2}$  they wrote  $\frac{1}{2}$  hyc thynges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the night they ate bred: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wrote two hundreth  $\frac{1}{2}$  foure bokes.

And it happened whā the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the Hyest spake, sayenge: The first that thou hast wrytē, speake openly,  $\frac{1}{2}$  the worthy and vnworthy maye rede it. But kepe  $\frac{1}{2}$  lxx. last,  $\frac{1}{2}$  thou mayest shew it onely to such as be wyse amonge thy people. For in them is the sprynge of vnderstōdinge, the fountayne of wysdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The xv. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, speake thou in the eares of A my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyll put in ſ̄ mouth, ſaieth the LORDE: and cauſe them to be wrytten in a letter, for it is the truth. Feare not the ymaginaciōs againſt ſ̄, let not ſ̄ vnfaithfulnes of them trouble the, that ſpeake agaynſt the. For all the vnfaithfull ſhal dye in their vnfaithfulnes. Beholde ſaieth the LORDE, I wil brynge plagis vpon the worlde: ſ̄ ſwerde, hunger, death and deſtruction, for wickednes hath the vpper hande in all ſ̄ earth, and their ſhamefull workes are fulfilled.

¶ Therefore ſaieth the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickedneſſe, which they do ſo vngodly: nether wil I ſuffre them in the thinges, that they deale with all ſo wickedly. ¶ Beholde, the innocent bloude of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the ſoules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therefore (ſaieth the LORDE) I wil ſurely auēge, and receaue vnto me all the innocēt bloude from amonge them.

¶ Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of ſhepe to be ſlayne, I wil not ſuffre them now to dwell in Egipte, but wyl brynge them out with a mightie hande and a ſtretched out arme, and ſmyte it with plagis as afore, and wyl deſtroye all the londe off it. Egipte ſhal mourne, and the foundations of it ſhalbe ſmytten with the plague and punyſhment, ſ̄ God ſhal brynge vpon it.

¶ They that tyll ſ̄ grouēde, ſhal mourne, for their ſedes ſhal be deſtroyed thorow the blaſtinge and hale, and an horrible ſtarre. Wo worth ſ̄ worlde and them that dwell therein, for ſ̄ ſwerde ⁊ their deſtrucciō draweth nye: ⁊ one people ſhal ſtōde vp to fight againſt another, ⁊ ſwerdes in their hādes. For mē ſhalbe vntedfaſt, and ſome ſhal do violence vnto other: they ſhal not regarde their kynge and prynces, the wayes of their doinges and hādelinges in their power. A man ſhal deſyre to go in to the cite, ⁊ ſhal not be able. For becauſe of their pryde ſ̄ cities ſhalbe brought in feare, ſ̄ houſes ſhal ſhake, and men ſhalbe afraied. A man ſhal haue no pieu vpon his neighboure, but one ſhal prouoke another vnto battayll, to ſpoyle their goodes becauſe of the hunger of bred, and becauſe of the greate trouble.

¶ Beholde, I gather ⁊ call together all the kynges of ſ̄ earth which are from the vpryſinge, from the ſouth, from the eaſt and Liba-nus to turne vnto them, and reſtore the thinges that they haue geuē them. Like as they do yet this daye vnto my choſen, ſo wil I do alſo, and recōpenſe thē in their boſome. Thus ſayeth ſ̄ LORDE God: My right hande ſhal not ſpare ſ̄ ſynners, and my ſwerde ſhal not ceaſe ouer them, that ſhed the innocēt bloude vpon earth. The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath cōſumed the foundations of the earth, and the ſynners like the ſtrawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that ſynne, and kepe not my commaundementes, ſaieth the LORDE. I wil not ſpare them. Go youre waye ye children from violence, deſyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORDE knoweth all thē that ſynne agaynſt him, and therefore deliyereth he them vnto death and deſtrucciō: For now are the plagis come vpon the worlde, ⁊ ye ſhal remayne in thē. For God ſhal not deliyer you, becauſe ye haue ſynned agaynſt him.

¶ Beholde, an horrible viſion commeth frō the eaſt, where generaciōs of Dragons ſhal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charettes, and the multitude of them ſhalbe as the wynde vpō earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afraied: and as the wyld bores out of ſ̄ wod, ſo ſhal they go out, and with greate power ſhal they come, and ſtonde fightinge with thē, and ſhal waite the porciō of the londe of the Aſſirians.

And then ſhal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembreinge their byrth, and ſhal turne aboute ſwearinge together in greate power, to perſecute them. But theſe ſhalbe afraied, and kepe ſylence at their power, and ſhal fle: and one out of the londe of the Aſſirians ſhal beſege thē, and conſume one of thē, and in their hoost ſhal be feare and drede, and ſtrife amonge their kynges.

¶ Beholde cloudes from the eaſt, and from the north vnto the ſouth, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and ſtorme. They ſhal ſmyte one vpon another, and they ſhal ſmyte at ſ̄ greate ſtarre vpon earth and their ſtarre, and the bloude ſhalbe from the ſwerde vnto the bely, and the ſmoke of mā vnto ſ̄ Camels lytter: And there ſhalbe greate fearfulnes and tremblinge vpō earth, and they that ſe the wrath, ſhal be afraied, and a tremblinge ſhal come vpon them.

And then shal there come greate raynes from y south and from the north, and parte from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal shutt them vp agayne, ⁊ the cloude which he rayned vp in wrath, and the starre to cause feare towarde y east and west wynde, shalbe destroyed, ⁊ the greate cloudes shalbe lift vp, and y mightie cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that they maye make all the earth afrayed and thē y dwell therein, and that they maye poure out ouer all places an horrible starre, fyre and hale and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: y all felkes maye be full, and all ryuers, ⁊ they shal breake downe the cities ⁊ wallis, mountaynes ⁊ hylles, all trees, wod, and the grasse of the medowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afrayed, they shal come to her and besege her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vp vnto the heauen, and all they that be aboute her, shal bewaile her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia y cōfortest thyself also vpō the hope of Babilon, and art a worshipec of hir personne: Wo be vnto the thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, ⁊ hast deete y daughters i whordome, that they might tryumphe and please thy louers, which haue allwaye desyred to cōmytte whordome with the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir workes and inuencions.

Therefore sayeth God: I wyl sende plages vpon the, wyddowhode, pouerte, hōger, warres, and pestilence, to waist thy houses with destruction and death, and the glory of thy power shal be dried vp as a floure, when y heate aryseth y is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be sick as a poore wife that is played ⁊ beatē of wemen: so y the mightie and louers shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I so hate the saith the LORDE? Yf thou haddest not allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the stroke of thy handes, and sayde ouer their death, when thou wast drunkē: set forth the bewtye of thy countenance.

The rewarde of thy whordome shalbe recompensed the in thy bosome, therefore shalt thou receaue * rewarde.

* Some rede, no rewarde.

Like as thou hast done vnto my chosen (sayeth the LORDE) euen so shal God do vnto the, and shal deluyne the in to the plage. Thy childrē shal dye of hunger, ⁊ thou shalt fall thorow y swerde. Thy cities shalbe broken downe, ⁊ all thine shal perish with the swerde in y felde. They y be in y mōntaynes shal dye of hunger, ⁊ eate their owne flesh, ⁊ drinke their owne bloude for very hōger of bred and thyrst of water. Thou vnhappie shalt come thorow the see, ⁊ receaue plages agayne.

In the passage they shal caste downe the slayne cite, ⁊ shal rote out one parte of y londe, ⁊ cōsume the porcion of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stuble, ⁊ they shalbe thy fyre and shal consume the: thy cities and thy londe, thy wod and thy frutefull trees shal they burne vp with the fyre. Thy children shal they cary awaye captiue, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and marre the bewtie of thy face.

The xvi. Chapter.

WO vnto the Babilon ⁊ Asia, wo vnto y Egipte ⁊ Syria: gyrd your selues with clothes of sack ⁊ hayre, and mourne for your childrē, be sory, for your destruction is at honde. A swerde is sent vpon you, ⁊ who wil turne it back? A fyre is kyndled amōge you, ⁊ who wil quench it? Plages are sent vnto you, ⁊ what is he that wyl dryue them awaye? Maye eny man dryue awaye an hōgrie lyon in the wod? Or maye eny mā quench the fyre in the stubble, when it hath begonne to burne? Maye one turne agayne the arrowe, y is shot of a stronge archer? The mightie LORDE sendeth the plages, ⁊ what is he that wil dryue them awaye? The fyre is kyndled ⁊ gone forth in his wrath, and what is he that wil quench it? He shall cast lightenynges, and who shal not feare? He shal thonder, and who shall not be afrayed? The LORDE shal threaten, and who shal not vtterly be beaten to poulder at his presence? The earth quaketh, ⁊ the foundations therof: y see aryseth up with waves from the depe, and the floudes of it are vnquyte, ⁊ the fishes therof also before the LORDE, ⁊ before the glory of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe, his arrowes that he shuteth, are sharpe, ⁊ shal not mysse, when they begynne to be shot in to y endes of the world.

B Beholde,  $\hat{y}$  plagis are sent,  $\tau$  shal not turne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled,  $\tau$  shall not be put out, tyll it consume the foundations of the earth. Like as an arowe which is shot of a mightie archer, returneth not backward, euen so  $\hat{y}$  plagis  $\hat{y}$  shal be sent vpon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wyl delyuer me in those dayes? The begynnynge of sorowes  $\tau$  greate mourninge: the begynnynge of derth  $\tau$  greate death: the begynnynge of warres,  $\tau$  the powers shal stonde in feare: the begynnynge of euels,  $\tau$  they shal tremble euery one. What shal I do in these thinges, whan the plagis come? Beholde, hōger and plague, trouble  $\tau$  anguysh are sent, as scourges for amendement. But for all these thinges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye myndeful of  $\hat{y}$  scourges.

C Beholde, vitayles shalbe so good cheape vpon earth,  $\hat{y}$  they shal thinke them selues to be in good case: and euen then shal myschefe growe vpō earth, warres, derth  $\tau$  greate disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpō earth shall perish of hōger,  $\tau$  the other that escape the hunger, shal the swerde destroye:  $\tau$  the deed shalbe cast out as donge,  $\tau$  there shalbe no man to cōforte them. For  $\hat{y}$  earth shalbe waisted,  $\tau$  the cities shalbe cast downe: there shalbe no man left to tyll  $\hat{y}$  earth  $\tau$  to sowe it. The trees shal geue frute,  $\tau$  who shal plucke thē of  $\tau$  gather them? The grapes shal be ripe,  $\tau$  who shal treade thē? For all places shalbe desolate of mē, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left,  $\tau$  two in the felde, which shall hyde thē selues in the thicke buszshes,  $\tau$  in the clyffes of stones: like as whan there remaine thre or foure olyues vpon the olyue tre, or as whan a vynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligētly sought thorow the vynyarde.

D Euen so in those dayes there shalbe thre or foure left, for thē  $\hat{y}$  search their houses with the swerde. And the earth shalbe left waiste,  $\tau$  the feldes therof shall waxe olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thornes, because no man shal trauayle there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauinge no brydegromes: the women shal make lamentacion, hauynge no huszbandes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their brydegrome. In the warres shall they be destroyed,  $\tau$  their huszbandes shal perish of hunger. O ye seruantes of the LORDE, heare these thinges,  $\tau$  marek thē. Beholde, the worde of the LORDE, O receaue it: beholde, the plagis drawe nye,  $\tau$  are not slack in tarienge. Like as a trauaylinge woman, which after  $\hat{y}$  ix. moneth brigheth forth a sonne, whan the houre of the byrth is come, an houre two or thre afore that the paynes come vpō hir body,  $\tau$  whan the childe cōmeth to the byrth, they tary not the twyncklynge of an eye: Enē so shall not  $\hat{y}$  plagis be slack to come vpon earth,  $\tau$  the worlde shal mourne,  $\tau$  sorowes shal come vpō it on euery syde.

O my people, heare my worde, make you redy to the battayll:  $\tau$  in all euell be euen as pylgremis vpon earth. He  $\hat{y}$  selleth, let him be as he that flyeth his waye:  $\tau$  he  $\hat{y}$  byeth, as one that wil lese.<sup>a</sup> Who so occupieth marchaūdies, as he that wynneth not:  $\tau$  he that buyldeth, as he that shall not dwell therin: he that soweth, as one  $\hat{y}$  shal not reape: he that twysteth the vynyarde, as he that shal not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that shall get no children: and they  $\hat{y}$  mary not, as the wyddowes: <sup>b</sup> $\tau$  therfore they  $\hat{y}$  laboure, laboure in vayne. For straungers shall reape their frutes,  $\tau$  spoyle their goodes, ouer throwe their houses,  $\tau$  take their childrē captiue, for in captiuyte  $\tau$  hunger shal they get children. And they that occupie their marchaundies with robbery, how longe decke they their cities, their houses, their possessions  $\tau$  personnes? the more wil I punysh them for their synnes, sayeth the LORDE. Like as an whore enuyeth an honest woman, so shall righteousnes hate iniquyte, whan she decketh hir self, and shall accuse her to hir face, whan he cōmeth that defendeth, which shal make inquisiciō for all synne vpō earth. And therfore be not ye like there vnto, ner to the workes therof: for or euer it be longe, iniquite shalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteousnes shal raigne amonge you.

Let not the synner saye, that he hath not synned: for coles of fyre shal burne vpon his heade, which saith before the LORDE God  $\tau$  his glory: I haue not synned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all  $\hat{y}$  workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes  $\tau$  their

He searcheth the grounde of the depe, & the treasures therof: he hath measured the see, and what it conteyneth. He hath shut the see in the myddest of the waters, and with his worde hath he banded the earth vpon the waters. He spredeth out the heauen like a vowe, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deserte and drye wyldernes hath he made sprynges of water, and poles vpō the toppe of the mountaynes, ſ the floudes might poure downe from ſ stony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his hert in the myddest of ſ body, and gaue him breth, life and vnderstandinge, yee and the sprete of ſ Allmightie God, which made all thinges, and hath searched the groude of all the secretes of the earth.

youre synnes, and forget youre vnrighteous-nesses, and medle nomore with them: so shal God lede you forth, and delyuer you from all multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they shal take awaye certayne of you, and fede the ydle with Idols: and they that cōsent vnto them, shal be had in derision, laughed to scorne, & trodden vnder fote.

For vnto the places there shalbe a place, and in the next cities a greate insurreccion vpon those that feare ſ LORDE. They shal be like mad men, they shall spare no man:
they shall spoyle and waist such as feare the LORDE, their goodes shall they take from them, and shute them out of their houses.
Then shall it be knowne who are my chosen,
& they shalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre.
Heare O ye my beloued, saieth the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at honde, but I wil delyuer you from the same. Be not ye afraied, dispayre not, for God is youre captayne.

Who so kepeth my cōmaundementes and preceptes (sayeth the LORDE God) let not youre synnes weye you downe, & let not youre vnrighteousnesses be lift vp. Wo be vnto thē that are subdued vnto their synnes, and tangled in their wickednesses: like as a felde is hedged in with buszshes, and the path therof couered with thornes, ſ no man maye trauayle thorow: and so is he taken, and cast in the fyre, and brent.

The first Chapter.

TOBIAS was of the trybe and cite of Nephtali, which lyeth in the hye countrees of Galile about Naason the waye towardes the west, hauynge the cite of Sephet vpon the left syde.

Though he was taken presonner in the dayes of <sup>a</sup>Salmanasar kynge of the Assirians, neuertheles beyng in captiuyte, he forsoke not <sup>y</sup> waye of trueth: In so moch that what so euer he might gett, he parted it dailie with his felowpresoners & brethren, that were of his kynred. And though he were yonger the all in the trybe of Nephtali, yet dyd not he behaue himself childlesly in his workes. And whan all the other wente to the goldē calues, which <sup>a</sup>teroboam the kynge of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their companies, and gat him to Ierusalem vnto the temple of the LORDE, and there worshipped ¶ LORDE God of Israel, <sup>a</sup>faithfully offeringe all his first frutes and tithes, so that in the thirde yeare he ministred all the tithes vnto the straungers and conuertes. These and soch like thinges dyd he acordinge to the lawe of God, whan he was yet but yonge.

B But whan he was a man, he toke out of his owne trybe<sup>c</sup> a wyfe called Anna, and of her he begat a sonne, whom he called after his owne name, and taught him from his youth vp, to feare God, and to refraine from all synne.

Now whan he with his wife, his sonne and with all his kynred was come in captiuitie vnto Ninie, what tyme as they all ate of the meates of the Héithē, he <sup>d</sup>kept his soule, and was neuer defyled in their meates. And for so much as he was myndefull of the LORDE, in all his hert, God gaue him fauoure<sup>e</sup> in the presence of Salmanasar the kynge, which gaue him power to go where he wolde, and so had he liberte to do what him list.

C So wente Tobias vnto all them that were in preson,<sup>f</sup> and comforted them, and gaue them wholsome exortacions. And whan he came to Rages a cite of the Medes, hauyng* ten talctes of syluer (of ¶ thinges wherwith the kynge had honoured him) and sawe amonge a greate company of people of his kinred, one Gabelus (which was of his owne trybe) beyng in necessite, he gaue him the sayde weight of syluer vnder an handwrittinge.

After a longe season whan Salmanasar the kynge was deed, and Sennacherib his sonne reigned in his steade, which hated the children of Israel, Tobias wente daylie thorow out all his kynred, and comforted them, and gaue of his goodes to euery one of thē, as much as he might: he fed the hongrie, clothed the naked, and buried the deed and slaine, and that diligently.

D And whan Sennacherib the kynge came agayne and fled out of Iewry,<sup>g</sup> (what tyme as God punyshed him for his blasphemy) ¶ in his wrath slew many of the children of Israel, Tobias buried their bodies.<sup>h</sup> But whan it was tolde the kynge, he commaunded to slaye him, and toke awaye all his goodes. Neuertheles Tobias with his sonne ¶ with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias againe to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

The ij. Chapter.

AFTER these thinges vpon a solempne A daye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, ¶ sayde vnto his sonne: Go ¶ waye ¶ bryng hither some of oure trybe, soch as feare God, that they maye make niery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the strete. And immediatly he leape from his table, left the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarse, toke him ¶ bare him preuely in to his house, ¶ whan the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And whā he had hyd the coarse, he ate his meate with mournyng and feare, remembryng ¶ wordes, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: 'youre hye feastes shalbe turned to sorowe and heuyenes.

But whan ¶ Sonne was downe, he wente his waye ¶ buried him. Then all his neighbours reprovied him, sayenge: It is not lōge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the<sup>i</sup> because of this matter, and hast scarce escaped the daunger of death, and burist thou the deed againe? Neuertheles Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, ¶ buried them at mydnight.

C It happened vpō a daye, that he had buried ¶ deed, ¶ was weery, came home, ¶ layed him downe by the wall ¶ slepte. And while he was a slepe, there fell downe vpō his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so ¶ he was blynde. 'This tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might haue an example of his paciēce, like as of holy Iob. For in so much as he euer feared God from his youth vp, ¶ kepte his commaundementes, he was not heuy against God, that the plague of blyndnes chaūsed vnto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of God, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

D For like as blessed Iob was had in derision of kynges, euen so was he laughed to scorne of his elders & kynsfolkes, which sayde vnto him: "where is thy hope, for <sup>g</sup> which thou hast done allmes and buried the deed? But Tobias rebuked the, & spake: Saye not so, for we are the children of holy men,<sup>g</sup> & loke for the life, which God shal geue vnto them, that neuer turne their beleue from him. Anna his wife wente daylie to the weeiynge worke, & loke what lyuinge she coude get with the labour of hir handes, she brought it. And it happened <sup>h</sup> she toke a kyd and brought it home.

And whan hir huszband herd it crie, he sayde: loke <sup>h</sup> it be not stolen,<sup>d</sup> restore it agayne to the owners: for it is not lauffull for vs, to eate or to touch eny thinge of theft. Then was his wife angrie, and sayde: 'Now is thy hope become vayne openly, & thy allmes dedes are manifest. With these & such like wordes dyd she cast him in the tethe.

The iij. Chapter.

D THEN Tobias toke it heuely, & with teares beganne to make his prayer, sayge: O LORDE, thou art righteous, & all thy iudgmētes are true, yee all <sup>h</sup> wayes are mercy, faithfulness & iudgmēt.<sup>f</sup> And now O LORDE be myndefull of me, & take no vengeance of my synnes, nether remembre my myszdedes ner <sup>h</sup> myszdedes of my elders. For we haue not bene obediēt vnto <sup>h</sup> cōmaundemētes, therefore are we spoyled, brought in to captiuyte, in to death, in to derision & shame vnto all nacions, amōge whō thou hast scatred vs. And now O LORDE, <sup>h</sup> iudg-mentes are greate, for we haue not done acordege to <sup>h</sup> cōmaundemētes, nether haue we walked innocētly before <sup>h</sup>. And now O LORDE, deale with me accordinge to thy wil, & cōmaunde my sprete to be receaued in peace, for more expediēt were it for me to dye, the to lyue.

B At the same tyme it happened, that Sara the daughter of Raguel at Rages a cite of <sup>h</sup> Medes was laundred of one of hir fathers handmaydes, namely, that she shulde haue had seuen huszbandes, which as soone as they were gone in vnto hir, were slayne of the deuell called Asmodeus. Therefore whan she reproued the mayden for hir faute, she answerde her, sayenge: God let vs neuer se sonne ner daughter of the more vpon earth, thou kyller of thy huszbandes. Wilt thou slay me also, as thou hast slayne seuen men? At this voyce wēte Sara in to an hye chamber of hir house, and three dayes and thre nightes she nether ate ner drake, but cōtynued in prayer, and besought God with teares, that he wolde delyuer her from this rebuke.

C Vpon the thirde daye it chaunced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she prayesd the LORDE, sayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of oure fathers, which whan thou art wroth, shewest mercy, and in the tyme of trouble thou forgeuest the synnes of them, that call vpon the. Vnto the O LORDE turne I my face, vnto the lift I vp myne eyes. I beseke <sup>h</sup> O LORDE, lowse me out of the bondes of this rebuke, or els take me vtterly awaye frō of <sup>h</sup> earth. Thou knowest LORDE, that I neuer had desyre vnto man, and that I haue kepte my soule cleane from all vnclenly lust. I haue not kepte company with those that passe their tyme in sporte, nether haue I made my self partaker with them that walke in lighte behaouore. Neuertheles an huszbande haue I consented to take, not for my pleasure, but in thy feare.

D Now peradventure either I haue bene vnworthy of them, or els were they vnmete for me, for thou happily hast kepte me to another huszband. For why? <sup>h</sup> thy counsell is not in <sup>h</sup> power of man. But who so euer loueth the and serueth the a right, is sure, that yf his life be tempted and proued, it stādeth in the tryenge: and yf he endure in pacience, he shal haue a rewarde and be hylie crowned: and yf he be in trouble, that God (no doute) shal delyuer him: and yf his life be in chastenynge, that he shall haue leue to come vnto thy mercy.

For thou hast no pleasure in oure dampnacion: & why? after a storme thou makest <sup>h</sup> wether fayre and still: after wepinge and heuynes thou geuest greate ioye. Thy name O God of Israel, be prayesd for euer. At the same tyme were both their prayers herde in

The iij. Chapter.

A SO whā Tobias thought his prayer to be herde, that he might dye, he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & sayde vnto him: My sonne, heare the wordes of my mouth, and laye thē in thine hert as a foundation. When God taketh away my soule, burie thou my body, & holde thy mother in honoure all the dayes of hir life. For thou oughtest to remembre, what and how greate pears she suffred for ſ in hir wōbe. And whā she also hath fulfilled the tyme of hir life, bury her besyde me. Haue God in thy thought all the dayes of thy life, & bewarre, lest at any tyme thou cōsent vnto <sup>a</sup>synne, and lest thou let slippe the commaundemētes of the LORDE oure God.

B Gene allmes of thy goodes, and turne neuer thy face from the poore: and so shal it come to passe, that the face of the LORDE shal not be turned away from the. Be mercifull after ſ power. Yf thou hast moche, geue plēteously: yf thou hast litle, do thy diligence, gladly to geue of that litle. For so gatherest thou thy self a good rewarde in the daye of necessite. For allmes delyuereth <sup>a</sup>frō death, & suffreth not the soule to come in darknes. A greate comforte is allmes before the hye God, vnto all them that do it.

My sonne, kepe the well from all whor-dome, and (besyde thy wife) se that no faute be knowne of the. Let neuer pryde haue rule in thy mynde ner in thy worde, for in pryde beganne all destruccion.

C Who so cuer worketh any thinge for the, immediatly geue him his <sup>a</sup>hyre, and loke that thy hyred seruaunte wagies remayne not by the ouer night. Loke that thou neuer do vnto another man, the thinge that thou woldest not another mā shulde do vnto the. Eate thy bred with the <sup>a</sup>hongrie and poore, and couer the naked with thy clothes. Set thy bred and wyne vpon the buryall of the righteous, and do not thou eate and drynke therof with the synners. Axe euer counsell at ſ wyse.

Be allwaye thankfull vnto God, and beseke him, that he will ordre thy wayes, & that what so euer thou deuysest or takest in hande, it maye remayne in him. I certifie the also my sonne, that (whan thou wast yet but a bab) <sup>a</sup>I delyuered ten talentes of syluer vnto Gabelus, at Rages a cite of the Medes, & his handwrytinge hane I by me. And therefore seke some meanes, how thou mayest come by him, & receaue of him ſ sayde weight of syluer, and geue him his handwrytinge agayne.

My sonne, be not afrayed: trueth it is, we lede here a poore life: <sup>a</sup>but greate good shall we haue, yf we feare God, and departe from all synne, and do well.

The v. Chapter.

THEN answered Tobias his father, & A sayde: father, all that thou hast commaunded me, wil I do, and that diligently. But how I shal requyre this money, I can not tell. Nether doth he knowe me, ner I him. What token shal I geue him? And as for the waye thither, I neuer knew it. Then his father answered him, and sayde: I haue his handwrytinge by me, which whan thou shewest him, immediatly he shall paye the. But go thy waye now, & get the some faithfull man to go with ſ for an hyre, that thou mayest receaue ſ money, whyle I am yet luyng.

Then wente Tobias out, & vpon the strete B he founde a fayre yonge man stondinge, gyrded vp, and as it were one ready to take his iourney. And he knew not that it was an angell of God, but saluted him, and sayde: From whence art thou, thou good yonge man? He answered: Of the children of Israel.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: knowest thou the waye, that ledeth vnto the countre of ſ Medes? He answered: I knowe it well, and all those stretes haue I gone oft tymes, and haue lodged with oure brother Gabelus, that dwellecth in Rages a cite of ſ Medes, which lyeth vpon the mount Egbatanis. Tobias sayde vnto him: I praye the, tary for me, tyll I haue tolde my father these thinges. Then wōte Tobias in, and tolde his father all. At ſ which his father marueled, & prayed, that he wolde come in vnto him.

Now whan the angell came in, he saluted C him, and sayde: ioye be with the for euermore. And olde Tobias saide: what ioye can I haue, that syt here in darcknes, & se not the light of heauen? The yonge man sayde vnto him: Be of good cheare, God shal helpe the shortly. And Tobias sayde vnto him: Canst thou brynge my sonne to Gabelus, vnto the cite of Rages in Media? And whan thou comest agayne, I shal paye the thy hyre. And the angell sayde vnto him: I shal lede thy sonne, and brynge him to the agayne. Then Tobias answered him: Tell me I praye the, of what house, or of what trybe art thou?

The angell Raphael sayde vnto him: Akest thou after the kynred of an hyrelinge, or sekest thou a gyde for thy sonne to go with him? But that I make the not carefull, I am Azarias the sonne of greate Hananias. And Tobias answered: Thou art come of a greate kynred, but I praye ŷ, be not displeased, that I desyred to knowe thy kynred. The angell sayde vnto him: Thy sonne shal I lede forth safely, and brynge him whole to the agayne.

D Then answered Tobias, and sayde: well, go on youre waie, and God be in youre iourney, and his angell beare you company. So whan they had prepared all thinges, ŷ they wolde take with them in their iourney, Tobias bad his father & his mother fare well, and they wente on their waye both together. Now whan they were gone, his mother beganne to wepe, and sayde: "The staff of oure age hast thou taken awaye, and sent him from vs.

Wolde God that money had neuer bene, for the which thou hast sent him awaye. Yf we had bene content with oure pouerte, this had bene greate riches vnto vs, that we sawe oure sonne here. Then sayde Tobias vnto her: wepe not, oure sonne shall come to vs agayne safe and sounde, & thine eyes shall se him. For I trust, that ŷ good angell of God shal beare him cōpany, and ordre well all the thinges that he doth: so that he shal come to vs agayne with ioye. At these wordes his mother left of frō wepyng, & helde hir tonge.

The vi. Chapter.

a SO Tobias wente on his waye, and a dogg folowed him, and ŷ first night they abode by the water of Tigris. Then wente he out to wash his fete, and beholde, there came forth an horrible fish to deuoure him. Of whom Tobias was afraied, and cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: LORDE, he commeth vpon me. And the angell sayde vnto him: Take him by the cheke blade, and drawe him to the. And he dyd so, and drew him vpō the londe, and the fish beganne to leape at his fete.

13 Thē sayde the angell vnto him: Take out the bowels of this fish, and as for the hert, the gall and the leuer, kepe them by the. For these thinges are necessary and good for medicyne. Tobias dyd so, and rosted the fish, and they toke him with them in their iourney: the residue they salted, as much as was sufficient for them, till they came to Rages. Then Tobias axed the angell, and sayde vnto him: I praye ŷ brother Azarias, tell me, wher to are these thinges good of the fish, that thou hast bydden me kepe?

The angell answered him and sayde: Yf thou layest a pece of the hert vpon the coales, the smoke therof dryueth awaye all maner of euell spretes, whether it be from man or from woman, so that from thence forth ŷ same shal come nomore vnto them. The gall is good to anynte or to strake ŷ eyes withall, where as there is eny blemish in them, so shal they be whole.

C And Tobias sayde vnto him: where wilt thou that we remayne? "The angell answered and saide: Here is a nye kinsman of thine, one Raguel by name, which hath a daughter called Sara, & hath nether sonne ner daughter but her. All his good belōgeth vnto the, and thou must mary his daughter: and therefore desyre her at her father, and he shal geue her the to wife. Then answered Tobias & sayde: As I vnderstonde, she hath bene married vnto seuen huszbandes, and they all are deed: and I haue herde saye, that the deuell slew them. I am afraied therefore, lest soch thinges happen vnto me also: which yf it came to passe (seinge I am the onely sonne of my father and my mother) I shulde brynge thē in their age with sorow to their graues.

D Then sayde ŷ angell Raphael vnto him: Heare me, and I will tell the, what they be of whom the deuell hath power. Namely, they that receaue mariage of soch a fashiō, that they shut God out from thē and from their hert, and "geue them selues to their owne lust, euen as it were an horse and Moole, which haue no vnderstandinge: vpon soch hath ⁊ deuell power. But whan thou takest her, and art come in to the chamber, witholde thy self from her thre dayes, and geue thy diligence vnto nothinge but <sup>a</sup>vnto prayer with her.

And in the first night rost the leuer of the fish, and the deuell shalbe dryuē awaye. The secōde night shalt thou be receaued in to the company of the holy patriarkes. The thirde night shalt thou opteyne the blessinge of God, so that whole children shalbe borne of you. After the thirde night take the mayden in the feare of God, and more for the desyre of children, then for eny fleshly lust: that in the seide of Abraham thou mayest optayne the blessinge in children.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN wente they in to Raguel, which receaued them ioyfully. And whan Raguel loked vpon Tobias, he sayde vnto Anna his wife: How like is this yonge man vnto my sisters sonne. And whan he had spoken this, he saide: whence be ye good brethren? They saide: Of the trybe of Nephtali, out of the captiuyte of Ninieue. Then sayde Raguel vnto them: knowe ye my brother Tobias? They saide: yee, we knowe him well. And whan he had spoken moche good of him, the angell sayde vnto Raguel: Tobias of whom thou axest, is this yonge mā's father. Then Raguel bowed him self downe, and wepte, toke him aboute the neck and kyssed him, and sayde: Gods blessinge haue thou my sonne, for thou art the sonne of a good vertuous man. And Anna his wyfe and Sara his daughter wepte also.

Now whā they had talked together, Raguel bad kyll a wether, and to make a feast. And whā he prayed thē to sytt downe to dyner, Tobias sayde: I wil nether eate ner drinke here this daye, excepte thou first graunte me my peticion, ⁊ promyse me to geue me thy daughter Sara. Whan Raguel herde this, he was astonnyed, for he knew, what had happened vnto the other seuen men, that wēt in vnto her: and he beganne to feare that it shulde chaunce vnto him also in like maner.

And whyle he stode so in doute, and gaue

the yonge man no answer, the angell sayde vnto him: Feare not to geue him thy daughter, for vnto this man that feareth God, belōgeth thy daughter to wife, therefore might none other haue her.

The sayde Raguel: I doute not, but God hath accepted my prayers and teares in his sight: and I trust he caused you to come vnto me for the same intent, that this daughter of myne might be married in hir owne kynred, accordinge to the lawe of Moses.<sup>d</sup> And now dowte thou not, but I wil geue her vnto the: So he toke the righthande of his daughter, and gaue her in to the right hāde of Tobias, and sayde: The God of Abrahā, the God of Isaac and the God of Iacob be with you, ioynē you together, and fulfill his blessinge in you. And they toke a letter and made a wrytinge of the mariage. And then made they mery, and praysed God. And Raguel called Anna his wife vnto him, and bad her prepare another chamber, and thither he brought Sara his daughter, and she wepte. Then sayde he vnto her: Be of good cheare my daughter, the LORDE of heauen geue the ioye, for the heynessee that thou hast suffred.

The viij. Chapter.

NOW after ⁊ they had supped, they brought the yōge man in to her. Thē thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a peece of the leuer of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him awaye, and bounde him in the wyldernes of the hyer Egipte. Thē spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Vp Sara, let vs make oure prayer vnto God to daye, to morow, and ouermorow: for these thre nightes wil we reconeyle oure selues with God: and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shall ioynē together in ⁊ deuteye of mariage. For we are the children of holy men, and we maye not come together as the Heithen, ⁊ knowe not God.

Then stode they vp both together, and besought God earnestly, ⁊ he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of oure fathers, praysed be thou of heauē ⁊ earth of the see, welles, ⁊ floudes, ⁊ of all the creatures that be therein. Thou maydest Adam<sup>e</sup> of the mould of the earth, ⁊ ganest

And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of voluptuousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of children, in whom thy name be blessed for euer. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a good age.

C And aboute the cocke crowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruauntes, and they wete with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peraduētūre, as it dyd vnto the other seuen men, that wente in vnto her. Now whā they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe, and sayde vnto her: sende one of thy maydcēs, to loke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him afore it be light daye.

So she sent a mayden to se, which whan she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepyng together. And so she came agayne, and brought good tydings. D Then Raguel and Anna his wife prayed y LORDE, and sayde: Prayed be thou o LORDE God of Israel, For it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealte mercifully with vs, and put awaye from vs the enemye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloued. O LORDE, cause the to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offere the the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, y thou onely art God in all the earth.

E And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruauntes, to fyll the graue, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, and to make ready all thinges that were necessary for meate, to such as wente by y waye. He caused two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, and meates to be prepared for all his neighbours and frendes.

And Raguel charged Tobias, to remayne with him two wekes. As for all the good y he had, he gaue Tobias y one half of it, and made his wrytinge, that the half which remayned, shulde fall vnto Tobias after their death.

The iiij. Chapter.

A THEN Tobias called vnto him the angell, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vnto him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herke vnto my wordes: Yf I shulde geue myself to be y seruaunt, I shal not deserue y prouydence. Neuertheles I beseeke the, that thou wylt take the beastes and the seruauntes, and go vnto Gabelus in Rages the cite of the Meedes, and delyuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my mariage. For thou knowest thyself, that my father telleth y dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath required me, so that I can not saye him nay.

Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels seruauntes, and two Camels, and wente vnto Rages the cite of the Medes: and whan he had founde Gabelus, he gaue him his handwrytinge, and receaued all y money. He tolde him also of Tobias y sonne of Toby, how all thiges had happened, and caused him to come with him to y mariage. Now whan he came in to the house of Raguel, he foude Tobias syttinge at y table: and he leape vp, and they kyssed one another, and Gabelus wepte, and prayed God, and sayde: the blessinge of the God of Israel haue thou, for thou art the sonne of a right verteous and iust man, and of one y feareth God, and geueth greates allmes. And blessinge haue y wife, and youre elders, that ye maye se youre children, and youre childers childre, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciō, and that youre sede maye be blessed of y God of Israel, which reigneth worlde without ende. And whan they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde they the feast of the mariage.

The v. Chapter.

NOW whyle yōge Tobias made lōge taryenge by reason of y mariage, his father was full of care and heynes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonne taryeth so longe? Or why shulde he be kepte so longe there? Peraduētūre Gabelus is deed, and no man wyl geue him the money. Thus begāne he to be very soroufull, he and Anna his wife with him, and beganne to wepe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye appoynted. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Oh what ayled vs to sende the awaye into a strange cōuntry, thou light of oure eyes, thou staff of oure age, thou comforte of oure life, "thou hope of oure generation? Seinge all þy thinges that we haue are onely in the, we shulde not haue sent the awaye from vs.

B Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: holde thy tonge, and be not discomforted, oure sonne is whole and sounde: the man þy we sent him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuertheles she might in no wyse be cōforted: but daylie wente out, looked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come againe: that (yf it were possible) she might se him cōmyuge afaire of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne i lawe: O tary here, and I shall sende a messaūger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him þy thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother counte euery daye, and that their hertes are sory.

C So whan Raguel prayed Tobias with many wordes, ⁊ he wolde in no wyse heare him, he delyuered Sara vnto him, ⁊ the half parte of all his good: in seruantes and handmaydēs, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moch money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in youre iourney, and brynge you forth safe ⁊ sounde, that ye maye fynde all thinges in good case with youre elders, and that myne eyes maye se youre children, afore I dye.

So the elders embraced their daughter, kyssed her, and let her go, exortinge her to honoure hir father and mother in lawe, to loue hir huszbande, to rule well hir huszsholde, to kepe hir house in good ordre, and to shew hir self faultlesse.

The xi. Chapter.

A NOW as they were goinge homewarde againe, vpon þy xj. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the half waye towarde Ninieue. And the angell sayde: Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therefore yf it please the, we two wyl go before, and let the husholde with thy wife and þy catell come soft ⁊ fairly after vs. And whan Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be necessary. So Tobias toke of the gall, and they wente their waye. But Anna the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon þy toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

B And whyle she was waytinge there for his cōmynge, she looked afaire of, and anone she perceaued hir sonne comminge, and ranne and tolde hir huszbande, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne commeth: And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou comest in to the house, immediatly worshiþe the LORDE thy God, and geue thanks vnto him: then go to thy father, and kyss him, ⁊ strake his eyēs ouer with the gall of þy fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyse at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene with them in their iourney, rāne before, and came as a messaūger, and wagged with his tayle for gladnesse.

So þy blynde father arose, and beganne to renne, and stombled with his fete, and gaue a seruauant his hande, ranne to mete his sonne, receaued him, and kyssed him, he and his wife, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whan they had worshipped ⁊ thanked God, they satt downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and taried half an houre, and then beganne the blemish to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte szkynne of an egg: which Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

D Then they prayed God, he and his wife, and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel. I geue the prayse and thanks, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I se my sonne Tobias. After seuen dayes came Sara his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all þy husholde and catell, with camels and moch money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the benefites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Nabath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, ⁊ reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so for þy space of seuen dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerichone.

The xii. Chapter.

A THE Tobias called his sonne vnto him ⁊ sayde: What maye we geue this holy man, that wente with the? Tobias answered his father and sayde: Father, what rewarde shal we geue him? Or what thinge can deserue his benefites? He hath bene my gyde, and brought me safe agayne: he receaued the money from Gabelus, he caused me to get my wife, he droue the euell sprete from her, he hath bene occasiō of gladnesse to hir father and mother: he delyuered me, that I was not deuoured of the fish, he hath made the to se the light of heauen, yee we all haue receaued greate good of him. How shulde we worthely deserue these thinges vnto him? But I praye the my father, that thou wilt desyre him, yf happlie he wil voutsafe, to take with him the half of all that we haue brought.

B So the father and the sonne called him,
 toke him asyde, and beganne to praye him, that he wolde be content to take in good worth, the half parte of all that they had brought. Then sayde he secretly vnto them:
 Prayse y God of heauen, and geue thanks vnto him before all men lyyunge, for he hath shewed his mercy * vnto vs. It is good to hyde the Kynges secrete, but to shew and to prayse y workes of God, it is an honorable thinge. Prayer is good with fasting, and to geue almes is better, then to hoorde vp treasures of golde. <sup>a</sup> For almes delyuereth from death, clenseth synne, and causeth to fynde euerlastinge life, But they that do synne and vnrighteousnes, are y enemies of their owne soules.

C Wherefore I tell you the trueth, and wyll hyde nothinge from you. <sup>b</sup> Whan thou praydest with teares, and burydest the deed, and ledest thy dyner, and hyddest the deed in thy house vpon the daye tyme, that thou mightest burye them in the night, I offred thy prayer before the LORDE. And because thou wast accepte and beloued of God, it was necessary, that tentacion shulde trye the. <sup>c</sup> And now hath the LORDE sent me to heale the,
 and to delyuer Sara y sonnes wife from the euell sprete. For I am Raphael an angell, one of the seuen that stonde before God.

D Whā they herde this, they were sore afrayed, and trembled, and fell downe vpon their faces vnto the grounde. Then sayde the angell: Peace be with you, feare not. Where as I haue bene with you, it is the will of God, geue prayse and thanks vnto him.

<sup>d</sup> You thought that I dyd eate and drinke with you, but I vse meate that is invisible, and drynke that can not be sene of men.

Now therfore is y tyme that I must turne agayne, vnto him that sent me: but be ye thankfull vnto God, and tell out all his won-derous workes.

And whan he had spoken these wordes,
 he was taken awaye out of their sight, so y
 they sawe him nomore. Then fell they downe flat vpon their faces by the space of three houres, and praysed God: and whan they rose vp, they tolde all his wōderous workes.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THEN olde Tobias opened his mouth, and praysed the LORDE and sayde:
 Greate art thou o LORDE for euermore, and thy kyngdome worlde without ende: for <sup>e</sup> thou scourgest and healest, thou ledest vnto hell, and bryngeest out agayne, and there is none y maye escape thy hande. O geue thanks vnto y LORDE ye children of Israel, and prayse him in the sight of the Heithē.
 For amonge the Heithen which knowe him not hath he scatred you, to the intēt that ye shulde shew forth his marnelous workes: ⁊ cause them for to knowe, that there is none other God allmightie but he. He hath chastened vs for oure myszdedes, and for his owne mercy sake shal he saue vs.

Considere then, how he hath dealt with you, ⁊ prayse him with feare and drede, and magnifie the euerlastinge kyngdom in youre workes.

I wil prayse him euen in the londe of my captiuyte, for he hath shewed his maiesty vnto a synfull people. Turne you therfore
 O ye synners, and do righteousness before God, and be ye sure, that he wyl shew his mercy vpon you. As for me ⁊ my soule, we wil reioyse in God. O prayse the LORDE all ye his chosen, holde the dayes of gladnesse, and be thankfull vnto him. <sup>f</sup> O Ierusalem thou cite of God, the LORDE hath punyshed the for the workes of thine owne handes. O
 prayse the LORDE in thy good thinges, ⁊

As for the, thou shalt reioyce in  $\hat{y}$  childre, for they all shalbe blessed, and gathered together vnto the LORDE. Blessed are they all  $\hat{y}$  loue  $\hat{y}$ , and be glad of thy peace. Prayse thou the LORDE o my soule, for the LORDE oure God hath deluyered his cite Ierusalem from all hir troubles. I wil counte my self happie, yf my sede remayne to se  $\hat{y}$  cleames of Ierusalē.

The gates of Ierusalem shalbe buylded with Saphyre and Smaragde, and all the cōpase of hir walles with precious stones. All hir stretes shalbe paved with whyte Marble stone, and in all hir stretes shal Alleluya be sunge. Prayed be  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, which hath exalted her,  $\hat{y}$  his kyngdome maye be vpon her for euermore, Amen. And so Tobias made an ende of his talkynge.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND after that Tobias had gottē his sight agayne,<sup>d</sup> he lyued two and xl. yeaues,  $\tau$  sawe his childers children. Now whan he was an hundreth and two yeaue olde, he dyed,  $\tau$  was buried honorably in Ninieue. For whan he was sixe and fiftie yeaues of age, he lost the sight of his eyes, and whā he was thre score yeaue olde, he gat his sight agayne. The residue of his life led he in ioye, and increased well in the feare of God, and departed in peace.

But in  $\hat{y}$  houre of his death he called vnto B him his sonne Tobias, and seuen yonge springaldes his sonnes children, and sayde vnto them: The destruccion of Ninieue is at hande, for the worlde of the LORDE can not fayle, and oure brethren that are seattered out of the londe of Israel, shal come thither agayne. And the whole londe of it that hath bene waist, shalbe fylled: and the house of God that was brent in it, shalbe buylded againe,  $\tau$  all soch as feare God shal returne thither: the Heithen also shal forsake their Idols,  $\tau$  come to Ierusalem, and dwell there, and all the kynges of the earth shalbe glad of her, and worshipe the LORDE God of Israel.

And therefore my children, heare youre C father: Serue the LORDE in faithfulness,<sup>e</sup> seke after his will, and do the thinge that pleaseth him. Commaunde youre children  $\hat{y}$  they do right, geue allmes, be myndefull of God, and euer to be thankfull vnto him in trueth and with all their power. Hearre me therefore my childre, and abyde not here: but in what daye so euer ye haue buried youre mother besyde me, gett you from hence. For I se, that the wickednes of it shal brynge it to destruccion and ende.

After  $\hat{y}$  death of his mother, Tobias D departed away from Ninieue, with his wife and children, and with his childers children,  $\tau$  came agayne to his father and mother in lawe, and founde them whole and in a good age, and toke the care of the. And he closed their eyes, and was heyre vnto all Raguels goodes, and sawe the fifth generacion and childers childre. And whan he was xcix. yeaue of age, he dyed in the feare of the LORDE, and his kynsfolkes buried him. And all his posterite continued in a good life, and holy conuersacion: so that they were loued  $\tau$  accepted both of God and men, and of all the people of the londe.

Chap. XVI.

Iudith syngeth prayse vnto the LORDE. The people come together vnto Ierusalē to geue thanks and prayse vnto the LORDE. How Iudith made hir ende.

The first Chapter.

ARPIAXAT the kynge of the Medes subdued many people vnto his domynion, & buylded a noble ströge cite, which he called Egbathanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, seuentie cubites hye, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundreth cubites hye. But vpon the foure corners euery syde was twentie fote brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kynge trusted in his mightie hoost, & in his glorious charetes.

So in y twelfth yeaere of his raigne it happened, that Nabuchodonosor y kynge of the Assirians (which raigned in the greate cite of Ninieue) fought agaynst Arphaxat, and ouercame hi in y greate felde called Ragau, besyde Ephrates and Tigris and Iadason in the felde of Erioth the kinge of the Elikes.

B Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodonosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: "and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celicia, in Damascus, in Libanus, and vnto the Heithen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greate felde of Esz-drelö, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Iordane vnto Ierusalem and the whole londe of lesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all these dyd Nabuchodonosor the kynge of y Assirians sende messaungers. But they all with one consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne emptie, and put the awaye without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge toke indignaciö at all those londes, and sware by his trone & by his kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countreys.

The ij. Chapter.

IN the xij. yeaere of kynge Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xxij. daye of y first moneth, it was deuysed in the courte of Nabuchodonosor y kynge of the Assiriäs, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all y elders, all his captaynes and men of warre, and shewed them his secrete counsell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to brynge the whole earth vnder his domynion. Now when they were all content with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kinge called Holofernes the chefe captayne of his warres and saide vnto him: Go thy waye forth agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despyed my commaundement. "Thou shalt spare no realme, all stronge cities shalt thou brynge in subieccion vnto me.

Then Holofernes called together all the captaynes & rulers of all the power in Assiria, and mustred the souldyers vnto the hoost (like as the kynge commaunded him) namely, an hundreth and twetye thousande fightinge men vpon fote, and twolue thousande archers vpon horsebacke. All his ordinaunce sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well prouyded for with oxen, and small catell, and y without nombre. He caused come to be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Moch golde and syluer also toke he out of the kynges house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, horsmen, and archers: of whom there were so many, that they couered the grounde of the lande, like the gres-hoppers.

And when he was gone past the borders of the Assirians, he came towarde the greate mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celicia: and so he wente vp in to all their castels, and wanne euery ströge holde. As for y welthy cite of Melothus, he brake it downe, & spoyled all the childrē of Tharsis and the Ismaelites, which laye towarde the wyldernes and vpon the south syde of y londe of Chelon. He went ouer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hye cities that were there, from the broke of Mambre tyll a man come to the see: and he toke the borders in from Celicia vnto the coastes of Iaphet towarde the south. He caried awaye all the Madianites, and spoyled all their goodes: & who so euer withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente downe in to the felde of Damascus in the tyme of haruest, and brent vp all the corne and all the trees, and caused the vynes to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell vpon all them that dwelt in y earth.

The iij. Chapter.

SO the kynges & prynces of all cities & londes sent their Embassitours: namely,

° 1 Mac. 1. a.

° Eze. 9. b.

they of Syria and Mesopotamia, Syria Sobal ⁊ Lybia ⁊ Celicia, which came to Holofernes, ⁊ sayde: Let thy wrath cease toward us:
 It is better for vs to serue the greate kynge Nabuchodonosor with oure lyues, and to be subiecte vnto the, then that we shulde dye and be slayne, and receaue greater hurte. All oure cities and possessions, all mountaynes and hilles, all felde, greate and small catell, shepe, goates, horses, and camels, all oure goodes and houtholdes, be in thy power, vnder thy subieccion be it altogether. We oure selues also and oure children wyll be thyne owne, come vnto vs a peceable lorde, and vse oure seruyce at thy pleasure.

33 Then came Holofernes downe from the mountaynes with horsemē ⁊ greate power, and conquered all stronge fensed cities, and all that dwelt in the londe. And out of all cities he toke stronge men, ⁊ such as were mete for ſ warre, to helpe him. There came soch a feare also vpon those countrees, that the indwellers of all the cities, the prynces and rulers ⁊ the people together, wete forth to mete him as he came, ⁊ receaued him honorably with garlandes ⁊ torches, with daunses, tabrettes and pipes.

C Neuertheles though they dyd this, yet might they not swage his rigorous stomak:
 but he destroyed their cities, ⁊ hewed downe their woddess. For Nabuchodonosor the kynge had commaunded him, that he shulde rote out all the goddes of the londe: to ſ intent that he onely might be called and taken for God, afrayed of him. There came soch tremblinge also and feare vpon them, that they sorowed he shulde do vnto the cite of Ierusalem and the temple of the LORDE, as he had done to other cities ⁊ their temples. So they sent in to al Samaria rōnde aboute vnto

Iericho, toke in and occupied all the toppes of the mountaynes, made fast the townes with walles, and prepared corne for them agaynst

Eliachim also ſ prest wrote vnto all the

 And the children of Israel dyd, as Eliachim the prest of the LORDE had commaunded them. 3 And all the people, cried earnestly, and humbled their soules with fastinges and prayers, they and their wyues. The prestes put on hayrie clothes, and layed the yonge babes before the temple of the LORDE, and couered the aluter of the LORDE with an enemies of Israel be, yf ye contynue in this worke, that ye haue begonne. So vpon this exortacion they contynued in prayer before the LORDE: In so moch that they which offred brent sacrifices vnto the LORDE, offred of the warres of the Assyriās, ſ the childrē of Israel prepared them selues to make resistance, & how they had stopped the wayes betwixe the mountaynes. Then was he exceeding wroth. & called all the prynces of Moab, & the captaynes of Ammon, & sayde vnto them: Tell me, what people is this, & kepeth in the mountaynes? Or what maner of cities are they? What is their power? Or what maner of hoost haue they? Who is their captayne? And why do they despyse vs (more then all those that dwell in the east) and come not forth to mete vs, & they might receaue vs with peace?

Then Achior the captayne of all the Ammonites answered, and sayde: Syr, yf it please the to heare me, I wil tell the truth before the concernynge this people that dwell in the mountaynes, and there shal no lye go out of my mouth.

B This people is of the generacion of the Caldees, they dwelt first in Mesopotamia, for they wolde not folowe & goddes of their fathers that were in the londe of the Caldees, & so forsoke they the customes of their fore fathers (which had many goddes) and worshipped one God, that made heauē and earth: which also commaunded them that they shulde go from thence, and dwell at Haran. Now whan there came a deth<sup>a</sup> in to & whole londe, they wente downe to Egipte, & there they dwelt foure hundred years, in & which they multiplied so greatly, that their hoost might not be nombred. And whan the kynge of Egipte oppressed them,<sup>c</sup> and subdued thē in buyldinge of his cities with makynge of claye & brick, they cried vnto God their LORDE, which punished the whole londe of Egipte with dyuerse plagues.

C Now whan the kynge of Egipte let thē go their waye,<sup>d</sup> & the plague ceased, & then folowed after thē, to take thē, & to brynge thē agayne in to his seruyce, whyle they were flyenge awaye, the God of heauē opened & see, so & the waters stode fast vpon both the sydes as a wall, & these wente thorow the botome of the see drye shod, In the which place whā an innumerable people of the Egipcians folowed vpon them, they were so ouerwhelmed with the waters, that there remayned not one, to tell thē that came after, how it happened.

So whan this people was passed thorow the reed see, they came in to the wyldernes of the mount Synai, where neuer man might dwell afore, & where the sonne of mā had neuer rested. <sup>e</sup>There were & bytter waters made swete for thē, that they might drynke. & xl. yeaues had they meate from heauē. Where so euer they wente (without bowe & arrowe, without bukler or swerde) their God fought for thē, & caused thē to haue the victory. Yee no man was able to hurte this people, excepte it were so, & they departed vnfaithfully from & worshippinge of the LORDE their God. But as oft as they worshipped<sup>f</sup> any other besyde their God, he gaue them ouer to be spoyled, to be slayne, & to be put to confucion. Neuertheles as oft as they were sory for departyng from the worships of their God, the same God of heauen gaue them power & strēth to withstōde their enemies.

Morouer they slew the kynge of the Canaanites, Iebusites, Pherezites, Ethites, Euites & Amorites,<sup>g</sup> & all & mightie in Hesebon, & toke their lōdes & cities in possession: and so longe as they synned not in & sight of their God, it wete well with them, for their God hateth vnrighteousnesse. For in tymes past whan they wente out of & waye,<sup>h</sup> which God had geuen them, & they shulde walke in it, they were destroyed in dyuerse battayles of many nacions, & many of them were caried awaye presoners into a straūge couēte. But now lately they haue turned thē selues agayne vnto the LORDE their God, & are come together agayne<sup>i</sup> out of the countrees where they were scatred abroad: and thus haue they cōquered these mountaynes & dwell therein: & as for Ierusalem where their Sanctuary is, they haue it agayne in possession.

And therefore my lorde, make diligēt inquisition, yf this people haue done wickednesse in the sight of their God, then let vs go vp agaynst them, for doutles their God shal deluyer them in to thy handes, & subdue them vnto & power. But yf this people haue not displeased their God, we shal not be able to withstāde them, for their God shal defende thē.<sup>j</sup> & so shall we be a shame to all & worlde.

Now whan Achior had spoken out these wordes, all the prynces of Holofernes were wroth, & thought to slaye him, & sayde one to another: what is he this, which darre saie, & þe childre of Israel are able to withstode Nabuchodonosor the kyng & his hoost? where as they are an vnwapened people, without strenght & vnderstodlinge of þe fettes of warre? That Achior therefore maye knowe, þe he hath disceaned vs, we wil go vp in to þe mountaynes: & when the mightie men of the are taken, he also shalbe stickte with the swerde, & all people maye knowe, that Nabuchodonosor is the God of the earth, and that there is none other without him.

The vi. Chapter.

A SO when they had left of speakinge, Holofernes toke sore indignacion, & sayde vnto Achior. For so much as thou hast prophecied vnto vs, sayenge: that the people of Israel<sup>a</sup> shalbe defended of their God, I will shew the, that there is no God but Nabuchodonosor. Yee when we slaye them all as one man, thou also shalt perish with them thorow the swerde of the Assirians, & all Israel shal be destroyed with the, & the shalt thou fele, that Nabuchodonosor is the LORDE of the whole earth. The shalt the swerde of my knyghthode go thorow thy sydes, & thou shalt fall downe stickte amonge the wounded of Israel, & shalt not come to thy self agayne, but be vtterly destroyed with the. But yf thou thynekst thy prophecy to be true, why dost thou then chaunge thy coloure? why art thou afayed? Thynekst thou that my wordes are not able to be perfourmed? But that thou mayest knowe, that thou shalt fele these thinges with the, beholde, from this houre forth wyll I sende the vnto yonder people, that when the punyshment of my swerde (which they haue worthely deserued) falleth vpon them, thou mayest be punyshed with them.

So Holofernes commaunded his seruantes to take Achior, & to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to deluyer him in to the handes of the children of Israel. Then Holofernes seruantes toke him, & wete thorow the playne felde. But when they drew nye vnto the mountaynes, the slynge casters came out agaynst them: Neuertheles they gat them awaye by the syde of the mountayne, & bounde Achior hand & fote to a tre, & so left him bounde with wythies, & turned agayne vnto their lorde.

Notwithstoddinge the children of Israel wente downe fro Bethulia, came vnto him, lowsed him, brought him to Bethulia, set him in the myddest of the people, and axed him what the matter was, that the Assiriās had left him bounde.

Osias the sonne of Micha of the trybe of Syneon, & Charmim (which is also called Gothoniell) were the pryncipall rulers at the same tyme. Now when Achior stode in the myddest of the Senatours, & before the all, he tolde them, what answere he gaue Holofernes, to the thinge that he axed him, and how Holofernes people wolde haue slayne him for so sayenge, & how Holofernes himself was wroth, & commaunded him for the same cause to be deluyered vnto þe Israelites: that when he ouercame the childre of Israel he might commaunde Achior also to be put to death with dyuerse tormentes, because he sayde: the God of heauen is their defender.

And whā Achior had playnly tolde out all these thinges, all the people fell downe vpon their faces, praysinge the LORDE, and poured out their prayers together vnto the LORDE, with a generall complaynte & wepyng, & sayde: O LORDE God of heauen & earth, beholde their pryde, & loke vpon oure lowlynes, & cōsidre how it standeth with thy sayntes, & make it to be knowne, þe thou forsakest not those, which holde them fast by the, & how þe thou bringest the lowe, þe presume of the selues, & make their boast in their owne strength. So when the wepyng and prayer of the people (which they had made the whole daye longe) was ended, they cōforted Achior, sayge: the God of oure fathers, whose power & strength thou hast prayed, shall so rewarde the, þe thou shalt rather se their destruccion. When þe LORDE oure God then shall geue his seruantes this liberte, God be with the also amonge vs: so þe if it please þe, thou with thyne mayest dwell with vs.

Now when Osias had ended the councell, he toke him in to his house, and made a greate supper, called all the elders to it, & so they refrezshed them selues after the fastinge. And afterwarde was all the people called together, which made their prayers all the night longe in the congregacion, and besought the God of Israel for helpe.

The vij. Chapter.

33 Now whan the childrē of Israel sawe so greate a multitude of the Assirians, they fell downe flat vpon <sup>ȝ</sup> ground, strowed aszshes vpon their heades, <sup>τ</sup> prayed with one acorde, <sup>ȝ</sup> the God of Israel wolde shew his mercy vpon his people. And so they toke their weapens, <sup>τ</sup> sat betwixte the mountaynes in <sup>ȝ</sup> narrow place, <sup>τ</sup> kepte the waye daye <sup>τ</sup> night. But whyle Holofernes was goinge aboute, he founde the water springe, which from the south syde was conueyed in to the cite by a condyte: this cōmaunded he to be directe another waye, <sup>τ</sup> to cut their condite in sunder. There were welles also not farre from the walles, which they vsed secretly, more for pleasure then for necessite.

C Then wente the Ammonites <sup>τ</sup> the Moabites vnto Holofernes, and sayde: The children of Israel trust nether in speare ner arowe, but haue taken in, and kepe the mountaynes and hilles. That thou mayest ouercome them therfore without <sup>ȝ</sup> strykyng of eny battayll, sett mē to kepe the welles, that they drawe no water out of them: so shalt thou destroye thē without swerde, or at the least they shall be so feble, that they must be fayne to geue ouer the cite, which they thinke not able to be wōne, for so moch as it lieth in the mōū-taynes. These wordes pleased Holofernes well and all his men of warre, and he <sup>b</sup>set an hundred men at euery well rounde aboute.

D And whan this watch had endured twentye dayes, the Cisternes and all that had water, dayed them that dwelt in the cite of Bethulia, so that in <sup>ȝ</sup> whole cite they had not drynke ynough for one daye, for the people had water geuen them daylie in a measure. Then came the men and women, yonge personnes and children all vnto Osias, and sayde all with one voyce: 'God be iudge betwixte vs and the, for thou hast dealt euell with vs: thou woldest not speake peaceably with the kynge of the Assirians, therfore hath God solde vs in their handes, and there is no man to helpe vs, where as we are brought downe before their eyes in thirste and greate destruction. Therfore gather now together all the people that be in the cite, that we maye all yelde oure selues wyllingly vnto <sup>ȝ</sup> people of Holofernes: for better it is <sup>ȝ</sup> we be captiue and prayse the LORDE with oure lyues, then to be slayne and perishe, and to be laughed to scorne <sup>τ</sup> shamed of euery man whan we se oure wyues and children dye before oure eyes. We take heauen <sup>τ</sup> earth this daye to recorde, and the God of oure fathers (which puny-sheth vs accordinge to the deseryng of oure synnes) and geue you warnynge, <sup>ȝ</sup> ye geue vp the cite now in to <sup>ȝ</sup> power of Holofernes hoost, that oure ende maye be shorte with the swerde, which els shal endure longe for wante of water and for thirst.

E Whan they had spokē out these wordes, there was a greate wepyng and howlyng in the whole congregacion, and that of euery man, and they cryed an whole houre longe vnto God with one voyce, sayenge: we haue synned with oure fathers, <sup>c</sup> we haue done anysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Thou <sup>ȝ</sup> art gracious, haue mercy vpon vs, punysh oure vnrighteousnes with thine owne scourge, and geue not those ouer that knowlege the, vnto a people which knoweth the not, lest they saye amonge the Heithen: 'where is their God?

And whan they were so weery with this crienge and wepyng, that they helde their tungen, Osias stode vp with watrye eyes, and sayde: 'O take good hertes vnto you (deare brethren) and be of good cheare, and let vs wayte yet these fyue dayes for mercy of the LORDE: peraduenture he shal cut awaye his indignacion, and geue glory vnto his name. But yf he helpe vs not whan these fyue dayes are past, we shall do as ye haue sayde.

The viij. Chapter.

AND it happened when these wordes came to the eares of Iudith a wyddow, which was the daughter of Merari, the sonne of Idox, the sonne of Ioseph, the sonne of Osias, the sonne of Elai, & sonne of Iammor, the sonne of Iedeon, the sonne of Raphoim, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Melchia, the sonne of Euam, & sonne of Nathania, the sonne of Salathiel, & sonne of Symeon, the sonne of Ruben. And hir huszbande was called Manasses, which dyed in the dayes of the barlye haruest. For whyle he was byndinge & sheenes together in the felde, the heate came vpon his heade, and he dyed at Bethulia his cite, and there was he buried beside his fathers. Now was Iudith his desolate wyddow three yeaeres & six monethes. And in the hyer partes of hir house she made herself a preuy chambre, where she dwelt, beyng closed in with hir maydēs. She wore a smock of hayre, and fasted all the dayes of hir life, excepte the Sabbathes, and new moones & the solempe dayes that the people of Israel keppe. She was a very fayre and beutyfull personne. Hyr huszbande also had lefte her greate riches, a plenteous housholde, greate vnmoueable possessions and many catell. This Iudith was a woman of a very good reporte with euery one, for she feared the LORDE greatly, and there was no body that speake an euell worde of her.

Whā this Iudith herde, how Osias had promised the people, "that after the fyfte daye he wolde geue vp & cite vnto the Assirians, she sent for the elders Chambri and Charmin: and whan they came to her, she sayde: what thinge is this, wherin Osias hath consented, & yf God helpe not within fyue dayes, he wil geue ouer the cite to the Assirians? What are ye, that ye tempte the LORDE? This deuycce optayneth no mercy of God, but prouoketh him vnto wrath and displeasure. Wyl ye set the mercy of & LORDE a tyme, & apoynte him a daye after youre wyl?"

Neuertheles for so much as the LORDE is patient, let vs rather amende oure selues, pouring out teares, and besekynge him of grace. <sup>a</sup>For God threateneth not as a mā, nether wyl he be prouoked vnto wrath as the children of men. And therefore let vs hertely fall downe before him, and serue him with a meke sprete, and with wepyng eyes saye vnto the LORDE, that he deale with vs according to his owne wyl and mercy: that like as oure hert is now vexed, & brought lowe thorow the pryde of them, it maye so be comforted thorow his grace: in so much as we folowe not the synnes of oure fathers, which forsoke their God, & worshipped other goddes: "for the which synne they perished with the swerde, were spoyled & brought to shame of all their enemies. As for vs, we knowe none other God but onely him, for whose cōforte let vs tarry with mekenesse. He shall requyre and make <sup>d</sup>inquisition for oure bloude, from the vexacions of oure enemies: he shal brynge downe all the Heithen, that ryse vp agaynst vs, and put them to dishonoure, euē the LORDE oure God.

Therefore deare brethren, seinge ye are the honorable and elders in the people of God, vnto whom all & people haue respecte, and vpon whom the life of the people stondesth, lift vp ther hertes with youre exortacion, & they maye call to remembrance, how oure fathers also in tymes past were tempted, & they might be proued, yf they worshipped their God a right. They ought to remēbre, how oure father Abraham beinge tempted, and tryed thorow many tribulacions, was founde a louer and frende of God. So was Isaac, so was Iacob, so was Moses, and all they that pleased God, beinge tryed thorow many troubles, were fōde stedfast in faith. Agayne, they that receaued not their tentacions with the feare of God, but put thē selues forth with vnpaciency and murmuringe agaynst God, perished of the destroyer, and were slayne of serpentes. And therefore shulde not we vndertake to be auenged, for the thinge that is done vnto vs: but to considre, that all these punyshmentes are farre lesse then oure synnes & myszdedes: Beleuyng also, that this correccion commeth vnto vs (as to the seruantes of God) for amendment, and not for oure destruction.

Then sayde Osias & the elders vnto Iudith: All that thou speakest, is true, and no mā can reprove thy wordes. Praise thou for vs now therfore vnto God, for thou art an holy woma, and fearest God. And Iudith sayde vnto them: <sup>a</sup> Seynge ye knowe, that my wordes are of God, then proue my counsell and deuice, yf it be of God: and beseke God, that he wyl brynge my counsell to a good ende.

Thus haue I deuysed: <sup>b</sup> Ye shal stode this night before the porte, and I wyl go forth with Abra my mayde: Praye ye therefore vnto God, that he wyl graciously remembre his people of Israel within fyue daies, as ye haue sayde. As for the thinge that I go in hande withall, axe ye no questions of it, tyll I open it vnto you myself: do ye nothinge els, but praye vnto the LORDE youre God for me. Then Osias the pryncce of the people of Iuda sayde vnto her: Go thy waye in peace, the LORDE be with the, that we maye be auenged of oure enemies, And so they wente from her agayne.

The ix. Chapter.

NOW whā they were gone their way, Iudith wente in to hir oratory, put on an hayrie smock, strowed aszhes vpon hir heade, fell downe before the LORDE, and cryed vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE God of my fater <sup>c</sup> Symeon, which gauest him a swerde for a defence agaynst the enemies, that vsed violence and wilfulness, and that rauyshed <sup>d</sup> vyrgin and put her to dishonesty. Thou that gauest their wites in to a praye, and their daughters in to captiuyte, and all their praye for a spoyle vnto thy seruauantes, which bare a zeles vnto the, helpe me wyddow, O LORDE my God, I beseke <sup>e</sup> fy. For thou hast done all thinges from the begynnyng, and loke what thou hast taken in hande and deuysed, it came euer to passe. For all thy wayes are prepared, <sup>f</sup> thy iudgements are done in thy euerlastinge fore knowlege. O loke now vpon the armyes of the Assirians, like as it was thy pleasure sontyme to loke vpon the hoost of the <sup>g</sup> Egipcians, whan they beyngeweapened, persecuted thy seruauantes, <sup>h</sup> put their trust in their charettes, horsmen, and in the multitude of their men of warre. But thou lokedest vpon their hoost, castinge a thicke dareknes before them: and whan they came in to the depe, the waters ouerwhelmed them.

Euē so LORDE let it go with these, that trust in <sup>i</sup> power and multitude of their men of warre, in their charettes, <sup>k</sup> arrowes <sup>l</sup> speares, and knowe not, that thou onely art oure God, which destroyed warres from the begynnyng, and that thou art the LORDE. O lift vp thine arme now like as euer from <sup>m</sup> begynnyng, and in thy power brynge their power to naught, cause their might to fall in thy wrath. They make their boast, <sup>n</sup> they wyl vihalowe and defyle thy Sanctuary, and to waist the tabernacle of thy name, and to cast downe the horne of thine aluter with their swerde. Brynge to passe (O LORDE) <sup>o</sup> the pryde of the enemye maye be cut downe with his owne swerde: that he maie be taken with the snare of his eyes in me, and <sup>p</sup> thou mayest smyte him with the lippes of my loue. O geue me a stedfast mynde, that I maye despyse him and his strength, and that I maye destroye him.

This shal brynge thy name an euerlastinge remembrance, yf the hande of a woman <sup>q</sup> ouerthrowe him. The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beuty and fayrnesse (for all this deckinge of hir self was not done for eny voluptuousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right discrecion and vertue, therefore dyd the LORDE increase hir bewtye) so ŷ she was exceadinge anyable and wellaouered in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cakes, bred ⁊ chese, and wente hir waye.

13 Now whan she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Osias and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which whan they sawe her, they were astonnyed, ⁊ marueled greatly at her bewty, neuertheles they axed no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of oure fathers geue ŷ his grace, and with his power perfourme all the deuyce of thy hert: that Ierusalem maye reioyse ouer the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy ⁊ righteous. And all they ŷ were there, sayde with one voyce: so be it, so be it. Iudith made hir prayer vnto ŷ LORDE, ⁊ wente out at ŷ porte, she ⁊ hir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne, it happened that aboute the sprynge of the daye, the spies of ŷ Assirians met with her, and toke her, sayenge: whence comest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answered: I am a daughter of ŷ Hebrues, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shalbe geuē vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought scorne to yelde thē selues vnto you, that they might fynde mercy in youre sight. Therefore haue I deuyced by my self after this maner: I wyl go before the prynce Holofernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyl shew him, how he maye come by them, and wyne them, so that not one man of his hoost shall perish.

C And whan these men had herde hir wordes, ⁊ considered hir fayre face, they were astonnyed (for they wondred at hir excellent bewtye) ⁊ sayde vnto her: Thou hast saued thy life by fyndinge oute this denyce, ŷ thou woldest come downe to oure lorde: ⁊ be thou sure, that whā thou cōmest vnto him, he shal intreate the well, ⁊ thou shalt please him at ŷ hert. So they brought her in to Holofernes paulyon, and tolde him of her. Now whan she came in before him, immediatly he was ouercome ⁊ taken with hir bewtye. Then saide his seruantes: who wolde despise ŷ people of ŷ Iewes, ŷ haue so fayre wemē? Shulde we not by reason fight against thē for these? So whā Iudith sawe Holofernes syttinge in a canapye, ŷ was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, Smaragde and precious stones, she loked fast vpō him, ⁊ fell downe vpō the earth. And Holofernes seruantes toke hir vp agayne, at their lordes commaundement.

The xi. Chapter.

14 THEN sayde Holofernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wolde serue Nabuchodonosor the kynge. As for thy people, yf they had not despysed me, I shulde not haue lift vp a speare agaynst thē. But tell me now, what is the cause ŷ thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come vnto vs?

And Iudith sayde vnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after ŷ wordes of thy hād-mayden, the LORDE shall brynge thy matter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a lorde of the londe Iyueh, ⁊ as truly as his power Iyueh, which is in the to the punysshment of all men that go wronge, all men shall not onely be subdued vnto him thorow the, but all the beestes also of ŷ felde. For all people speake of thy prudēt actiuyte, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou onely art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commēded in all londes.

15 The thinge is manifest also, that Achior spake, and it is wel knowne, what thou commaūdest to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that oure God is so wroth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes vnto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl deliuer them ouer vnto the enemie. And for so much as the children of Israel knowe that they haue so displeased their God, they are sore afraied of the. They suffre greate honger also, ⁊ for wante of water, they are deed now in a maner. Morouer, they are appointed to slaye all their catell, that they maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ornaumes of their God (which he hath forbydde thē to touch) for corne, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these thinges, it is a playne case, y they must nedes be destroyed. Which whan I thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vnto y, to shew the these thinges. For I thy handmayden worships God euen here now besyde the, and thy honde mayden shal go forth, and I wil make my praier vnto God, and he shal tell me, whan he wyl rewarde thē their synne: then shal I come and shew the, and brynge the thorow the myddest of Ierusalem, so that thou shalt haue all y people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepherde: there shal not so much as one dogg barck agaynst the, for these thinges are shewed me by the prouydence of God: and for so much as God is displeased with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

These wordes pleased Holofernes and all his seruantes, which marueled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not soch a woman vpon earth, in bewtye and discrecion of wordes. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither before thy people, that thou mayest geue them in to oure handes. And for so much as thy promyse is good, yf thy God performe it vnto me, he shall be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the courte of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

The xij. Chapter.

THEN commaunded he her to go in, where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde haue hyr dwellynge there, and appoynted, what shulde be geuen her frō his table. Iudith answered him, and sayde: "As for the meate that thou hast commaunded to geue me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of soch as I haue brought with me. Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Yf these thinges that thou hast brought with the fayle, what shal we do vnto the? And Iudith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lorde, thy hande mayden shall not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the thinges that I haue deuysed.

So his seruantes brought her in to the tent, where as he had appoynted. And as she was goinge in, she desyred that she might haue leue to go forth by night and before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vnto the LORDE. Then commaunded Holofernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vnto hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wote forth in to the valley of Bethulia, and wasshed herself in the well water. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prospere hir waye, for the deluyneraunce of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the euenynge.

Vpon y fourth daye it happened, y Holofernes made a costly supper vnto his seruantes, and sayde vnto Vagao his chamberlayne: Go thy waye, and counceill this Hebruesse, that she maye be wyllynge to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to seorne, that she were come from him vnmeddled withall.

Then wente Vagao vnto Iudith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be afrayed, to come in to my lorde, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Iudith answered: Who am I, that I shulde saye my lorde naye? what so euer is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and loke what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as long as I lyue.

So she stode vp, and deckte herself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moued, so that he brent in desyre towarde her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and sytt downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fauoure before me. Then sayde Iudith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is meryer to daye, than euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and dranke before him, the thinges that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery with her, and dranke more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A NOW when it was late in the night, his seruantes made haist, euery mā to his lodginge. And Vagao shutt the chamber dores, and wente his waye, for they were all ouerladen with wyne.<sup>a</sup> So was Iudith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye vpon the bed all droncken, and of very dronkenness fell a slepe.

Then commaunded Iudith hir mayden, to stōde without before the dore, and to wayte. And Iudith stode before the bed, makynge her prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes secretly, and sayde. Strength me O LORDE God of Israel, and haue respecte vnto the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set vp thy cite of Ierusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye performe the thinge, which I haue deuyded thorow the beleue that I haue in the,

B And whan she had spoken this, she wente to the bedsteade, and lōwsed the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie lockes of his heade, and sayde: Strength me o LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the neck, and smote of his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body asyde. Immediately she gat her forth, and delyuered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth together after their custome, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Iudith cried asfarre of vnto ſ watchmen vpon the walles: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath shewed his power in Israel. And whan they herde hir voyce, they called the elders of the cite together. And they came all to mete her, litle & greate, yonge & olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered aboute hir euerychone: but she wente vp in to an hye place, and caused sylence to be proclaimed.

C Whan euery man now helde his tonge, Iudith sayde: O prayse the LORDE oure God, for he hath not despyed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him: and in me his honde mayden he hath performed his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hāde this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it them, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assiriās, and this is the canapy, wherin he laye in his dronkenness: where the LORDE oure God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE lyueth, his angell hath kepte me, goinge thither, remainynge there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylthynges of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: & ſ with greate victory, so that I am escaped, and ye delyuered. O geue thanks vnto him euerychone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.<sup>b</sup>

So they praysed the LORDE altogether, and gaue thākes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow he he hath brought oure enemies to naught.

And Ozias ſ chefe ruler of the people of Israel, sayde vnto her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hye God, aboue all wemen vpon earth.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded ſ a right to wounde and to smyte of the heade of the captayne of oure enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy prayse shall neuer come out of the mouth of mē, which shal all waye remembre ſ power of the LORDE: seinge thou hast not spared thine owne self, but put the in ieoperdy, consideringe the anguysh and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God oure LORDE. And all the people sayde: Amē, Amen.

Achior also was called, & he came. Then sayde Iudith vnto him: The God of Israel vnto whō thou gauest wytnes, that he wolde be auenged of his enemies, euen he hath this night thorow my hande smyttē of the head of all the vnfaithfull. And that thou mayest se that it so is, beholde, this is ſ heade of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despyed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened  $\hat{y}$  with destruccion, sayenge: "whan the people of Israel is takē, I shall cause the also to be stickte with the swerde. Whan Achior sawe Holofernes heade, he fell downe vpon his face to the grounde for very anguish & feare, so  $\hat{y}$  he swowned withall. But after that he was come agayne to himself, he fell downe before her & prayed her, sayēge: Blessed art thou of thy God in all the tabernacles of Iacob: for all the people that heare of thy name, shall prayse the God of Israel because of the.

The xiiij. Chapter.

IUDITH saide vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, Styck vp this heade vpon oure walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take euery man his weapen, and fall out violently: not as though ye wolde go besyde them, but to renne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyas in the tētes se this, they shall of necessity be cōpelled to fle backward, and to rayse vp their captayne to the battyll. So whā their captaynes come in to Holofernes paucylyon, and fynde the deed body wrapped in the bloude, fearfulness shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceaue that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shal delyuer them vnto you, to be destroyed.

Then Achior seyng the power of God which he had shewed vnto the people of Israel, fell of from his Heithenish beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcided: and so was he nombred amonge the people of Israel, he and all his posterie vnto this daye.

Now as soone as it was daye, they stickte vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and euery man toke his weapen, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyas sawe that, they ranne vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tēt, came before his chamber, and made a greate russzhinge to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to haue raised him. For there durst not one of the Assirians knocke, go in, ner to open.

But whan the captaynes and prynees and all the chefe in the kynge of the Assirians hoost came together, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the myse are crepte out of their holes, <sup>a</sup> and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll.

Then wente Vagao in to his chamber, stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepyng with Iudith.

But whā he had herkened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceaue no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and lift it vp, and then sawe he the deed body of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, weltred in his bloude vpon the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepyng rent his clothes, and wente in to Iudiths tent, and founde her not: And so he leapte out vnto the people, and sayde: one womā of  $\hat{y}$  Iewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame.

For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpon the grounde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chefe of the assirians hoost herde that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and tremblinge vpon them, so  $\hat{y}$  theyr myndes were sore afrayed. And there was an excedyng greate crye in the whole hoost.

The xv. Chapter.

NOW whan all the hoost herde that Holofernes was headed, their mynde and counsell fell from them: and soch a feare came vpon them, that they vndertoke to defende them selues by flyenge awaye: one spake not to another, but hanged downe their heades, left all behynde them, and made haist to escape from the Hebrues: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapens, and so they fled by the wayes of the felde, and thorow all the fote pathes of the dales.

And whan  $\hat{y}$  children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed vpon them, and wente downe with trōpettes, blowinge and makynge a greate crye after thē. As for the Assirians, they had no ordre, and kepte not thē selues together, but fled their waye. Neuerthelesse the children of Israel fell vpon them with one company and ordre, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messengers vnto all the cities and cōtrees of Israel.

So all the regions and euery cite sent out

their best men after them in harnesse, & smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to y vttemost parte of their borders. And the other that were in Bethulia came in to the tetes of the Assrians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they founde greate good. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them soch thinges as had bene theirs: there was no nōbre of the catell, and of all costly Iewels, so that from the lowest vnto the hiest, they were all made riche of the spoyles of them. And Ioachim the Hye prest at Ierusalem, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might se Iudith.

¶ Now whan she came out vnto them, they beganne all to prayse her with one voyce, sayenge: thou worshipec of the cite of Ierusalem, thou ioye of Israel, thou honoure of oure people, thou hast done manly, and thy hert is comforted, because thou hast loued clenlynnes and chastyte, & hast knowne no man but thine owne huszbande: therfore hath the hāde of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be for euer. And all people sayde: so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarce gather vp the spoyles of the Assrians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clothinge and all ornamentes) they gaue it vnto Iudith. And all the people reioysed, both wemen, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

The xvi. Chapter.

¶ THEN sange Iudith this songe vnto the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LORDE vpon the tabrettes, singe vnto the LORDE vpon the cymbals. O syng vnto him a new songe of thankesgeuyng, be ioyfull and call vpon his name. <sup>a</sup>It is the LORDE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might delyuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stopped the water brokes, <sup>b</sup>and their horses couered the valleys.

He purposed to haue brēt vp my londe, and to slaye my yonge men with the swerde.

He wolde haue caryed away my children and virgins in to captiuyte, but the allmightie LORDE hurte him, and delyuered him in to the handes of a woman, which brought him to confucion. For their nightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Titan that slew him, nether haue the greate giauntes sett them selues agaynst him: but Iudith the daughter of Merari with hir fayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. <sup>a</sup>For she layed awaie hir widdowes garment, and put on the apparell of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of Israel. She anoynted hir face, and bounde vp hir hayre in an houoe, to begyle him. Hir slippers rauyned his eyes, hir bewtye captiuated his mynde, <sup>b</sup>with the swerde smote she of his neck. The Persians were astonnyed at hir stedfastnesse, and the Medes at hir boldnes. Then howled the armyes of y Assrians, whan my symple appeared, drye of thyrst. The sonnes of the daughters haue pearced them thorow, and slayne them as fugityue childre: they perished in the battayll, for the very feare of the LORDE my God. Let us syng a songe of thākesgeuyng vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we syng vnto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greate God, mightie in power, whom no man maye ouercome. All thy creatures shulde serue the, <sup>c</sup>for thou spakest but the worde, & they were made: thou sente thy sprete, & they were created, and no man maye withstonde thy voyce. The mountaynes shal moue from the foundacions with the waters, the stony rockes shal melt before the like waxe. But they that feare the, shal be greate with y in all thinges. Wo vnto the people that ryse vp against my generacion, for the allmightie LORDE wyl auenge him self of them, & in the daye of iudgmēt wyl he vyset them. For he shall geue fyre & wormes in to their flesh, that they maye burne and fele it for euermore.

After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Ierusalem, to geue prayse and thankes vnto the LORDE. And whā they were purified, they offred all their brent sacrifices and their promysed offerynges.

And Iudith offred all Holofernes weapens,<sup>1</sup> and all the Iewels. that y<sup>e</sup> people had geuē her, "and the canapy that she toke from his bed, and hanged them vp vnto the LORDE. The people was ioyfull, as the vse is: ⁊ this ioye by reason of the victory, with Iudith, endureth thre monethes.

So after these dayes euery man wente home agayne, and Iudith was in greate reputacion at Bethulia, and right honorably taken in all the londe of Israel. Vnto hir vertue also was chastite ioyned, so y<sup>e</sup> after hir huszbonde Manasses dyed, she neuer knew man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye solempne dayes she wente out with greate worshipe. She dwelt in hir huszbandes house an hundredreth and fyue yeare, ⁊ left hir honde mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried besyde hir huszbande in Bethulia. And all the people mourned for her seuen dayes. <sup>b</sup> So longe as she lyued, there was none that troubled Israel, and many yeares also after hir death.

The daye wherein this victory was gotten, was solemnly holden, and rekened of the Iewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Iewes euer sence, vnto this daye.

The chapters in the boke of Hester,

Which are not founde in the text of the Hebrue, but in the Greke and Latyn.

The xi. Chapter after the Latyn.

In this chapter is describied the dreame of Mardocheus.

MARDOCHEUS the sonne of Iair, the sonne of Semei, <sup>a</sup> y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Cisei of y<sup>e</sup> trybe of Ben Iamin a Iew: which had his dwellinge in Susis, a man of greate reputaciō, ⁊ excellent amonge all them that were in the kynges courte (Neuerthelesse he was one of the presoners, whom <sup>b</sup>Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilō had caried awaye from Ierusalem vnto Babilon with Iechonias the kyng of Iuda.) In the seconde yeare of the raigne of greate Artaxerses in the first daye of y<sup>e</sup> moneth Nisan. had this Mardocheus soch a dreame: He thought he herde a greate tēpest, horrible thonderclappes, erthquakes, ⁊ greate vprour in y<sup>e</sup> londe: ⁊ y<sup>e</sup> he sawe two greate dragōs, ready to fight one agaist another. Their crye was greate. At the which roaing and crye all Heithen were vp, to fight agaynst y<sup>e</sup> righteous people. And y<sup>e</sup> same daye was full of darcenes ⁊ very vnclaire, full of trouble ⁊ anguysh, yee a greate fearfulness was there in all the londe. The righteous were amased, for they feared y<sup>e</sup> plage ⁊ euell y<sup>e</sup> was deuysed ouer thē, ⁊ were at a poynte with them selues to dye. So they cried vnto God, and while they were cryenge, the litle well grew in to a greate ryuer ⁊ in to many waters. And with y<sup>e</sup> it was daye, ⁊ the sonne rose vp agayne. And y<sup>e</sup> lowly were exalted, and deuoured the glorious and proude.

Now whan Mardocheus had sene this dreame, he awoke, and mused stedfastly in his hert, what God wolde do: and so he desyred to knowe all the matter, and his mynde was there vpon vntyll the night.

The xij. Chapter.

In this chapter is declared, how Mardocheus vttereth the treason of the two scruautes agaynst the kynge, and therefore doth the kynge rewarde him.

AT the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuyce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell "handes vpon the kynge Artaxerses: and so he certified the kinge therof. Then caused the kynge to examen ȝ two gelled with tormentes. And whan they had graunted it, they were put to death.

BThis the kynge caused to be put in ȝ Cronicles for an euerlasting remembraunce, and Mardocheus wrote vp the same matter. So the kynge commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyce in the courte, and for this faithfulnessse of his, he gaue him a rewarde. But Aman the soune of Amadathu the Agagite, which was holden in greate honoure and reputacion in the kynges courte, vnder-toke to hurte Mardocheus ȝ his people, because of the two chamberlaynes that were put to death.

The xiiij. Chapter

The copie of the commaundement, which kige Artaxerses (by the entisinge of Amā) sent out in to all countres, for the destruccion of the Iewes. The prayer of Mardocheus.

THE greate kynge Artaxerses which <sup>a</sup>raigneth from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and seuen and twētye londes, sendeth his frendly salutacion vnto all the prynces and debytes of the countrees, which be subiecte vnto his dominion. Whan I was made lorde ouer many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltye and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed with equitye allwaye and gentylnes, to gouerne those that be vnder my iurisdiction, and wholy to set them in a peaceable life, and therby to brynge my kingdome vnto tranquylite, that men might safely go thorow on euery syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. Now whan I axed my councelers, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellēt in wysdome, whose good wyll, trueth ȝ faithfulnessse hath oft bene shewed ȝ proued (which was also ȝ pryncipall ȝ next vnto ȝ kige) Amā by name, which certified vs, how ȝ in all lōdes there was crepte in a rebellious folke, ȝ made statutes ȝ lawes agaynst all other people, ȝ haue allwaye despyed the proclaimed commaundementes of kynges: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffred, that soch rule shulde contynue by you ȝ not to be put downe. Seinge now we perceaued the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, ȝ withstonde oure statutes and doinges, and go aboute to stablish shrewd matters, that oure kyngdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: Therefore haue we commaunded, that all they that are appoynted in wrytinge and shewed vnto you by Aman (which is ordered and set ouer all oure busynes, and the most pryncipall next vnto the kynge, and in maner as a father) shal with their wiues ȝ children be destroyed and roted out with the swerde of their enemies and aduersaries: ȝ ȝ there shalbe no mercy shewed, ȝ no man spared. And this shalbe done ȝ xiiij. daye of the moneth called Adar) of this yeare, that they which of olde (and now also) haue euer bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the intēt that after this maner, oure empyre maye haue peace and tranquylite.

But Mardocheus thought vpon all the workes and noble actes of ȝ LORDE, ȝ made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE, thou valeaunt and allmightie kynge (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and deluyuer Israel, there is no mā that can withstōde ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen ȝ earth, and what wonderous thinge so euer is vnder the heauen: thou art LORDE of all thinges, and there is no man, ȝ can resist the O LORDE) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORDE, that it was nether of malyce, ner presumpcion, ner for eny desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipec yonder proude presumptuous Aman (for I wolde haue bene cōtent, and ȝ with good wyll, yf it might haue done Israel eny good, to haue kyst euē his fotesteppes) but that I dyd it, because I wolde not sett the honour of a mā in the steade of the glorye of God, and because I wolde worshipe none but onely ŷ my LORDE. And this haue I done in no pryde ner presumption.

¶ And therefore O LORDE thou God and kinge, haue mercy vpon thy people for they ymagyn how they maye bringe vs to naught, yee their mynde and desyre is to destroye and to ouerthrowe the people, that hath euer bene thine enheritaunce of olde. O despyse not thy porciō, which thou hast delyuered & brought out of Egipte for thine owne self. Heare my prayer, and be mercifull vnto thy people, whō thou hast chosen for an heretage vnto thyself. Turne oure complaynte and sorow in to ioye, that we maye lyue O LORDE, and prayse thy name. O LORDE, suffre not ŷ mouthes of them that praise the, to be destroyed.

All ŷ people of Israel in like maner cried as earnestly as they coude vnto the LORDE, for their death and destruccion stode before their eyes.

The xiiiij. Chapter.

Of the sorowe, complaynte and prayer of quene Hester.

¶ QUENE Hester also beyng in the battayll of death, resorted vnto the LORDE, layed awaye hir glorious apparell, and put on the garmētes that serued for sighinge and mournynge. In the steade of precious oymntment, she scatred ashes and dōge vpon hir heade: and as for hir body, she humbled it, and brought it very lowe, All the places where she was wōte to haue ioye afore, those fylled she with ŷ hayre, ŷ she plucte out herself. She prayed also vnto the LORDE God of Israel with these wordes:

O my LORDE, thou onely art oure kynge, helpe me desolate womā, which haue no helper but ŷ, for my misery and destruccion is harde at my hande. Fro my youth vp I haue herde <sup>a</sup>out of the kyured of my father, that thou tokest Israel from amōge all people (and so haue oure fathers of their fore elders) that they shulde be thy perpetuall inheritaunce, and loke what thou didest promise thē, thou hast made it good vnto thē.

Now well LORDE, we haue synned before the, <sup>b</sup>therefore hast thou geuen vs in to the hādes of oure enemies, because we worshipped their goddes. LORDE thou art righteous. Neuertheles it satisfieth thē not, that we are in bytter and heuy captiuyte and oppressed amonge them, but thou hast layed their hondes vpon the hondes of their goddes: so that they begynne to take awaye, the thinge that thou with thy mouth hast ordered and appoynted: to destroye thine inheritaunce, to shut and to stoppe ŷ mouthes of them that prayse the, to quēch the glory and worshipe of thy house and thine aulter, and to open the mouthes of the Heithen, ŷ they maye prayse the power & vertue of the goddes, and to magnifie the fleshly kynge for euer.

O LORDE, geue not thy cepter vnto thē that be nothinge, lest they laugh vs to scorne in oure misery and fall: but turne their deuyce vpō them selues, and punysh him, that hath begonne the same ouer vs, and set him to an example. Thinke vpon vs O LORDE, and shew thy self in ŷ tyme of oure distres and of oure trouble. Strength me O thou kynge of goddes, thou LORDE of all power, geue me an eloquēt and pleasaunt speach in my mouth before the Lyon. Turne his hert in to ŷ hate of oure ennemie, to destroye him, and all such as consent vnto him. But deliyuer vs with thy hande, and helpe me desolate woman, which haue no defence ner helper but onely ŷ. LORDE thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest that I loue not the glory and worshipe of the vnrighteous, and that I hate and abhorre the bed of the vncireūeyded and of all Heithen.

Thou knowest and wotest my necessite, ŷ I hate the token of my preenyuence & worshipe, which I beare vpon my heade, what tyme as I must shew my self and be sene, & that I abhorre it as an vncleane cloth, and that I weere it not whā I am quyetie and alone by my self. Thou knowest also that I thy honde mayden haue not eaten at Amās table, and that I haue had no pleasure ner delyte in the kynges feast, that I haue not dronke the drynkofferinges, and that I thy honde mayden haue had no ioye sens ŷ daie that I was brought hither vnto this daye: but onely in the O LORDE. O thou God of Abraham, O thou mightie God aboute all, heare the voyce of them, that haue none other hope, and delyuer vs out of the hande of y<sup>e</sup> wicked, ⁊ delyuer me out of my feare.

The rb. Chapter.

Quene Hester appeareth before the kynge, with an heuy hert for the trouble of hir people, and God turneth the kynges hert.

AND vpon y<sup>e</sup> thirde daye it happened, that Hester<sup>a</sup> layed away y<sup>e</sup> mournynge garments, and put on hir glorious apparell, and deceit herself goodly (after that she had called vpon God, which is the beholder ⁊ Sauoure of all thinges) toke two maydes with her: vpon the one she leane<sup>d</sup> hir self, as one y<sup>e</sup> was tender: the other folowed her, and bare the trayne of hir vesture. The shyne of hir bewtye made hir face rose coloured. The similitude of hir face was chearfull and amaybe, but hir hert was soroufull for greate feare. She wente in thorow all the dores, and stode before the kynge. The kynge sat vpon the trone of his kingdome, and was clothed in his goodly araye, all of golde, and sett with precious stones, and he was very terrible. He lift vp his face, that shone in the clearnes, and loked grymly vpon her. Then fell the Quene downe, was pale and faynt, leane<sup>d</sup> hir self vpon the heade of the mayde that wente with her.

B Neuertheles God turned y<sup>e</sup> kynges mynde, that he was gentle,<sup>b</sup> that he leape out of his seate for feare, and gat her in his armes, ⁊ helde hir vp tyll she came to herself agayne. He gaue her louynge wordes also, ⁊ sayde vnto her: Hester, what is the matter? I am thy brother, be of good cheare, thou shalt not dye: for oure commaundement toucheth the comons, not the. Come nye. And with that he helde vp his golden wande, and layed it vpon hir neck, and embraced her frendly, and sayde: talke with me. The sayde she: I sawe the<sup>c</sup> (O lorde) as an angell of God, ⁊ my hert was troubled for feare of thy maiesty and clearnesse. For excellent and wonderfull art thou (O lorde) and thy face is full of amyte. But as she was thus speakynge vnto him, she fell downe agayne for fayntnes: for the which cause the kynge was afraied, and all his seruantes comforted her.

The rbi. Chapter.

A cople of the commaundement, which kinge Artaxerses caused to be proclaimed in all the countrees of his domynion, for the wealth of the Iewes.

THE greate kynge Artaxerses, which raigneth fro India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and xxvij. londes, sendeth vnto the prynces ⁊ rulers of the same londes, soch as loue him, his frendly salutation. There be many, that for the sondrye friendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worships, be euer y<sup>e</sup> more proude and hye mynded, and vndertake not onely to hurte oure subiectes (for plenteous benefites maye they not suffre, and begynne to ymagin some thinge agaynst those that do them good, and take not onely all vnthankfulnes awaye fro men) but in pryde and presumpcion (as they that be vnnyndefull and vnthakfull for the good dedes) they go aboute to escape the iudgment of God, y<sup>e</sup> seyth all thinges, which (iudgment) hateth ⁊ punysheth all wickednes. It happeneth oft also, y<sup>e</sup> they which be set in office by the hyer power, and vnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are comytted to be handled, waxe proude, and defyle the selues with sheddynge of innocent bloude, which bringeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceatfull wordes and with lyenge tales, disceau and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

B Now is it profitable and good, that we take hede, make search therafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened vnto vs of olde, but the shamefull, vnhonest, and noysome thinges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before oure eyes: and therby to beware in tyme to come, that we maye make the kyngdome quyet ⁊ peaceable for all men, and that we might some tyme drawe it to a chaunge: and as for y<sup>e</sup> thinge that now is present before oure eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu y<sup>e</sup> Macedonyan<sup>d</sup> (a straunger verely of the Persians bloude, and farre from oure goodnes) was come in amoge vs as an aleaunt, and had optayned the friendship that we beare towarde all people, so that he was called oure father, and had in hys honoure of euery man, as the next and pryncipall vnto the kyng, he coude not forbear him self from his pryde, hath vndertaken not onely to robbe vs of the kyngdome, but of oure life.

With manyfolde disceate also hath he desyred to destroye Mardocheus oure helper and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thinges: and innocent Hester the like partaker of oure kyngdome, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had takē them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meanes to translate the kyngdome of the Persians vnto thē of Macedonia. But we fynde, that the Iewes (which were accused of ſ wicked, ſ they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable & right lawes, and that they be the children of the most Hye Iuyng God, by whom the kyngdome of vs and oure progenitours hath bene well ordred hither to. Wherefore, as for the letters and cōmaundementes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, yf ye holde them of none effecte: for he that set them vp and inuented thē, hangeth at Susis before the porte, with all his kinred, and God (which hath all thinges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deseruyng.

And vpon this ye shal publish and set vp the copy of this letter in all places, that the Iewes maye frely and without hinderance holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpō ſ xiiij. daye of ſ xij. moneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their anguysh and trouble wolde haue oppressed thē. For the God that gouerneth all thinges, hath turned to ioye, the daye wherin ſ chosen people shulde haue perished.

Morouer, amōge the hys solempne dayes that ye haue, ye shall holde this daye also with all gladnesse: that now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraūce to good, for all soch as loue the prosperite of the Persians: but a remembraunce of destruccion to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lōdes that do not this, shal horribly perish and be destroyed with the swerde and fyre, and shall not onely be nomore inhabited of men, but be abhorred also of ſ wilde beastes & foules.

The boke of Wysdome.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

An exortaciō for iudges and rulers to loue wysdome. The sprete of wysdome hateth falsede, dissimulacion and Ypocrysie, rebuketh vnrighteousnesse and abhorreth wicked doers.

Chap. II.

The ymaginaciōs and thoughtes of the vngodly, how they geue the selues ouer vnto synne, and persecute all vertue and trueth.

Chap. III.

The felicity and health of godly people, though they be put here to trouble and heynesse: Agayne, what sorow shall happen to the vngodly and their children.

Chap. IIII.

To lyue chaist & godly withall, is cōmendable. A dispraise of the wicked. The honoure of verteous age. The shamefull death of the vngodly.

Chap. V.

How the iust men shal stōde against the wicked, that haue put them here to trouble & what sorowe shall come vpon the vngodly. Agayne, what ioye shal happen to the righteous, which haue God himself for their defece.

Chap. VI.

An exortacion vnto such as be in rule and auctoryte, to receaue wysdome. A commendacion of wysdome.

Chap. VII.

All men haue like intraiue in to the worlde: yet who so calleth vpon God for wysdome, shal haue his desyre. The profit that cōmeth by wysdome passeth all other thinges.

Chap. VIII.

Wisdome shulde be receaued in youth. He that marieth himself vnto her, shall optayne loue of God and men.

Chap. IX.

A prayer vnto God for the gift of wysdome.

Chap. X.

What profit and good came by wysdome in the olde tyme.

Chap. XI.

How wysdome ledeth the righteous, & how the vngodly are punyshed thorow the mightie hande of God.

Chap. XII.

God is mercifull and suffreth longe, to the intent that synners shulde amende.

Chap. XIII.

Vayne are they that haue not the knowlege of the Iyuyng God, but turne vnto the creatures: vnhappie are they that honoure ymages.

Chap. XIIIII.

The worshippinge of ymages. The power of God. Punyshment of them that make ymages, and of such as worshipec them. How ymages came vp first. The honouringe of ymages is the cause, begynnyng, and ende of all myschefe.

Chap. XV.

The faithfull haue respecte vnto God and not vnto ymages.

Chap. XVI.

God punisheth the wicked, but defendeth the godly, & that by greate wonders.

Chap. XVII.

Of the greate darcknesse in Egipte, and blyndnesse of the vngodly.

Chap. XVIII.

How God destroyed the firstborne of Egipte. Gods people eate the easter lambe ioyfully, the Egiptians mourne. God punysheth the synners in the wilderness. Moses intreateth for the people.

Chap. XIX.

Like as the wicked are euer synnyng more and more, so doth the wrath of God neuer cease, tyll they be destroyed. Of them that were punyshed in the tyme of Loth.

The first Chapter.

A O SET youre affection vpo wysdome, ye that be iudges of the earth.<sup>a</sup> Haue a good opinion of the LORDE,  $\tau$  seke him in the synglenesse of hert. <sup>b</sup> For he will be fonde of them that tempte him not, and appeareth vnto such as put their trust in him. As for frowarde thoughtes, they separate from God, but vertue (yf it be alowed,) reformeth  $\bar{y}$  vnwyse. And why? wysdome shall not entre in to a frowarde soule, ner dwell in the body that is subdued vnto synne. For the holy goost abhorreth fayned nourtoure,  $\tau$  withdraweth himself frō  $\bar{y}$  thoughtes that are without vnderstandinge:  $\tau$  where wickednes hath the vpper hāde, he fleth from thence. <sup>c</sup> For the sprete of wysdome is louynge, gentle and gracious, and wil haue no pleasure in him that speaketh euell with his lippes. For God is a witness of his reynes, a true searcher out of his hert, and an hearer of his tonge. <sup>d</sup> For the sprete of  $\bar{y}$  LORDE fylleth the rounde compasse of the worlde, and  $\bar{y}$  same that vpboldeth all thinges, hath knowlege also of the voyce.

B Therefore he that speaketh vnrighteous thinges, can not be hydd, nether maye he escape the iudgmēt of reprove. And why? inquisicion shal be made for the thoughtes of the vngodly, and the reporte of his wordes shal come vnto God, so that his wickednes shalbe punished. For the care of gelousy heareth all thinges, and the noyse of the grudgings shal not be hydd. Therefore beware of murmuringe, which is nothinge worth, and refrayne youre tonge from slauder. <sup>e</sup> For there is no worde so darck and secrete, that it shall go for naught: and the mouth that speaketh lyes, slayeth the soule.

C <sup>f</sup> O seke not youre owne death in  $\bar{y}$  erreure of youre life, destroye not youre selues thorow the workes of youre owne handes. For God hath not made death, nether hath he pleasure in the destruccion of the luynges. For he created all thinges, that they might haue their beyuge: yee all the people of the earth hath he made that they shulde haue health, that there shulde be no destruccion in them, and that the kyngdome of hell shulde not be vpon earth (for righteousnesse is euerlastinge and immortall, but vnrighteousnes bringeth death.) Neuerthelesse, the vngodly call her vnto them both with wordes  $\tau$  workes,  $\tau$  whyle they thinke to haue a frende of her, they come to naught: for the vngodly that are confederate with her and take hir parte, are worthy of death.

The ij. Chapter.

FOR  $\bar{y}$  vngodly talke  $\tau$  ymagin thus amoung them selues (but not right:) <sup>a</sup> The tyme of oure life is but short  $\tau$  tedious.  $\tau$  when a man is once gone, he hath nomore ioye ner pleasure, nether knowe we eny man  $\bar{y}$  turneth agayne from death: for we are borne of naught,  $\tau$  we shal be hereafter as though we had neuer bene. For oure breth is as a smoke in oure nostrels,  $\tau$   $\bar{y}$  wordes as a sparck to moue oure herte. As for oure body, it shalbe very aszshes  $\bar{y}$  are quēched,  $\tau$  oure soule shal vanish as  $\bar{y}$  soft ayre. Oure life shall passe awaye as  $\bar{y}$  trace of a cloude,  $\tau$  come to naught as  $\bar{y}$  myst  $\bar{y}$  is dryuē awaye with the beames of  $\bar{y}$  Sonne,  $\tau$  put downe with the heate therof. Oure name also shalbe forgotten by litle  $\tau$  litle,  $\tau$  no man shal haue oure workes in remembraunce.

For oure tyme is a very shadow  $\bar{y}$  passeth awaye, <sup>b</sup> and after oure ende there is no returnynge, for it is fast sealed, so  $\bar{y}$  no mā cōmeth agayne. Come on therefore, let vs enioye  $\bar{y}$  pleasures  $\bar{y}$  there are,  $\tau$  let vs soone vse  $\bar{y}$  creature like as in youth. We wil fyll oure selues with good wyne  $\tau$  oymntment, there shal no floure of the tyme go by vs. We wil crowne oure selues with roses afore they be wythered. There shal be no fayre medowe, but oure lust shal go thorow it. Let euery one of you be partaker of oure voluptuousnes. Let vs leaue some token of oure pleasure in euery place, for  $\bar{y}$  is oure porcion, els gett we nothinge. Let vs oppress the poore righteous, let vs not spare the wyddowe ner olde man, let vs not regarde  $\bar{y}$  heades  $\bar{y}$  are gray for age. Let  $\bar{y}$  lawe of vnrighteousnesse be oure auctorite, for  $\bar{y}$  thinge  $\bar{y}$  is feble is no thinge worth. Therefore let vs defraude the righteous,  $\tau$  why? he is not for oure profit, yee he is cleane cōtrary to oure doings. He checketh vs for offendinge agaynst  $\bar{y}$  lawe,  $\tau$ slaundreth vs as transgressours of all nurtoure. He maketh his boost to haue  $\hat{y}$  knowlege of God, yee he calleth him self Gods sonne. He is the bewrayer of our thoughtes: <sup>a</sup> It greueth vs also to loke vpon him, for his lyfe is not lyke other mens, his wayes are of another fashion. He counteth vs but vayne personnes, he withdraweth him self from oure wayes as from fylthyues: he comendeth greatly  $\hat{y}$  latter ende of the iust,  $\tau$  maketh his boast  $\hat{y}$  God is his father. Let vs se then yf his wordes be true, let vs proue what shal come vpon him: so shal we knowe what ende he shal haue. For yf he be  $\hat{y}$  true sonne of God, <sup>b</sup> he will receaue him  $\tau$  delyuer him from the handes of his enemies. Let vs examen him with despitefull rebuke and tormentinge, that we maye knowe his dignite  $\tau$  proue his pacience. <sup>c</sup> Let vs condemne him with the most shamefull death: for like as he hath spoken, so shal he be rewarded.

Soch thinges do the vngodly ymagyn.  $\tau$  go astraye, for their owne wickednes hath bynded them. As for the misteries of God, they vnderstonde them not: they nether hope for the rewarde of righteousnesse, ner regarde the worships that holy soules shal haue. For God created man to be vndestroied, yee <sup>d</sup> after the ymage of his awne licknesse made he him. <sup>e</sup> Neuerthelesse thorow enuye of the deuell came death in to the worlde, <sup>f</sup> and they that holde of his syde, do as he doth.

The iij. Chapter.

BUT the soules of  $\hat{y}$  righteous are in  $\hat{y}$  hande of God, <sup>g</sup>  $\tau$   $\hat{y}$  payne of death shal not touch thē. <sup>h</sup> In  $\hat{y}$  sight of  $\hat{y}$  vnwyse they appeare to dye,  $\tau$  their ende is takē for very destruccion. The waye of the righteous is iudged to be vtter destruccion, but they are in rest. And though they suffre payne before men, <sup>i</sup> yet is their hope full of immortallite. They are punished but in few thinges, neuerthelesse in many thinges shal they be well rewarded. For God proueth them,  $\tau$  fyndeth thē mete for himself: yee as the golde in the fornace doth he trye them,  $\tau$  receaueth them as a brentofferinge, and when  $\hat{y}$  tyme commeth they shalbe looked vpon.

The righteous shal shyne as the sparkes  $\hat{y}$  renne thorow the rede buszshe. <sup>k</sup> They shal iudge the nacions,  $\tau$  haue dominion ouer  $\hat{y}$  people,  $\tau$  their LORDE shal raigne for euer. They  $\hat{y}$  put their trust in him, shal vnderstonde the trueth, and soch as be faithfull, wil agree vnto him in loue: for his chosen shal haue giftes  $\tau$  peace. <sup>l</sup> But the vngodly shalbe punyshed accordinge to their awne ymaginacions, for they haue despyed the righteous,  $\tau$  forsaken the LORDE.

Who so despyseth wysdome  $\tau$  nurtoure, he is vnhappye, and as for the hope of soch, it is but vayne, their labours vnfrutefull, and their workes vnprofitable. Their wyues are vndiscrete, and their childrē most vngodly. Their creature is cursed. Blessed is rather  $\hat{y}$  baren  $\tau$  vndefyled, which hath not knowen the synfull bedd: she shal haue frute in the rewarde of the holy soules. And blessed is  $\hat{y}$  gelded, <sup>m</sup> which with his handes hath wrought no vnrighteousnesse, ner ymagined wicked thinges agaynst God. For vnto him shal be geuen  $\hat{y}$  speciall gift of faith, and the most acceptable porcion in  $\hat{y}$  temple of God. For glorious is the frute of good labour,  $\tau$  the rote of wysdome shall neuer fade awaye. As for  $\hat{y}$  childrē of aduouters, they shal come to an ende  $\tau$  the sede of an vnrighteous bedd shal be rote out. And though they lyue lōge, yet shal they be nothinge regarded,  $\tau$  their last age shalbe without honoure. Yf they dye haistely, they haue no hope, nether shal they be spoken to in the daye of knowlege. For horrible is the death and ende of the vnrighteous.

thorow the vehemence of the wynde they shalbe roted out. For the vnperfecte braunches shalbe broken, their frute shalbe vnprofitable & sower to eate, yee mete for nothinge. And why? all the children  $\hat{y}$  are borne of the wicked, must beare recorde of the wickednesse agaynst their fathers & mothers, when they be axed. But though the righteous be ouertaken with death, yet shal he be in rest.

B Age is an honorable thinge: neuertheles it stondesth not only in the leneth of tyme, ner in the multitude of yeares: but a mans wysdome is the graye hayre, and an vndeified life is the olde age. He pleased God, & was beloued of him: so that where as he lyued amoge synners, he traslated him. Yee sodclly was he taken awaye, to the intent  $\hat{y}$  wickednesse shulde not alter his vnderstodinge, &  $\hat{y}$  yporisyse shulde not begyle his soule. For  $\hat{y}$  craftie bewitchinge of lyes make good thinges darck,  $\hat{y}$  vnstedfastnesse also & wickednes of voluptions desyre, turne asyde  $\hat{y}$  vnderstodinge of  $\hat{y}$  symple. Though he was soone deed, yet fulfilled he moch tyme. For his soule pleased God, therefore haisted he to take him awaye fro amonge  $\hat{y}$  wicked. This the people se, & vnderstode it not: they laye not vp soch thinges in their hertes, how  $\hat{y}$   $\hat{y}$  louynge fauoure & mercy of God is vpō his saintes, &  $\hat{y}$  he hath respecte vnto his chosen.

C Thus  $\hat{y}$  righteous  $\hat{y}$  is deed, cōdemneth the vngodly which are luyinge: &  $\hat{y}$  youth  $\hat{y}$  is soone brought to an ende,  $\hat{y}$  lōge life of  $\hat{y}$  vnrightheous. For they se  $\hat{y}$  ende of  $\hat{y}$  wyse, but they vnderstode not what God hath deuysed for him, & wherfore  $\hat{y}$  LORDE hath taken him a waie. And why? they se him & despise him, therefore shall God also laugh thē to scorn: So  $\hat{y}$  they thē selues shal dye here after (but without honoure) yee in shame amonge  $\hat{y}$  deed for euermore. For without eny voyce shal he burst those  $\hat{y}$  be puft vp, & remoue thē fro  $\hat{y}$  foundacions, so  $\hat{y}$  they shalbe laied waist vnto the hiest. They shal mourne, and their memoriall shall perishe. So they beyng afraied shall remembre their synnes, and their owne wickednesse shal bewraye thē.

The b. Chapter.

A THEN shal  $\hat{y}$  righteous stonde in greate stedfastnesse<sup>a</sup> agaynst soch as haue dealt extremely with thē, & takē awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe vexed with horrible feare, & shal wonder at the haistynesse of  $\hat{y}$  sodane health: groninge for very distresse of mynde, & shall saye within them selues (hauynge inwarde sorow, and mournynge for very anguysch of mynde):

These are they, whom we somtyme had in derision, & iested vpō. We foolles thought their life very madnesse, & their ende to be without honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the children of God, & their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therefore we haue erred from the waye of trueth,  $\hat{y}$  light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sone of vnderstodinge rose not vp vpō vs. We haue weered oure selues in  $\hat{y}$  waye of wickednesse & destruccion. Tedious wayes haue we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we haue not knowne it.

What good hath oure pryde done vnto vs? B Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? <sup>B</sup> All those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, & as a messaunger renynge before: as a shippe  $\hat{y}$  passeth ouer the wawes of the water, which whan it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, nether  $\hat{y}$  path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde  $\hat{y}$  flyeth thorow  $\hat{y}$  ayre, & no man can se eny token where she is flowne, but only heareth the noyse of hir wynges, beatinge the light wynde, partinge the ayre thorow the vehemēce of hir goynge, & flyeth on shakynge hir wynges, where as afterwarde no tokē of hir waye can be foude. Or like as whē an arowe is shott at a marck, it parteth the ayre, which immediatly cōmeth together agayne, so that a man can not knowe where it wente thorow. Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, beganne immediatly to drawe to oure ende: & haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

Soch wordes shal they that haue synned, C speake in the hell: for the hope of the vngodly is like<sup>a</sup> a drye thistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye with the wynde: like as thynne scommē  $\hat{y}$  is scatred abrode with the storme: like as  $\hat{y}$  smoke which is dispersed here & there with the wynde, & as  $\hat{y}$  remembrance of a straüger<sup>a</sup>  $\hat{y}$  tarieth for a daie, & thē departeth.

But  $\hat{y}$  righteous shal lyue for euermore:

their rewarde also is with the LORDE, ⁊ their remembrance with the Hyest. Therefore shal they receaue a glorious kyngdome ⁊ a beutifull crowne of the LORDES bande: for with his right hande shal he coner thē, ⁊ with his owne arme shall he defende thē. His gelousy also shal take awaye the harnesse, and he shal wape fō creature to be aūged of fō enemies. He shal put on "righteousnes for a brest plate, ⁊ take sure iudgment in steade of an helmet. The invincible shyld of equite shall he take, his cruell wrath shal he sharpē for a speare, ⁊ the whole compase of the worlde shall fight with him agaynst the vnwyse.

¶ Thē shal the thunder boltes go out of fō lighteninges, ⁊ come out of the rayne bowe of the cloudes to the place apoynted: out of the hard stony indignacion there shall fall thick hailes, ⁊ fō water of fō see shal be wroth agaynst thē, ⁊ the floudes shal renne roughly together. Yee a mightie wynde shal stōde vp agaynst them, ⁊ a storme shall scatter thē abroad. Thus the vnrighteous dealing of thē shal bringe all the lōde to a wyldernes, ⁊ wickednes shall ouerthrowe the dwellings of the mightie.

The vi. Chapter.

¶ WYSZDOME is better then strength,<sup>a</sup> ⁊ a mā of vnderstādinge is more worth thē one fō strōge. Heare therefore (O ye kinges) ⁊ vnderstonde: O lerne ye fō be iudges of the endes of the earth. Geue eare ye fō rule fō multitudes, ⁊ delite in moch people. For the power is geueū you of the LORDE,<sup>c</sup> ⁊ the strēgth from the Hyest: which shal trie youre workes and search out youre ymaginaciōs: How that ye beyng officers of his kyngdome, haue not executed true iudgment, haue not kepte the lawe of righteousness, ner walked after his will. Horribly ⁊ that right soone shall he appeare vnto you: for an harde iudgmēt shal they haue fō beare rule. Mercy is graited vnto the symple,<sup>d</sup> but they that be in auctorite shalbe sore punyshed. For God which is LORDE ouer all, shall excepte no mā persone, nether shal he stande in awe of eny mans greatnesse: for he hath made fō small and greate, ⁊ careth for all alyke. But the mightie shal haue fō sorer punyshmēt.

Vnto you therefore (o ye kinges) do I speake, fō ye maye lerne wyszdome and not go amysse:

for they fō kepe righteousness shalbe righteously iudged: and they fō are lerned in righteous thinges, shal finde to make answere. Wherefore set youre lust vpon my wordes, ⁊ loue thē, so shal ye come by nourtoure. Wyszdome is a noble thinge, ⁊ neuer faydeth awaie: yee she is easely sene of thē that loue her, ⁊ founde of soch as seke her. She preuēteth them fō desyre her, fō she maye first shewe herself vnto thē. Who so awaketh vnto her by tymes, shal haue no greate trauaile, for he shal fynde her syttinge ready at his dores. To thinke vpon her, is perfecte vnderstandinge: ⁊ who so watcheth for her, shalbe safe, ⁊ that soone. For she goeth aboute, sekyng soch as are mete for her, sheweth her self cherefully vnto them in their goynges, ⁊ meteth them with all diligēce. For fō vnfained desyre of reformation is hir begynnynge: to care for nourtoure is loue, and<sup>c</sup> loue is the keepinge of hir lawes. Now the keepinge of fō lawes is perfection ⁊ an vn corrupte life, ⁊ an vn corrupte life maketh a man familer with God. And so the desyre of wyszdome ledeth to fō kyngdome euerlastinge. If youre delyte be thē in royall seates ⁊ cepters (o ye kynes of the people)<sup>e</sup> set youre lust vpō wyszdome, fō ye maye raigne for euer more. O loue the light of wyszdome, all ye fō be rulers of the people. As for wyszdome, what she is, and how she came vp, I will tell you, and will not hyde the misteries of God from you: but wil seke her out from fō begynnynge of the natiuite, and brynge the knowlege of her in to light, and wil not kepe back the trueth. Nether will I haue to do with cōsumynge envye, for soch a man shal not be partaker of wyszdome. But the multitude of the wyse is the welfare of the worlde, and a wyse kynge is the vpholdinge of the people. O receaue nourtoure then thorow my wordes, and it shal do you good.

The vii. Chapter.

I MYSELF also am a mortall man, like as<sup>a</sup> all other, ⁊ am come of fō earthly generaciō of him fō was first made, ⁊ in my mothers wōbe<sup>c</sup> was I fashioned to be flesh: In the tyme of ten monethes was I brought together in blonde thorow the sede of man, ⁊ the cōmodious appetite of slepe. Whan I was borne, I receaued like ayre as other men, τ fell vpon the earth (which is my nature) crienge τ wepinge at the first, as all other do. I was wrappd in swadlinge clothes, τ brought vp with greate cares. For there is no kinge ŷ hath had eny other begynnyng of byrth.<sup>a</sup> All men then haue one intraunce vnto life, τ one goinge out in like maner.

B Wherfore I desyred, and vnderstandinge was geuē me: I called, τ the sprete of wysz-dome came in to me. I set more by her thē by kingdomes τ royall seates, τ counted riches nothinge in cōparison of her.<sup>b</sup> As for precious stone I compared it not vnto her: for all golde is but grauell vnto her, τ syluer shal be counted but claye before hir sight. I loued her aboue wel fare τ beutie, τ purposed to take her for my light, for hir shyne can not be quenched.<sup>c</sup> All good thinges came to me with her, τ innumerable riches thorow hir hādes. I was glad in thē all, for this wysz-dome wēte before me, τ I knew not ŷ she is the mother of all good thinges. Now as I myself lerned vnfaignedly, so do I make other men partakers of her, τ hyde her riches from no man: for she is an infinite treasure vnto men, which who so vse, become partakers of the loue τ frendshipe of God, and are accepted vnto him for the giftes of wyszdome.

C God hath graunted me to talke wysely, τ conueniēti to hādle the thinges ŷ he hath graciously lent me. For it is he, ŷ ledeth vnto wyszdome, τ teacheth to vse wyszdome aright.<sup>d</sup> In his hāde are we τ oure wordes: yee all oure wyszdome, oure vnderstandinge τ knowlege of all oure workes. For he hath geuē me ŷ true sciēce of these thinges: so that I knowe how ŷ worlde was made, τ the powers of ŷ elemētes: ŷ begynnyng, endinge τ myddest of ŷ tymes: how the tymes alter, how one goeth after another, and how they are fulfilled: ŷ course of the yeaere: the ordinaunces of the starres: the natures τ kindes of beastes: the furiosnesse of beastes: the power of ŷ wyndes: the ymaginacions of mē: the deuersities of yonge plantes: the vertues of rootes, τ all soch thinges as are secrete τ not loked for, hane I lerned. For the work-master of all thinges hath taught me wysz-dome. In hir is ŷ sprete of vnderstādinge, which is holy, manifolde, one onely, sotyll, courteous, discrete, quyk, vndefyled, playne, swete, louyng the thinge ŷ is good, sharpe, which forbyddeth not to do well, gētle, kynde, stedfast, sure, fre: hauyng all vertues, eir-cūspete in allthinges: receauinge all spretes of vnderstādinge beige cleane τ sharpe. For wiszdome is neemler thē all neēble thiges: she goeth thorow τ attayneth to all thiges, because of hir clemens. For she is ŷ breth of ŷ power of God, τ a pure cleane expressinge of ŷ clearnes of Allmightie God. Therefore can no vndefyled thinge come in to her: for she is ŷ bryghtnes of ŷ euerlastige light, ŷ vndefyled myrroure of ŷ maiesty of God, τ ŷ ymage of his goodness. And for so much as she is one, she maie do all thinges: τ beinge stedfast herself she renueth all, τ amōge ŷ people cōveyeth she herself in to ŷ holy soules. She maketh Gods freundes τ prophetes: for God loueth no mā, but him in whō wyszdome dwelleth. For she is more beutyfull then the Sonne, and geueth more light then the starres, and the daye is not to be cōpared vnto her: for vpō ŷ daye cōmeth night. But wickednesse can not ouercome wyszdome, and foolishnes maye not be with her.

The viij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME reacheth frō one ende to another mightely, τ louigly doth she ordre all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her euē fro my youth vp: I dyd my diligēce to mary my self with her, soch loue had I vnto hir beutie. Who so hath ŷ cōpany of God, cōmēdeth hir nobilyte, yee the LORDE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is ŷ scolemastresse of ŷ nurtoure of God, τ ŷ choser out of his workes. Yf a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wiszdome, ŷ worketh all thiges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstādinge worketh. What is it amōge all thinges, ŷ worketh more thē wyszdome? Yf a man loue vertue τ righteousnes, let him labour for wyszdome, for she hath greate vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes τ prudence, righteousnes τ strēgth, which are soch thinges as mē can haue nothinge more profitable in their life. Yf a mā desyre moch knowlege, she cā tell ŷ thinges ŷ are past, τ discern things for to come: she knoweth ŷ sotilities of wordes, τ cā expōide darke sentēces. She can tell of tokēs τ wōderous thinges, or euer they come to passe, τ the endes of all tymes ⁊ ages. So I purposed after this maner: I will take her vnto my cōpany, ⁊ comō lougly with her: no doute she shal geue me good counsell, ⁊ speake cōfortably vnto me in my carefulness ⁊ grefe. For hir sake shal I be well and honestly taken amōge the comōs ⁊ lordes of ⁊ counceill. Though I be yonge, yet shal I haue sharpe vnderstandinge: so ⁊ I shal be maruelous in ⁊ sight of greate mē, ⁊ ⁊ faces of prynces shal wōder at me. Whā I holde my tōge, they shal byde my leysure:<sup>a</sup> whā I speake, they shal loke vpō me: ⁊ yf I talke moche, they shal laye their handes vpō their mouth. Moreover, by the meanes of her I shal optayne immortallite, and leaue behinde me an euerlastyng memoriall, amōge thē ⁊ come after me. I shal set ⁊ people in ordre, and the naciōs shalbe subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrauntes shal be afrayed, whan they do but heare of me: amōge the multitude I shal be counted good, ⁊ mightie in battayll. Whā I come home, I shal fynde rest with her: for hir cōpany hath no bytternes, ⁊ hir felashipe hath no tediousnesse, but myrth ⁊ ioye.

¶ Now whan I cōsidered these thynges by myself, ⁊ pondered them in my hert, how ⁊ to be ioyned vnto wysdome is immortallite, ⁊ greate pleasure to haue hir frendshipe: how ⁊ in the workes of hir handes are infinite riches: how that, who so kepeth company with her shalbe wyse: and that he which talketh with her, shal come to honoure: I wente aboute sekyng, to gett her vnto me. For I was a ladd of a rype wytt, and had a good vnderstandinge.

But whan I grewe to more vnderstādyng, I came to an vndefyled body. Neuertheles whan I perceained that I coude not kepe myself chaist, excepte God gaue it me (⁊ ⁊ was a poynte of wysdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I stepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole hert I sayde after this maner:

The ix. Chapter.

¶ GOD of my fathers, ⁊ LORDE of mercies, (thou ⁊ hast made<sup>b</sup> all thynges with thy worde, ⁊ ordeyned mā thorow thy wysdome, ⁊ he shulde haue dominio<sup>c</sup> ouer ⁊ creature, which thou hast made: ⁊ he shulde ordre ⁊ worlde acordinge to equite ⁊ righteousness, ⁊ execute iudgmēt with a true hert) geue me wysdome, which is euer aboute thy seate, ⁊ put me not out frō amōge thy children: for I thy seruau<sup>d</sup>nt ⁊ sōme of thy handmayden,<sup>e</sup> am a feble personne, of a shorte tyme, and to yōge to the vnderstandinge of iudgment and ⁊ lawes. And though a man be neuer so perfecte amōge the children of men, yet yf thy wysdome be not with him, he shal be nothinge regarded. <sup>f</sup>But thou hast chosen me to be a kynge vnto thy people, and the iudge of thy sonnes and daughters.
